There is no reason why American vessels plying between the port of New York and any foreign port should not receive equal compensation to that paid to coastwise steamers between two different ports of this country for carrying the mail. When you remember that the coastwise trade is further protected by your navigation laws, that foreign competition is impossible, it is unwise and wrong not to pay those engaged in the foreign trade, where there is competition, fair compensation for the services rendered.

What should that compensation be? We have provided by this bill that it shall be thrown open to competition to every American. Whoever establishes a line shall have a right to contract with the Postmaster-General at $1 a mile for carrying the United States mail. It is not confined to Mr. Roach or to any single individual, but open to any citizen of the United States who has the capital, skill, and courage to build and operate a steamship line. I am convinced from a personal, careful consideration, and the best information I have been able to obtain from those who are engaged in an earnest effort to build up a merchant marine, that if compensation equal to that fixed in this bill is provided, you would have lines running not only from New York and Baltimore, but from various southern ports to all the principal South American ports within five years, notwithstanding all the restrictions and unjust charges imposed by the laws as they now stand.

It is within my knowledge that enterprising ship-builders have offered to construct and run a first-class line of ships between Baltimore and Brazil if an amount equal to about what this bill provides for mail service could be guaranteed by the merchants of Baltimore. Remove the burdens, pay fair compensation for carrying the mails, and three years will not elapse before we will have a regular line from Baltimore to Brazil, and that immense trade which once existed restored.

By this bill we simply propose to give about one-half the compensation that a British ship receives for carrying the mails for the British Government, and the gross amount is restricted to the paltry sum of the total receipts from the foreign mail service, which is nearly $1,300,000. I submit to even my friend from Kentucky, who referred to this clause as a subsidy, if he will give it that careful examination which is his custom, he will find that this so far from being a subsidy is simply a plain business proposition, and under it the American vessel carrying our mail on the ocean will receive far less compensation than he and I have year after year voted to pay for carrying the mails upon the railroads, or steamers navigating the rivers and bays, and by stage-coaches within the limits of the United States.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to ask my friend from Maryland whether if the amount of compensation—leaving out the modus and coming to the amount—for the carriage of letters from the United States to foreign countries can be compared with the amount granted for the carriage of mails in the coastwise service?

Mr. GORMAN. My information is that the American ship on the lines I have named, plying between this country and foreign ports, receive about 2½ cents per mile run, and the coastwise service about 57 cents per mile run.

Mr. BAYARD. Is there not a limitation as to the total compensation; that it shall not exceed a certain amount?

Mr. GORMAN. The provision of the bill is:

> And the aggregate amount to be expended for such service shall not exceed the gross revenues of the Post-Office Department of the United States on mail matter sent to and received from foreign countries during the fiscal year next preceding the year in which such contracts are made, less the amount paid for transportation on foreign vessels and the net amount paid foreign administrations for intermediary, territorial, and sea transit of such mails.

Which amounts to about $1,300,000 per annum.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I had not expected to say anything in regard to this matter. I have been quietly endeavoring to ascertain what is proper and right in regard to mail-pay, but as the honorable Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has referred to me and to my views, I am obliged to say to him and to the Senate that in my judgment there is a very pronounced difference between foreign mail service and mails carried by our coastwise vessels, and it consists in this: a ship carrying letters from New York to Brazil does not stop or need not stop until she gets to Rio. Steamers in that trade carry the Brazilian mail now, and all that was paid last year was some $1,800. I have never heard that anybody was suffering because he did not get his mail to or from Brazil. I have never heard that it has become imperatively necessary for the Senate or the House of Representatives to be exercising themselves in endeavors to devise ways and means for people to get their mails to or from Brazil more rapidly or better than they do now.

But in regard to our own coastwise mail facilities different relations exist. Although a ship may have no business at any point for one hundred miles along her line she has to call every few miles wherever there is a post-office that in the judgment of the Post-Office Department can be better supplied from the ships in the coastwise trade than it can by a railroad which may be one hundred miles off or by the star-route service. The coasting vessel carries the mail to the towns and villages on the borders of the lakes, rivers, or bays that she passes on her route, and she has to stop and deliver those mails for the people residing there, and, as I said the other day, she must do this work in fog, rain, or storm, whether she has trade or passenger for any of these points or not, and her mail-pay is docked every time she does not deliver her mails on time.

That service is supplying the people of the United States with their mails. It is a part of the coasting ship's business and she receives proper pay for it. Is there not a great difference between supplying post-offices along the bays, along the coast, along the rivers, along the lakes, whether the ship has passengers for those points or not, thus supplying the mails of the United States to the people of the United States, and sending mail matter by a ship sailing from New York to Brazil laden with other freight, with perhaps one hundred letters, which does not have to stop at all till she reaches her destination, without delay or extra expense, because of the mail she has on board?

Yet it is sought to make the compensation of the one correspond with the compensation paid to the other according to distance only. It is, I admit, a very ingenious mode of stating the proposition, and yet when it is fairly considered the comparison fails. If the ship going to Brazil had to stop every few miles to deliver mails to people of the United States, as ships in the coastwise trade do, 10 cents a mile perhaps would not compensate her for the service she was rendering or the expense and delay caused by the service. But mails to Brazil and mails along the coast of the United States at every post-office established within reach of the coastwise line must certainly strike every man as being two very different things; there can be no analogy or comparison by reason merely of the miles run as to the amount they ought to receive.

Besides, this proposition is not compensation to the men who carry the mails. That is evidently not intended as the main purpose. If that was the sole object, you would say to the men who carry the mails, "We will pay you for mail service to Brazil and elsewhere, and you may carry it any way you can. We desire to get the mail delivered promptly; that is all we care about." We do not say that "We will not pay you the money unless you go to one of three or four men who are building ships on the Delaware or on the Hudson and pay them $100,000 more for the ship you are to carry the mail in than you can get the same ship for elsewhere." The Senator from Maryland seems to think, as his vote yesterday indicated, that that was a very necessary thing to do as part of this mail business.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me in that connection to say that under the amendment I had the honor to offer the compensation allowed the foreign mail service is fully equal to that paid to-day?

Mr. BECK. I do not understand the details very well. The Senator from New Jersey may speak in regard to that. I can not, because I am not fully advised as to the facts. But if this is a proposition simply for mails, why connect a proposition to pay for necessary mails with the obligation to require the man who carries them to pay say 40 per cent. more for the vehicle he carries them in than he is offered that vehicle for elsewhere? I should like the Senator from Maryland to answer me that question, and I hope he will. If it is not a subsidy to the ship-builder, if it is not made an imperative necessity on the man who carries the mail to buy the ship from a particular man or from one of three or four men, why insert that provision? And if it is and that is part of the system, why not say so and call it by its right name? So far as you require the man who carries the mail to pay 40 per cent. more for the ship to carry it in than he can buy it for elsewhere, it is a subsidy to the man who builds the ship, because the carrier can not carry the mail and can not get the money you propose to give unless he does pay that 40 per cent. more to the American ship-builder. If that is not true, I should like to be advised. I will yield to any Senator to answer the question.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The statement of the Senator is that there is a difference of 40 per cent. I simply want to correct him in his statement. Certainly if he has listened to the words of the Senator from Missouri; if he has read the report which was made by the joint shipping committee of the two Houses; if he has listened to the debates here, and to the letters which have been read from Mr. Griscom, and the testimony of Mr. Houston, the president of the Pacific Mail Steamship line, he must have learned that the difference in the cost of a passenger iron steamship, whether made in this country or in England, is only from 10 to 15 per cent. instead of 40. Of course the principle is the same, but I desired to correct the Senator's figures.

Mr. BECK. The statement was made, as I understand, by the Senator from Missouri—I listened to him very carefully—that the percentage of difference in the cost of ships here and abroad varied very much, depending on the finish of the ship; but he showed that the freight-carrying ship, the iron ship, with but little finish and powerful steam-engines, cost 40 per cent. more here. We have but little passenger travel to Brazil; we desire to carry our plows, flour, wheat, and other freight there and bring back coffee, and we would for that purpose use the iron box with the powerful engines in it, for that is all that would be profitable. We are legislating now, as I understand it, to aid all we can in the revival of the American carrying trade; which in the Brazilian trade means carrying flour, wheat, and supplies to Brazil and bringing back coffee and perhaps a few other things. The passenger travel such as now goes to Europe in the Alaska or the Oregon or in any of the very costly ships does not go there to any great extent. Therefore if we are endeavoring to restore the American carrying trade on the ocean and are really seeking to carry our own exports abroad and bring back our imports, these costly vessels are not the class of ships that will carry our freight and bring back our coffee and other things from South American countries.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The Senator is entirely mistaken in supposing that. It is that class of ships that would be put on the South American line. The American line which was started some years ago and which failed was a mail-carrying and passenger line combined with the carrying of freight. Certainly there is no expectation that the Postmaster-General would contract for the carrying of mails by slow freight-going steamships. All lines which might be started from the United States to South American ports would undoubtedly be fast mail passenger and freight steamships combined. No others are of any use to us. We have no such amount of business now with the South American ports as would warrant the running of merely freight ships. What we want is the fast mail ship, which is to carry the merchant, to carry the mails, and to carry the goods at the same time. It is by the fast mail steamship service that the commerce of Great Britain has been built up the world over; and it is only after fast mail steamship service has been successfully accomplished that the freight steamer and the sailing vessel follow. It is only after we have sent out our merchants and established our banking houses and commission houses and all the machinery of commerce that freight steamers such as the Senator has spoken of and sailing vessels can possibly follow. The first thing to do is to establish the mail line.

The Senator says we are not interested in maintaining mail service with Brazil. Perhaps we are not; but I have listened to the Senator many times when he has told us, in speaking on the tariff question, that what we wanted was foreign trade; that we wanted communication with the outside world; that we wanted to break down the barriers, and establish a commerce with South America and with Mexico and with China and with Japan. Here comes the first sensible, reasonable proposition to do that thing. It is to establish mail communication between our ports and foreign ports where we have now no direct mail communication, and by so doing to build up our commerce, by so doing to induce our merchants to go out, to induce our manufacturers to send out their goods and enable the farmer to send out his produce and make profitable exchanges.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator allow me in connection with this to ask a question? Does he think there is a possibility of carrying American manufactured goods to Brazil to compete with English or French or German goods there?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I thank the Senator for asking me that question. Manufactured goods largely consumed in Central and South America and Mexico are cheap cotton and cheap woolen goods, chiefly cheap cottons; and to-day we are exporting those in competition with Birmingham and Manchester. We are sending them to China and Japan, and we could supply nine-tenths of the trade of South America in cheap cotton goods if we had direct steam lines communicating with their ports and if we had our merchants and our commission houses there established. There is no doubt about it.

But as I stated a few days ago the trade is now carried on in English vessels which start from Liverpool loaded with American cotton goods, go to South America, discharge their cargoes, take on a load of coffee or of other South American products and come to the port of New York and discharge there. There they take on grain and flour for the English market, but they take good care that their ships do not run to South America via New York, but they run back to Liverpool via New York; and in this way our merchants are shut out from any consideration in that trade. It is to meet just this condition of affairs that we are called upon at this time to pass this bill and give this relief and if possible establish lines by which we can send to Brazil not only cheap cotton and cheap woolen goods but all kinds of cutlery, edge-tools, and farming implements which we manufacture better and cheaper than any other country in the world.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I understand the Senator to say that we can successfully compete in foreign ports with England or France or Germany and can not compete with them on our own soil.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The Senator may put words into my mouth, but he can not make me indorse his sentiments. I have said nothing of the kind. The Senator knows full well that in the remodeling of the tariff the duties have been very largely reduced on articles of coarse manufactures. There is no doubt that we can compete successfully with England and with France and Germany in many of the coarser articles of manufacture, but I do not find in that fact any reason why we should remove all the tariff upon those articles by any means, and make ourselves the dumping-ground for the surplus products of all the English workshops and all the workshops of Europe.

But I do not care to go into a discussion of the tariff on this question of mail-pay to steamers. I simply rose to correct a statement of the Senator from Kentucky in regard to the difference in the cost of a mail steamship, whether manufactured abroad or manufactured in our own shops.

The bill has been made as impersonal in this matter as possible. Instead of authorizing the Postmaster-General to make contracts with any American citizen with whom he might see fit to make a contract, we have left it open for competition, and to say that by so doing we have confined it to three or four or five American citizens is, I think, to misstate the case entirely. If this bill passes, I have no doubt that a large amount of capital will be raised in different cities, in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston perhaps, and also in New Orleans, associated capital will come together and organize steamship companies. Iron steamships will not only be bought in this country, but there is nothing in this bill which by implication or necessity will confine this business to any five or ten or fifty American citizens. It will be open to the entire country and to all our people alike.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. I thought I was taken off the floor. How it was I do not know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was under the impression that the Senator from Kentucky had concluded his remarks.

Mr. BECK. No; I was interrupted by the Senator from New York several times.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Chair will recognize the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from New York rose to correct a statement I had made in regard to the character of vessels needed in the South American trade, and I endeavored to explain to him as well as I could that the vessels we needed there were in my opinion precisely the class of vessels the Senator from Missouri proved by the president of the Philadelphia line cost 40 per cent. more here than abroad. Only some $1,800 was paid last year for mail service between the United States and Brazil. I assume that this line is carrying passengers and freight there to some extent and bringing back coffee to a larger extent than anything else. I judge so from the official reports. It is true we are handicapped in that trade, because the Brazilian export tax on coffee which we buy amounts, according to our consular reports, to $2,500,000 a year. I am inclined to think we made a mistake in taking off the tax on coffee without requiring some reciprocal advantages from Brazil. That can not be helped now. But in reply to the Senator from New York I desire to say to him that when he avows that we have to make a beginning in renewing our trade, and that we have first to establish mail service and then endeavor to make locations there for our merchants to open the way to trade, to all of which I agree, we have been endeavoring to do that with Brazil for many years.

We gave the Garrison line a large subsidy; we gave the Roach line a subsidy for years; we gave the Pacific Mail line a large subsidy for years, and yet since these efforts were made our ocean-carrying trade has fallen off from an average of 33 per cent. to 15½ per cent. That is all the result we can show for the subsidies to American-built ships. A further result followed while the Brazilian line was subsidized and Mr. Roach was running it under his subsidy. The sailing ships from Baltimore that were in the habit of bringing coffee from Brazil to Baltimore were driven out of that trade because the subsidized line was enabled to carry freight cheaper than even the Baltimore sailing-ships could carry them, and that part of our ocean carrying trade with Brazil had to be substantially abandoned, unless I am very much mistaken. Wherever we subsidize one line, whether owned by Mr. Roach or anybody else, for I will not speak of him in any invidious sense—I have nothing to do with individual men, but his name is used here very often—whoever gets this million and a half will drive every other American ship in that trade out of the business.

In the first place the ship-builder gets from 25 to 40 per cent. more than the same ship can be bought for elsewhere, and if he sees fit to run her himself he can, by the aid of the subsidy we propose, carry the goods to and from Brazil much cheaper than any American unsubsidized line can carry them; that strangles and destroys all American competition. The United States pays him not for carrying the mail at what it is worth to carry it, because that amounts to only about $1,800 a year, but a million or a million and a half to enable him to drive out of competition with him every American unsubsidized line to which the Postmaster-General does not feel at liberty to give an equal compensation, for I presume the Postmaster-General will give the money to the line that runs fastest and will give it only to one line. That line may do business at a loss outside of the Government mail subsidy and make a profit through the subsidy, and drive out of competition with the money we give it every other American line that dares to venture in that trade unsubsidized.

I supposed when this bill came up that we were going to make an honest, earnest effort, as the House had done, free from all subsidies, to remove burdens from American ship-owners, from our sailors, and from American ships, in order to encourage trade, to do something toward retaining the $150,000,000 we pay annually for carrying the $800,000,000 of exports we send abroad and the $700,000,000 of imports we bring back in American ships. I did not think we were going to bring the matter down to the point of subsidizing our ship-builders to build ships to carry mails where there are no mails, and tax the people to pay them to build ships at 30 or 40 per cent. more than like ships can be built for elsewhere, and are built for all our competitors in foreign trade, and call that restoring and reviving American commerce, and by the subsidy system enable the men thus subsidized under the name of a mail contract to drive out all American competition on the lines they are paid out of the Treasury to occupy.

That was not what I supposed this bill was intended for. I have said all the time that I was willing, if the mail service really and properly required it, to pay well for any service done for the United States; but when the Postmaster-General had told us time and again in years gone by, and the report from the Post-Office Department has been read by the Senator from Delaware and others showing that he was getting the mails carried for less than a fourth of what is offered by this bill, and getting it done well, I do not see any reason for enabling him to make contracts for I do not know how long, for terms not less than four years, the bill says. I suppose it might be well to limit it to not more than ninety-nine; there ought to be some limitation with somebody who shall receive this million or million and a half a year for all the years to come. I would say for not more than four years instead of not less than four years, so that this subsidy might end some time or other, and the right of some other Congress might exist to change the policy. Some future Congress might not want to require men to buy ships at 25 or 30 or 40 per cent. more than they are worth from a few men who have already got very rich by the monopoly of building ships for the coastwise trade.

Of course my views will go for very little in this body. Our ship-builders are building, as was said the other day, many good ships. When I said the average of the steamships built in the United States was only 270 tons, the Senator from Maine rose and showed by a list that there were some forty or fifty vessels of over 2,000 tons in the coastwise trade. That is true. I have been on board some of those steamers at Savannah, Charleston, and elsewhere. They are beautiful ships, well-built ships, costly ships; high prices are paid for them. I saw in the Washington Post of a day or two ago this item:

WILMINGTON, DEL., May 3.

William Astor's new steel yacht Nourmahal was launched by the Harlin & Hollingsworth Company at 6.46 a. m. The Nourmahal is said to be the largest pleasure vessel ever launched in America, and will be the largest yacht afloat. Her dimensions are: Length, 232 feet 8 inches; extreme breadth, 30 feet; extreme depth, 20 feet.

I have no doubt she is a very fine, large ship, and our rich men can afford to pay well for such vessels; but they do not help the farmer to get his wheat to market.

All that class of ships can be built and are built in our ship-yards. Our builders have the exclusive right to build them; nobody outside can compete with them; and so with the class of steamers that run in South America on the smaller rivers, where a great deal of wood-work and a great deal of fancy finish is required, I believe our ship-builders can build them as well and perhaps as cheaply as they can be built anywhere in the world. What our people desire, what I suppose Congress desires, is what are called by the president of the Philadelphia line the great iron boxes, with such machinery that the wheat, the corn, the cattle, the pork, and all our provisions can go to market in them and they can bring back what we want in the cheapest, safest, and most economical way.

I will ask the Senator from Maine now while I think of it how it is that the Post-Office Department only pays $600,000 for all the steamship mail service along our coast, lakes, and rivers? That includes the rivers, it includes everything connected with our internal postal sea and river service. It seems to me that $600,000 is a very small sum to pay for postal service on all the interior rivers and all along the coast of the United States, if the proposed sum in this bill is reasonable for the mail service we will get. I understand that $600,000 for steamboat service does all the Post-Office work. That is all the Post-Office appropriation bill provides for and all the Department asks; yet for one or two lines (for it is not assumed, I understand, that we are going to carry any mail to Europe across the Atlantic Ocean with the proposed subsidy in this bill; I think everybody admits that) to South America where there is very little trade it is proposed to pay $1,500,000. I would like to have it explained how $600,000 accomplishes so much and we are to get so little out of this $1,500,000 in postal service.

As I said, I do not propose to occupy time by making a speech, but these are some of the objections I see to the proposed system. I do protest that if we are going to give relief to American sailors, to build up a merchant marine, we are absolutely abandoning the theory which I thought we were going to assume, and convert it into a bill to donate a million and a half dollars to a few men who build ships here and have already a monopoly of the coastwise trade, under pretense of carrying a few letters to Brazil, or to some other points where we have very little trade, and where there are very few American citizens to receive the mails when we get them there. Now, there is no complaint that the service is not well and promptly done now.

I had supposed that when the bill of the Senator from Maine became a law it would accomplish something toward putting us upon an equality with foreign nations. I supposed that with 95 per cent. of our sailors foreigners, when we abolished the three months' extra pay, took off the tonnage dues, took off the pilotage fees, removed all restrictions, and let men hire their sailors how they can, as the mechanic, the merchant, the manufacturer, the railroad manager hires his hands, at least letting Americans hire those men as cheaply as citizens of foreign nations can, we would take steps in the right direction. It must be apparent to everybody that, as 95 per cent. of all our sailors are foreigners, if you give the foreign sailor the same advantage on board an American ship that he has on board a British ship he does not care one penny whether the union-jack or the Stars and Stripes float over his head; he will hire as cheaply on an American ship as he will on an English ship when you make all things equal. I supposed the bill was for the purpose of making all things equal in these regards, thus enabling the ship in the Philadelphia line, which was built in this country, to compete with the ship which was built in England, running in the same line, upon exactly the same terms, so that the owners would not have to transfer the American-built ship under the English flag for the purpose of running her more cheaply than can be done under the American flag.

It is the merest absurdity to say that the Norwegian, the Swede, any foreigner, cares one penny what flag floats over his head. If you enable the owner of an American ship to hire the sailor just as cheaply and give him exactly the same facilities that the Englishman has in one of the ships running in the same line, he would as soon sail under one flag as under another. There is no patriotism involved in that, not with the foreigner at any rate. It is simply a question of dollars and cents and good treatment with him.

I supposed the bill was looking mainly to relief. I hope it may give it, and so far as it does remove obstacles it meets my cordial assent. I supposed it was going to allow reasonable pay for carrying the necessary mail. That far I am willing to go; but it seems to be now proposed, whether the ship carries any mail or not, whether it does any appreciable service or not, $2 a mile shall be paid for every mile she sails if she only has one letter from here to Rio, and that that shall not be paid unless the ship-master shall go to one of four or five men who have now a monopoly of the coastwise trade and can ask any price they please for ships, when they can combine, as, of course, they do, and order by law that the mail-carrier shall buy their ships or shall not have a dollar of the money from the Treasury for carrying the mails.

I again ask, if the people of the United States want a mail carried, what difference does it make to them how it goes, whether it goes in a balloon, in a ship, or anything else? I do not understand that it makes any difference to the people who send or receive letters. Therefore it is that when you encumber the payment of the money with the provision that the mail-carrier shall first pay $100,000 more for a ship than it is offered for elsewhere, and make that the sole condition upon which you will give it to him, you are ignoring the question of mail-carrying altogether and are only adding to the profits of men who have now immense bounties, and are not liberalizing or extending American commerce in any sense which will be advantageous or profitable to the mass of the people. The subsidy provisions seem to absorb the balance of the bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I desired to understand, as near as possible, what was proposed by the bill, and in trying to ascertain that I necessarily made inquiry of my friend from New York [Mr. MILLER] as to the effect of certain things which he had proposed. As a partial answer, the Senator says he does not propose to discuss the tariff question. I did not suppose that the tariff question was necessarily a matter of consideration at this time. The proposition, as I understand it, is simply to open the door, to take about a million and a half dollars out of the Treasury. It is a subsidy, a subsidy to steamship lines under the guise of pay for carrying the mails, and in order that it may not seem so large a sum as it really is it is said to be only $1 per mile.

We are expected to believe that this is another patriotic proposition to disseminate useful knowledge, and that it is not to cost much, only a dollar a mile. The proposition is to disseminate information at a dollar a mile, as we are informed; whereas it is really to open the Treasury to subsidize a few steamship lines in the interest of a few men to the extent of a million and a half dollars a year.

My friend said it was necessary at this advanced stage of the world and of American civilization and improvement in machinery and manufactures that we should have commission-houses in Brazil, that we should have American merchants in Brazil. That necessarily suggested the inquiry, what for; because I had heard very much of the tariff from the gentlemen who say they do not want to talk anything about the tariff in this connection, and that is a very gratifying announcement. It would be very advantageous to the American people if they would adhere to that proposition when other questions come up. But when the gentlemen suggested that they desired to establish commission-houses and American merchants in Brazil, the question was, what for? Why have a commission-house in Brazil, and why induce American merchants to go to Brazil to ride upon the elegant steamers which are to be subsidized to the extent of a million and a half dollars?

Was that all? Oh, no. The Senators further say they want to sell American products. Then another question comes up, because that is another patriotic branch of this case. First, the object is to disseminate knowledge, and then to furnish a market for American manufactures—two patriotic suggestions. Then the question comes up, how are we to sell American manufactures in Brazil, because that becomes a legitimate argument here. We are to expend a million and a half dollars to pay vessels for carrying the mails to their ports; that is the proposition, no matter whether one ship-yard builds them or two; it is in that interest; there is no question about that. You are to have these ships running from the United States, which is all very well if, in the language of Franklin, it does not cost too much for the whistle. It is all very well to have American steamship lines, but for what purpose? To build up commission-houses in Brazil and for the American merchants there? What good will it do us in the United States to have commission-houses built up in Brazil and American merchants there if they buy English goods to sell to the Brazilian people? But the Senators say, "Oh, but we can sell American goods in Brazil." My friend the Senator from New York and my friend the Senator from Maine say that we can sell successfully American productions, American manufactures, in Brazil. How?

That is the point I desire to know. That is one of the mysteries of the tariff that I do not exactly understand. The Senators say that we can compete in Brazil; that we can have American merchants to sell there goods manufactured in this country; that is, the American merchant can go from the United States into Brazil and meet the English merchant with English goods, and he can tell the citizens of that country, "We are a benediction and a benefaction to your people here because we can come thousands of miles from our own home and we can sell our manufactured goods as cheap or cheaper than English manufactured goods can be sold. Therefore it is, we come to make money for ourselves in the first place; second, we come to benefit the American Navy and the American flag; and lastly we come to benefit the people here, to sell them cheaper goods than England or France or Germany can sell." That is the proposition as I understand the gentleman. I think I have not misrepresented or misquoted them. If I have I shall be glad to be corrected.

That is the proposition. Otherwise your commission-houses are of no use. Otherwise your American merchant will have nothing to do, unless he trades with British goods; and is it not equally as criminal for the American to trade in British goods in Brazil as it is in the United States? Why not? That is a question I should like my friends to answer. I would not wander with them through the mazes of the tariff; I would not think of such a thing; but I would simply like to know what the commission-houses are to do in Brazil, and what the American merchant is to do in Brazil unless he deals in British goods.

My friends say we can compete in Brazil with English goods and that we can not do it in the United States. Will our friends turn for a moment to the laborers in the United States and the protection of American labor? That is what the whole life of these gentlemen is composed of. They do not seem to have a thought in any other direction except to benefit and protect American labor! You go down to Brazil and take care of the people there that we do not care much about. Is it not possible in your magnanimity and generosity to provide some way that you can go into the city of New York and on the plains of the West and give our own people the same benefits that you propose to give to the people of Brazil? Do that; accomplish something in that direction, and then we shall believe there is something in what you say, that you desire to benefit and protect American labor. But that is the guise and the pretext that you can go to Brazil and undersell English goods there when you can not do it upon American soil.

I admit that this question has nothing to do with the tariff. I am glad that it is so, because I should get confused in talking about this matter if it were connected with the tariff; but there must be some excuse for taking a million and a half dollars out of the Treasury of the United States. My friend on the other side of the Chamber says it is to disseminate useful information. Will he tell me how much it costs to carry the mail one trip from here to Brazil? Will my friend the Democratic Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] tell me how much it costs a trip to carry the mail to disseminate information between the United States and Brazil now? Will my friend the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] tell me, because the Senator from Maryland has not so far advanced in these figures as to state that fact? Will the Senator from New York tell me how much it costs a trip to disseminate useful information between the United States and Brazil? Can he tell me? Then let me appeal to another Senator on the other side of the Chamber. I think the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] can tell me. Can he tell me how much it will cost?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will simply read the statement of the Postmaster-General in his last annual report:

From New York to ports of Great Britain and the continent of Europe, three hundred and eighty-five trips, by foreign steamships of seven different lines, $256,775.14, averaging $667 per trip.

From San Francisco to ports of Japan and China, thirty-two trips, by United States and foreign steamships, $3,925.66, averaging $122.67 per trip.

From San Francisco to the Hawaiian Islands, New Zealand, and the Australian colonies, fourteen trips, by United States steamships, $12,533.89, averaging $895.27.

From New York to Aspinwall, with mails for Ceutral America, Mexico, and west coast of South America, thirty-eight trips, by United States steamships, $4,996.28, averaging $131.21 per trip.

From New York via Havana to Vera Cruz, Mexico, forty-six trips, by United States steamships, $4,484.76, averaging $94.79 per trip.

From New York and Newport News, Va., to ports of Brazil, thirty-seven trips, by United States steamships, $4,450.06, averaging $120.27 per trip.

If the entire postage, sea and inland, had been allowed and paid to United States steamships, the earnings of five of these steamship lines would have been increased as follows:

Line from San Francisco to Japan and China, to about $20,000, or $625 per trip.

Line from San Francisco to Australian colonies, to about $25,000, or $1,785 per trip.

Line from New York to Aspinwall, to about $225,000, or $650 per trip.

Line from New York to Vera Cruz, to about $22,500, or $490 per trip; and,

Line from New York and Newport News to Brazil, to about $6,200, or $167 per trip.

Mr. VAN WYCK. One hundred and twenty dollars and twenty-seven cents per trip, according to the Senator from Delaware. I find he is either more willing to give information or is better informed than the other Senators. Will the Senator go a little further, if he can, and tell me now under this bill how much it will cost to diffuse the same amount of information between the United States and Brazil? Will he tell me about how many miles a vessel has to go to reach Brazil?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know the exact distance, but I have understood that the distance from here to Rio is about 5,000 miles.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator is probably correct. I will ask the Senator from New York.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will state, if the Senator will allow me, that the present service of the lines to South America and to Mexico, and by the Pacific Mail Company, costs the Government $303,079.65. It is to those lines I suppose the million and a half dollars will be devoted.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now is the Senator from New York satisfied? We have the information now. I regret to say that there is much necessity for a civil-service commission among the tariff Senators in this body. About 5,000 miles out and 5,000 miles in I understand is the distance. That is 10,000 miles. At the present rate the United States is paying $120 a trip, and by this bill it is proposed to pay $10,000 per trip. Is not that the proposition? There is what it is precisely. It is now $120 a trip and you allow these gentlemen to reach their long fingers into the Treasury of the United States and take out $10,000 for the same service. That is precisely the proposition, I take it. I ask the Senator from New York. I want to know. The mails? Oh, yes; gentlemen want the mails distributed. Certainly; they are distributed. They are being distributed at $120 per round trip, and now you propose to distribute them, the same service, the same quantity of mail, at $10,000 per trip, and we have a right to know the reason why. I have found that the building of commission-houses in Brazil is no sufficient reason, the transplanting of a few American merchants to Brazil is no sufficient reason, because they can do nothing when they get there unless they do the same as the Britisher does with foreign goods; and yet we are called upon to expend $10,000 per trip.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will allow me, I made a mistake in giving the aggregate of the cost of the mail to South America and Mexico, China, and Japan. I said it was $303,079.65; it is $30,379.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am obliged to the Senator. I merely wanted to get it by way of Brazil, because it seems to be the initial point in the minds of these gentlemen to get to Brazil. When you hear anything said about ship-building it is the trade with Brazil. Therefore it was I desired to confine the information to that point, and to see how much the American people are to gain or lose by this proposition. We find that we lose on each trip over $9,000. Do we not? The Postmaster-General's report says that. Read the Postmaster-General's report. He ought to know, because he has the Civil-Service Commission attached to his Department. We have none of it here. He says the mail costs $120 per trip, and now this bill proposes to make it $10,000. Therefore it is we want to know the reason why, and we do not get it.

I need say nothing more. If Senators think this is right; if Congress thinks it is right; if the people think it right, it is all very well. If they desire to have a million and a half dollars paid to a few ship-yards in this country and to tax the American people for it, it is all very well.

But the great difficulty seems to have been that these gentlemen can not build ships here as cheaply as they can abroad, and when we build the ships we can not run them as cheaply as they do abroad. Certainly not. If it be true, as gentlemen say, that we can compete with foreign goods in Brazil, then what more protection does any one desire? If there is an open market, I ask the Senator from Maine why are his mills stopping in New England? I ask him why it is that every now and then there is a necesssity for reducing the wages there and causing a lock-up? If it be true that Americans can compete in Brazil or any other nation against foreign goods, why is it that you ask for this subsidizing of steamships? Why is it that you ask the American people to pay freight, because it amounts to that, upon your goods in order to get them into the foreign market, and when there they can not successfully compete?

What will be the next proposition? To build, if you please, American vessels, to put them under the American flag, you take a million and a half dollars out of the Treasury. What then? You are not able to compete with foreign goods in foreign countries, and then if it be true that the foreigners can run their ships cheaper than we can, and if it be right that our laborers should not compete with the pauper labor of Europe, it will not be right that our sailors should compete with the pauper sailors of Europe. Then when your steamship line is started and foreign lines persistently insist upon carrying goods at less rates, if the foreign lines will carry passengers and freight at less rates, what then? Then will these gentlemen with just as much propriety come to the American Congress and ask that there shall be another section added to this bill or another law passed requiring and demanding that Americans and American goods shipped out of the United States to any foreign port shall be carried in vessels made in the United States, manned by sailors of the United States, and over which the flag of the United States floats? That is a necessary and logical consequence.

I only desired that we should have a full understanding of this matter. If there is to be a subsidy, let it be understood that it is a subsidy. If there is to be more taxation upon the American people to protect special interests, let it be so understood. If the American people sustain it, all well, but let at least any disguises or masks be stripped from it so that it may stand forth precisely in the character in which it will be looked upon when it comes to be scrutinized by the American people.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, but for the allusion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] made to the vote which I cast upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], I probably should not add one word to what I have already said. I take it for granted that every Senator must pardon the warmth with which the Senator from Kentucky always treats the subject of tariff and free ships. He does not like to tolerate a difference of opinion in anybody, but when it comes to a member of his own party who has different views, who has come to a different conclusion as to the best method of releasing the American people of unwise and injurious tax laws, and commerce of onerous burdens, the Senator from Kentucky can not tolerate it and can not help making reference to it and commenting upon it in a way which that Senator alone can do.

I do not intend to be brought into a general discussion of the tariff and free ships. I have had no desire to participate in this debate, but contented myself with casting a vote which I believe to be in the interest of the people of this country.

Let me say to my friend from Kentucky that no party whip or drill will ever make me cast a vote here or elsewhere against what I believe to be the interests of the people of this country or against American enterprise. He and many other Senators believe that it is the interest of the people to vote as they did. They had a perfect right to do so; and I have never questioned his right or that of any other Senator. He may be right, but I did not think with him.

When the Senator tells me that I cast that vote in the interests of protectionists, I tell him it may be his opinion, but he has no right to make that statement, because if he knows anything of my opinions or of my course here he knows that while I am in favor of granting protection within the limits of the revenue standard, I neither advocate protection to monopolies or subsidies to favored individuals.

The question of permitting English-built ships to be registered has been settled so far as the vote of the Senate can settle it. It has nothing whatever to do with the matter under consideration to-day; it is not a question of high tariff or of free ships. The Senate has determined by a very decided vote that we will not permit foreign ships to be brought here free of duty and then registered and run as American vessels. We are now considering the question whether we will compensate our own ships for the service which they render the American people. The Senator from Kentucky and I differ as widely upon this proposition as we differ upon the matter of free ships and free materials. He would continue the law in existence as it is now, as to compensation for carrying the mails, because he fears that the enterprising American ship-builders may reap some benefits from it if it is amended as proposed. He prefers the present condition of affairs to a change which is believed by the Post-Office Department and by the Committee on Commerce—and no man will charge my friend from Missouri——

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senator will not say that I favor this provision in the bill. I have stated always, publicly and privately, in committee and out of committee, and upon this floor a dozen times, that I am in favor of liberal ocean postal pay, but always upon condition that it should be paid out to the lowest bidder, and that the contractor should carry the mail in vessels bought wherever he could buy them most cheaply, wherever they were built, in this country or elsewhere.

Mr. GORMAN. I was about to say (if the Senator from Missouri had waited one moment his interruption would not have been necessary) that he, who has given this question a thorough examination, has stated upon this floor and in committee that the present law providing compensation for carrying the mails in American vessels to foreign ports was unjust, and ought to be repealed or amended and other provision made, but the Senator from Kentucky, as I understood him, would prefer the law to remain as it is without amendment. The Committee on Commerce believe that the provision which we have reported will correct the inequality, but the Senator from Kentucky in effect says, "No, let it remain as it is."

Now, sir, what is the operation of the law? The report of the Postmaster-General, which I hold in my hand and which was referred to by my friend from Delaware, shows you this condition of affairs: that allowing the sea-postage only for the service, the lines running from New York to Europe, every one of which is a foreign ship, receive from the United States for the service of carrying the mails $667 a trip, while the American lines running from New York to Havana and Vera Cruz receive only $94.79 per trip; from New York and Newport News, Va., to Brazil, they receive $120.27 a trip. Yet the Senator from Kentucky would keep upon the statute-book an act which allows to the foreign ship-owner $667 per trip and compensate an American vessel which runs to Brazil at the rate of $120 a trip.

It is an unjust discrimination against our own enterprise and against our own people. It is not intended as a bounty to enable men to put steamboat lines on. What would be the result if you give every dollar that you receive from this foreign postage to the vessels carrying the mails? Would it be the enormous bounty that my friend from Kentucky talks of? The Postmaster-General says that if he were permitted to distribute the whole receipts it would give the line from San Francisco to Japan and China $20,000 per annum; the line from San Francisco to Australia $25,000; from New York to Aspinwall $25,000; the line from New York to Vera Cruz $22,000; the line from New York to Newport News and to Brazil about $6,200 per annum. It would leave it in his discretion to contract with these or any other lines. It opens the door to every American who owns a vessel, and the Senator from Kentucky knows that his intimation that the pending proposition is in effect granting a subsidy to John Roach or any other individual is not fair—is unwarranted by the facts.

As I said when I was on the floor before, that Senator and myself have voted higher rates of service both upon the ocean and upon the land for carrying the mails. We pay, and pay with his approval, $185,000 for fast mail service in addition to the ordinary service between Boston and Charleston. The contract is made without opening it to competition, as there is but one line that can perform the service. Our friends on this side of the Chamber know as well as I do that if such a contract were made with a steamship line it would be denounced as a subsidy pure and simple.

Mr. President, the American people will have mail facilities both on land and by water. They are willing to pay fair compensation for that service, and when it is open to fair competition none can or will complain.

I would not take from the Treasury or wring from the tax-payers of this country any large amount to establish a service between this country and any foreign port. But to authorize the Postmaster-General to expend the paltry sum received from the foreign mail service in establishing new lines, increasing the facilities of those that now exist, is, in my judgment, an imperative duty. To make money from that service is not what the American people want. What they desire is speedy and direct communication with all civilized nations, and their mails carried in American ships.

The Senator from Kentucky asks what difference is it whether this service is in a ship or in a balloon, or whether the mail goes in an English bottom or an American bottom, whether it goes at all from this country to the Southern ports direct? If I have understood the discussion on the tariff and upon this bill, it is to the countries south of us to which we are looking for the increase of our commerce. It is an impossibility within any reasonable time and with a reasonable expenditure of money to hope to establish a line of steamers across the ocean in competition with the English lines, but it is to the South American ports that you must first look for the establishment of steamship lines and increase of your commerce. There is the market for our manufactures and products; we want theirs.

The Senator from Kentucky says, What matter is it whether you get your mail there direct or not? As an American I have felt humiliated when I had visited the great port of Baltimore and found that the merchants of that city, who at one time had almost a monopoly of the coffee trade between Brazil and this country, were compelled to mail their letters on an English steamer and send them to Liverpool, and thence to Brazil, and patiently await an answer by the same circuitous route. Representing that people in part, I should be recreant to my duty to them as well as to the whole country if within reasonable limits of compensation I failed to give that encouragement to American enterprise which would enable them to communicate directly with all those southern countries.

Mr. BECK. The stenographer has taken down, no doubt correctly, the reference made by the Senator from Maryland to myself and the appeal that he made to me as to what I would do in this regard, it being, he said, a plain, simple business transaction for carrying the mail. I had neither spoken nor intended to speak. I rose to say in reply that in my judgment as far as I had understood it this was not a simple business transaction; that if it was simply to pay for the mails, so far as the mail-carriage alone was concerned it made no sort of difference whether it went in foreign or an American ship or in a balloon looking simply to the carrying of the mail, but that other questions were involved in it. The vote of the Senator from Maryland yesterday showed that a man is not to be allowed to buy any other than an American ship, and now the proposition is that no one shall have this money unless he carries the mail in an American ship. That is bringing up another proposition outside of the mere carrying of the mail, and when that proposition comes up this measure is too insectivorous (I will go back again to the expression of the Senator from Missouri) to be appreciable in restoring the American merchant marine on the high seas. We have neither passengers nor traffic enough to that point to make it the great objective point on which to begin to restore the American merchant marine.

The RECORD will fail to show that I either lectured the Senator from Maryland or drew any party lash over his head, or made any allusion that induced him rightfully to believe that I objected to the vote he gave on yesterday, so that all this lecture about what I have said will, I think, seem to be useless when the RECORD appears to-morrow morning.

I have no doubt that the Senator from Maryland thinks that it is best not to allow foreign-built ships to come here and engage in the carrying trade. I have arrived at a different conclusion, and I have stated as my reasons for it that we are now building no ships for the foreign trade; that we have lost all but 15½ per cent. of it; that foreign nations are our factors, our carriers, and doing all the business; that 95 per cent. of the few sailors we have are foreigners; that England is building all the ships now; that only enough ships can be used to do the world's carrying trade, and that she is not benefited by our becoming her competitor; that we are furnishing profitable employment to 100,000 sailors for her now, who will be our enemies whenever she orders them, and that we are prostrate at her feet. These are some of the reasons I have for my views. I have given them freely. They may not be good reasons, but they are reasons which the country will appreciate, in my judgment.

I said further that, looking upon this simply as a mail transaction, there was no propriety in limiting a mail carrier to a particular class of ships, bought at a cost of 30 or 40 per cent. more than a ship was offered at elsewhere; that if you are going to pay a mail carrier let him get the cheapest vehicle he can to carry the mail in, if you are looking at that alone. If you are looking to building up the American marine, this is not the way to begin it. This measure is not big enough, is not important enough, to do anything but to require the mail carriers to pay more for their vehicles to a few men who have a large enough monopoly now.

I only rose to say that I did not reflect, nor intend to reflect (and the RECORD in the morning will show that I did not) upon the vote of the Senator from Maryland. He may be right and I may be wrong, but neither of us has any right to lecture the other as to who is right or who is wrong.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I would like to bring the Senate back to the real question as to whether there is any subsidy in this bill, and I would submit it to the Senator from Delaware himself sitting before me [Mr. SAULSBURY]. Section 3976 of the Revised Statutes provides as follows:

> The master of any vessel of the United States bound from any port therein to any foreign port, or from any foreign port to any port of the United States, shall, before clearance, receive on board and securely convey all such mails as the Post-Office Department, or any diplomatic or consular officer of the United States abroad, shall offer; and he shall promptly deliver the same, on arriving at the port of destination, to the proper officer, for which he shall receive 2 cents for every letter so delivered.

Mr. MORGAN. What section is that?

Mr. FRYE. Section 3976. I submit to the Senator from Alabama,

I submit to the Senator from Kentucky, who has left his seat, I am sorry to see, I submit to any Senator in the United States Senate that there is no justice, there is no reason, there is no propriety in continuing that statute upon this book.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator will allow me to ask him, what does he do with the declaration of the Postmaster-General?

Mr. FRYE. I will come to that by and by. I do not care what the Postmaster-General or anybody else says; I submit this one naked proposition: where is the United States Senator who rises in his place and says that that statute is a just one; that you may take a United States vessel carrying the American flag, and when she is ready with her passengers to leave New York for Rio Janeiro the Post-Office Department may send her word, "Stop till my mails are ready," and she is detained a day or two days; "Stop or you shall not have a clearance," and she is kept there a week; "Stop or you shall not have a clearance until my mails are ready;" and then when the mails are ready they are put on board that ship and she is compelled to carry them to Rio Janeiro, and the Post-Office Department pays that vessel 2 cents a letter.

I never saw a Senator, I never saw any gentleman outside of the Senate, I never saw a United States official in the Post-Office Department who did not declare that that statute was unjust, was wicked, and ought not to abide a single moment. The committee on the part of the House and the committee on the part of the Senate both unanimously determined that that section ought to be and must be repealed. The Senator from Missouri joined in it as ardently as I did, and as every Senator must when he reads it.

Now, sir, what next? Here is a proposition to repeal it. The Postmaster-General says you repeal it and then what? There is but one thing on earth for you to do when you repeal it. What is that? Contract for carrying the mails of the United States with a vessel bound to a foreign port just exactly as you contract with your railroad companies, your stage coaches, your inland vessels, your coastwise vessels; by advertisement, by proposals to the lowest bidder. Is there any other way? Can any Senator find any other way in which to do it?

So under the guidance of the Postmaster-General, in his presence, I drew that section, providing that this being repealed the next step should be for him to advertise for proposals to the lowest bidder. There is no other way on earth by which it can be done. What then? Then the Postmaster-General said to me, "Why, Senator FRYE, if I advertise for proposals and there is but one line running, I am at the mercy of that line. If I advertise, as the bill must provide I shall do, for mail between here and Venezuela and there is but one line on that route, that line has me absolutely in its power; it can take my mail; it can compel me to pay the whole $1,300,000 which your bill provides." I admitted it. Then what remedy for that? This remedy, which is put into the bill, that in no event shall it exceed—it is not any promise, as the Senator from Kentucky said, to pay a dollar a mile—in no event shall it exceed $1 a mile for the round trip. Why is that put there? To pay a subsidy of a dollar a mile? No; it was put there at the suggestion of the Postmaster-General to meet this very difficulty, where there was but one line and that line might without it take the whole and no more mails be carried for us.

Then what, Mr. President? Then there might be lines established, and we might want to send our mails by fifty different steamers, and that might involve an expenditure of $5,000,000 a year. I wish it did. I believe in American vessels and the American flag. When a French vessel got a contract from the English Government, the only one ever given, where there was a competing line, to a foreign ship, a short contract, and a report was made to the English Parliament, the leaders in that English Parliament made the House of Commons hum with their declarations that the British mail should never be carried under a foreign flag, and they never made another contract with that French vessel. When Crawford, a member of Parliament, made the declaration that it was "free trade run mad," the whole Parliament applauded to the echo without dissension, without division.

I should like to see the day come in the American Senate, too, when a proposition "free trade run mad" should receive the same fate it received in the British Parliament. I should like to see the American Senate with that disposition and that mind when for the flag and for America they would be willing even to pay the paltry tax upon the American people of $5,000,000 a year which France pays. Sir, I would rejoice to see the day come when this great Republic of fifty millions of people for the flag and for America would be willing to pay as much in its support as Italy, or Spain, or Chili, or some other fifth-rate country or state.

I say that every limitation has been put upon this bill by the committee, "shall not exceed a dollar a mile," "shall not exceed the gross revenues from the foreign mail service," "less every dollar paid to a foreign company for carrying the United States mail," "less every dollar paid for foreign transportation," "less every dollar paid for the administration of foreign postal matters." That is the bill; I say no man can object to it, to one word of it, to one line of it; and the only objection urged in the United States Senate against the provisions of the bill is that this great Republic in this bill is not authorized to let British ships bid in competition with American ships!

Has it come to this, that when we are struggling for existence on the seas we must be compelled to look to see how England would like it, and what we can do for England, and how it will affect us with England? Why this intense anxiety to build our ships in England; why this intense anxiety to have the English flag float over the United States mail? It is "free trade run mad," and that is all it is.

I have no hesitation in saying that to recover our position on the ocean I am for subsidy, $1,000,000 if it will do it, $3,000,000 if it will do it, $5,000,000 if that is required, $10,000,000 if only ten will do it, and I am ready to vote it any hour and any day, and my conscience would requite me of doing my whole duty. But this provision in the bill bears no more resemblance to a subsidy than the moon to-night bears to the sun in midday splendor. Here is no subsidy, no sign of a subsidy. The foreign mail service under it is doing better for your Government than any other service in the United States mail carriage does for your Government.

Mr. President, I am exceedingly anxious to have a final vote on this bill to-day, and I now give notice that I shall ask all the friends of the bill and of the merchant marine to stay here to-night until it is finished.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator makes speeches like that he has just made we shall stay here a week without a vote, I can tell him.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I did not intend to take any part in the discussion of the bill or any provision of it. I incidentally this morning referred to what the Postmaster-General had said in reference to the foreign-mail service. Since that time allusion has been made to what I have said. I now desire for a few moments only to state the reasons why I shall not vote for the bill.

I find in the report of the Postmaster-General that there are certain steamship lines carrying the foreign mails that are amply remunerated for the service which they render to the Government. If the statement of the Postmaster-General is true in that regard, I can not vote for any proposition which would give to any of those companies any additional compensation.

I find also a statement in the report of the Postmaster-General that there are certain other steamship lines, which he specifies and names, by which he says complaint has been made that they were not compensated because of the small number of letters and packages which are carried by those lines, and he names among others the lines to Brazil and Vera Cruz, in Mexico, on the Atlantic, and the Pacific Mail line, which carries the mails to Japan, China, and Australia.

If the bill of the committee had been framed so as to give to those South American and Pacific lines which carry the mails the entire amount of revenue derived by the carrying of the mails over those lines I would cheerfully have voted for it. But this proposition is a very different one. It proposes to take all the earnings of the postal service of the lines that cross the Atlantic to European ports and which are amply compensated, and to give the surplus revenue derived from that source to the steamship lines that run to South America, to Australia, Japan, and China, amounting, as I understand from the Senator from Maine, to a million and a half of dollars, not earned by those companies, not earned by the lines running from New York to Brazil, from New York to Vera Cruz, and from San Francisco to the various ports on the Pacific, but to take the earnings of the lines from New York to Liverpool, to Havre, and to other European ports and appropriate the earnings of the European steamships to the lines to which I have referred on the Pacific coast and South Atlantic coast.

Now, who is to be benefited? There is one line running to Brazil. Who runs it? One single individual. Who run the lines on the Pacific? The Pacific Mail Company. The provision in reference to advertisements for contracts amounts to nothing. There is but one line running to Brazil, Mr. Roach's line, but one line running to Vera Cruz, but one line running to Japan, but one line running to Australia, but one line running to China, and those lines belong to the Pacific Mail Company.

The provision in reference to the contract amounts to nothing. You had just as well incorporate in the bill a provision that all the earnings of the postal service from New York, Boston, and Philadelphia to European ports should be appropriated to Mr. John Roach and to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. There is no necessity whatever of a contract or any proposal for a contract with any one else. There may be some other persons interested in those lines, but I do not suppose there are. The provisions of the bill, if it is passed, will advance the price of the Pacific Mail stock in Wall street as soon as it is passed, because it is a gift out of the public Treasury to these companies.

If the bill of the Senator from Maine had proposed to give to the Pacific Mail Company all the revenue derived from the postal service on those lines, I would have voted for that proposition. If it had proposed to give all the revenue derived from the transportation of the mails to Brazil or to Vera Cruz to the owners of those lines, I would have voted for that proposition. But the proposition is here to take the earnings of the mails that are carried from New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, and to appropriate them to these lines upon the Pacific coast and down the Atlantic toward South America. That is a subsidy. Notwithstanding the vehemence with which the Senator from Maine disclaimed any purpose to confer a subsidy on anybody, it amounts to a subsidy. For very little service you propose to give them a million and a half dollars. How many letters go to Brazil?

How many letters go to Vera Cruz? How many letters go to Japan or to Australia or to China? The service performed is a very light and a very meager service.

The Senator from Maine refers to that provision which enables the Postmaster-General to detain a vessel for the purpose of receiving the mails. Did the Senator from Maine ever know an instance where they were detained a week, as he stated in the appeal he made to the Senate, or where the Postmaster-General ever detained for twenty-four hours a vessel to receive the mails? If so, then if your Postmaster-General is so unjust as to detain a ship an unreasonable time, you ought to turn him out and get somebody else. But he is guilty of no such injustice. The compensation which is given to the ships for the detention and the service rendered is ample, and any increase in the compensation is a gratuity—a subsidy in disguise.

Some reference has been made in the debate and some comparison has been instituted between the pay to railroad companies and for star-route service and the pay to the steamship companies on the Pacific. Does not every man know that when the mails are once carried on board a steamship they require no further attention; that they are locked up until they reach the port of destination, where they are delivered up; whereas on the railroads there is a mail station every few miles, where the trains are stopped, where the mails have to be delivered and distributed, and are delivered by the railroad companies into the post-offices within eighty rods from the railroad track? All that is done by the railroad companies, which carry heavy newspaper mails also, and there is no comparison that can properly be instituted between the service performed by the railroad companies in the transportation of the mails and that performed by the steamship companies upon the Atlantic Ocean and the Pacific Ocean.

I am not opposed to relieving the ship-owners from any burdens under which they may rest. I am perfectly willing that you shall strike off the consular fees. I am willing that you shall relieve them from the hospital fees. That is a measure, however, which in my judgment is one of very doubtful propriety. The sailors contribute to that fund in order to provide a home for themselves in case of sickness and disability. They feel an interest in the hospitals because they have contributed to their establishment. The hospital fund is collected in order that when they are done with service, disabled from service, they may have a place that in part belongs to themselves, homes to which they have contributed, and to which they can retire in case of sickness or accident; and they will feel much freer to go to a hospital provided in that manner than to those provided by contributions from the public Treasury alone.

Still, I should not have objected to the bill upon that ground, nor have I any special objection to the reduction of the tonnage duties, although it may not be exactly right that the ships which are owned by men of capital should be relieved from all taxation. They enjoy the privileges of our harbors which are kept in order by appropriations out of the Federal Treasury; they share in the benefits of our light-houses and in all the advantages of our coast surveys. I am not sure that it is exactly right to relieve them to the extent of reducing from 30 cents to 3 cents the tax on their entry into our ports. Still I would have supported the bill with that provision; but when the Senator from Maine insists that I shall vote a million and a half dollars earned by steamship companies crossing the Atlantic to European ports and give that to the lines running to Japan and to China, to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and to one or two individuals who have an interest in ships running to Brazil, I beg to be excused from voting for such a proposition.

I am not, like the Senator from Maine, in favor of subsidies, nor do I believe that the granting of subsidies will build up the American merchant marine. You have tried that system. You tried it on the Collins line. You appropriated $350,000 annually to that line and subsequently raised it to $850,000. What did you do toward building up an American merchant marine? The moment your subsidy expired your Collins line went down. You tried it in the Bremen line. What did it accomplish? You tried it in the Brazilian line. What did it accomplish? You tried it in the Pacific lines. Had you any better service then than you have in the Pacific at present? No, sir.

There is much in what the Senator from Kentucky said to-day. The subsidizing of one line excludes other lines that are not subsidized. If you conferred a million dollars upon a line running from here to Brazil you could not get up another line not subsidized to compete with it, because the moment another line should open up to that point the freights would be put down so that no competing line could exist for a single day. Your subsidies, instead of building up your merchant marine, will have a tendency to exclude competition with the lines that are subsidized.

Anxious as I am to see the American flag floating on every sea and in every port, I do not believe that the proposition of the Senator from Maine is calculated to effect that beneficent object. There are other measures that might be adopted, one of which was rejected yesterday. The proposition was made that citizens of the United States might buy their vessels in England, or in any other foreign country, and place them under the American flag and under American registry. If that measure had been agreed to in the Senate and in the other House, I have no doubt that it would have tended materially to increase the merchant marine, but it has been excluded.

In voting for that amendment (which I should have done if I had not been paired) I had no intention or disposition to injure the American ship-yards. We have them in my own State, some of the best that there are in this country. It is a matter of pride and congratulation to the citizens of our State that we have such establishments as Harlan & Hollingsworth's and Pusey, Jones & Co.'s; and no Delawarean, I am sure, would do anything purposely to injure those great establishments. I think that the adoption of the amendment which was rejected yesterday would not have injured them one iota. On the contrary, coupled with a provision for free materials, I believe it would have enhanced the interests of those establishments, as it would have of every other ship-building establishment in the country.

Sir, I can not vote for this bill. If the Senator will modify it so as to give to those lines on the Pacific coast and the lines down to South America and to Vera Cruz the whole of the earnings of those lines, I will vote for it; but when he goes further and wants to appropriate the earnings of English lines sailing from New York, from Boston, and from Philadelphia to the lines on the Pacific coast and the lines down to Brazil and to Vera Cruz, I can not vote for it.

I have said more than I intended to say upon this subject.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the attention of the Senate for a very brief period of time. I shall vote for the bill with this provision in it; for though I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], I think he would vote in that way. I have not so great sensitiveness as some gentlemen have upon the idea of aiding with the public money any great national enterprise, any great object of public policy, such as the building of an American commercial marine; for, although I can not perceive the indignity to the people of the United States in subjecting the skill and means of the English or any other foreign country to our own uses, about which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] was so eloquent yesterday, yet I do appreciate the value of a ship-building industry in this country, and I am willing to vote money reasonably and economically to accomplish it.

It might be a very nice thing for us to tell what is a subsidy. The difference between remitting the tonnage duties in favor of the shipping interest—that is, withholding from the Treasury money which by the law as it stands would be put there—for the purpose of encouraging a commercial marine, and paying it out of the Treasury after it gets there for the same purpose, is something that is a distinction of fact and not of principle. The gentlemen who are willing upon this bill to vote to remit the tonnage duties of a million dollars in favor of American shipping might just as well vote to pay the money out of the Treasury in aid of the same object; the one is just as much a subsidy as the other. So also is any other privilege to American ships a subsidy, whether it be of one kind or another. Certainly the monoply of the coast trade under the navigation laws by American-built ships is a subsidy, and a very great one to this interest, amounting annually, on the facts stated repeatedly in this discussion here, to many millions of dollars. Senators who can not vote this little amount of mail-pay do not find any difficulty in voting this vast sum in the coasting trade to American-built ships. I have no objection to it, although I have no doubt, paradoxical as it may seem, that the right to buy foreign ships, with other proper policies, will be much more efficient to induce the building of American ships than the present policy.

I should unalterably oppose any improper and wasteful expenditure of the public money for any object; but if you can by any reasonable appropriation obtain the $150,000,000 that is annually paid by American interests for transportation to foreign ports, that is a great national object, and we may afford to pay for that certainly all the profits that would be made out of the $150,000,000, and perhaps for incidental advantages of an American commercial marine a great deal more. If you could obtain it you might afford to pay $50,000,000 for it. I do not see that there would be any subsidy in any appropriation of public effort or public means that would acquire for this country $150,000,000 annually of profits from any business. It is a public object, a national object, and whatever means properly, directly, and efficiently will bring about the result of acquiring the vast business that is now done by foreign countries in American transportation is an object which may well command either an appropriation of money, or time, or any other public capacity that we have as a government.

I fail to see that if you term this public act a subsidy you by this change of terms make this change of a great annual profit from a foreign country to our own an act of bad statesmanship.

Therefore I should have no objection whatever to it, and if it be demonstrated to me that by a judicious expenditure of public money I could obtain for the American people, American enterprise, American labor, American capital, that amount of money annually, I should regard it as a very wise expenditure of the public money, whether it be done by a subsidy or not; but such an appropriation for a great object of public policy can not by any proper use of terms be called a subsidy.

The bill proposes to do what? Simply to appropriate the earnings from the foreign mail service for the encouragement of American shipping. That is to say, it is proposed to give a discretion to the Postmaster-General to contract with American-built ships for the transportation of the mails at a liberal rate. I am willing to concede that might be done very liberally, far beyond what the mail service would demand of itself and by itself, and for one I have no objection to it.

I can not see why the Postmaster-General under this bill might not contract with more than one line, with one line or two lines or three lines or any number of lines there might be, to carry the mails, and it might be judicious to have the bill so limited that he would be required to divide the mail service with more than one line if it offered. But whether that be so or not, we can not expect to acquire the $150,000,000 or any large part of it at once. It can only be done by encouraging individual efforts, single lines, single ships, and paying them whatever it is necessary to pay and within the limits of the money derived from the foreign mail service. I can not see that there could be a better appropriation of that money than to give it to American-built ships for the transportation of the mail or in any other way that would induce them to run between countries with which we desire to have commercial relations.

I therefore have no objection whatever to the passage of that section of the bill. It occurs to me that a single consideration will decide this point. We have spent some time on a bill appropriating several millions of dollars to build ships of war. This million of dollars derived from foreign mails will support, without this cost to us, ships available as ships of war built in our own country and bringing profits to our own people, and supporting many of our workingmen and their families, and will encourage the building of others. I am very glad to use the public money judiciously and economically for a great object of public policy so as to produce these results. And I am gratified that in doing so it will benefit American ship-builders of enterprise and ability and success, whether it shall be John Roach, or Harlan, or Hollingsworth, or Mr. Cramp, or other great ship-builders on the Delaware or elsewhere. I hope to see the day when a great ship-yard will be at Pensacola, Fla., and the coal and iron of Alabama be used there in building iron ships. And I shall be very glad to do whatever may be in my power as a Senator to aid in establishing the business of building American ships at Pensacola and using the steel and coal of Alabama for this purpose. I have no doubt that this side of the Chamber will support any well-considered measure that will reasonably accomplish such a result.

The difficulty is that existing policies have failed to accomplish this; that such policies can not reasonably be expected to accomplish such results. We can not create an American ship-building industry nor create and conduct an American carrying trade by eloquent speeches glorifying our own country and people and denouncing other countries. We can not pay high wages to and support American labor by eloquent descriptions of their comfort and their prosperous condition as compared with the laboring people of other countries. They must have employment; and business, trade, and the earnings of trade alone can give them employment and remunerative payment. I shall support this bill, although it stops far short of my ideas of what ought to be done; and I shall support any other bill which seeks with any degree of reason to build up either an American commercial marine or an American ship-building industry. In my opinion the two industries are entirely distinct, and neither can succeed by making its support a burden on the other.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I have not been able to find the objection to the bill which the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] finds. I have for years believed that the true policy of this Government is to carry her foreign mails under her own flag in American ships, and I so believe now.

The proposition contained in section 19 of the bill to revise section 4009 of the Revised Statutes does not tax the American people one solitary farthing. It can not in any possible or conceivable sense be said to be a subsidy. It simply authorizes the Postmaster-General to make a contract for carrying the foreign mail in his discretion, and then says:

> And the aggregate amount to be expended for such service shall not exceed the gross revenues of the Post-Office Department of the United States on mail matter sent to and received from foreign countries during the fiscal year next preceding the year in which such contracts are made, less the amount paid for transportation on foreign vessels, and the net amount paid foreign administrations for intermediary, territorial, and sea transit of such mails.

If the theory were that we can expend nothing for carrying the mails save that money which is derived from the mail revenue, then after the settlements crossed the Alleghany Mountains and extended out West there never would have been a mail carried, for it is true that from the foundation of this Government after the settlements began to spread across the Alleghany Mountains the policy of our Government has been to transmit intelligence by mail, to send the mails to the frontier settlements whether it cost more than the postal revenue or not, on the principle that the people of the United States had a right to receive their mail matter through the public means furnished by the Government for carrying the mails. So it is true that after the settlements crossed the Ohio and then the Mississippi and then the Rocky Mountains clear out to the Pacific Ocean, the mails have always been carried to the far-off regions at a cost very largely in excess of the revenues of the Postal Department. So when by law every route from a port of the United States to a foreign port is declared to be a post-road and that the mails can be carried over those great highways as over the inland routes, and the United States has the same right to pay for carrying the mails across the waters as across the land, if it be the policy of the United States Government to keep up our postal communication with all the civilized countries of the earth, then that should be kept up under our own flag and by our own mails.

But the great objection to a subsidy is removed by this bill, because it says that, while we desire this great thing to be done, we at the same time tell the Postmaster-General "do not spend one solitary dollar for that purpose over and above that which is collected from the postal revenue;" and hence it can not be said that one farthing is drawn out of the pockets of the American people more than is drawn out by the present postal laws; not one farthing is drawn out by taxation from the people to keep up foreign mail steamship lines.

For that reason, and believing that we ought to do everything that is fair and just and equitable to restore the American flag over American ships on the high seas, and seeing nothing in this that is objectionable, I shall support the bill with this clause in it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I want to submit to the honorable Senator from Maine the total absurdity of attempting to get a vote upon this bill to-night. We have reached the nineteenth section. Evidently there are a great many amendments to it, together with more that are to follow. If you were to remain here until to-morrow morning at daylight I think it would be very doubtful about getting a vote on this section at that time. I wish to submit to the Senator why it is that we are asked to remain in session all night to discuss a subject which the Senator must now see a vote can not be had upon in any reasonable time. It is entirely useless. Therefore I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Maine being heard?

Mr. FRYE. I should like to make some kind of arrangement. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this bill and the amendments to it shall close to-morrow at 4 o'clock.

Mr. MORGAN. I move as an amendment to that that no gentleman who has spoken on the bill be allowed to speak to-morrow between the time of meeting and 4 o'clock.

Mr. FRYE. I will agree to that with a great deal of pleasure. Does the Senator from Alabama object to any arrangement?

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, no; but I would allow no gentleman who has spoken on this bill to speak to-morrow between the time of meeting and 4 o'clock.

Mr. FRYE. I will agree not to say a word in the Senate from this time until the day of adjournment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I object to that.

Mr. VEST. All of us would object to that.

Mr. FRYE. If I can make a compromise with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] not to speak, I shall be happy. [Laughter.]

Mr. VEST. That will not do.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that debate shall close on the bill and amendments by 4 o'clock to-morrow.

Several SENATORS. Say 5.

Mr. FRYE. Well, I will say 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the debate shall close on this bill and the amendments to-morrow at 5 o'clock. Is there objection? [A pause.] The Chair hears none; and that is the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I have an amendment to this bill, which I propose to offer and desire very briefly to discuss, but while the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey is pending I can not offer it at this time. I will send my amendment to the Secretary's desk and ask to have it read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama proposes, when in order, to submit an amendment, which will be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

> That from and after the 1st day of January, 1885, vessels owned exclusively by citizens of the United States, or by corporations whose stockholders are all citizens of the United States, and not under any lien, incumbrance, or mortgage in favor of citizens or corporations of any foreign country, shall be admitted to registry under the laws of the United States in all respects upon the same terms and conditions as vessels built in the United States are admitted to such registry, upon the payment at the time of such registration of a duty of $15 per ton of registered tonnage on all iron and steel vessels, and $10 per ton of registered tonnage on all wooden vessels. And ships so imported and registered by American citizens may be employed in either the coastwise trade or in trade to foreign countries: Provided, That the right to import such vessels shall apply only to such vessels constructed in any foreign country as shall be built after the passage of this act.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire when I have the opportunity to ask that the amendment be inserted between sections 18 and 19 of this bill, but I shall be compelled of course to discuss it upon the amendment that is now pending of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 258) donating a part of the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, Ark., to the city of Fort Smith, for the use and benefit of the free public schools thereof and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 621) for the relief of William L. White;

A bill (S. 241) to repeal section 8 of an act entitled "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," approved June 15, 1880.

A bill (S. 269) for the relief of M. P. Jones;

A bill (S. 677) for the relief of the estates of James Vance and William Vance: and

A bill (S. 975) for the relief of T. J. Boyles, administrator of the estate of Marcus Radich, deceased.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 2334) to release the American Baptist Home Mission Society from the conditions of the sale of the Marine Hospital building and grounds at Natchez, Miss.;

A bill (H. R. 3926) to repeal the act of July 2, 1862, and such sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States as perpetuate the oath prescribed in said act.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 3967) for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle, and to provide means for the suppression and extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals; and

A bill (H. R. 1015) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

ENROLLED BILL.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 3926) amending the Revised Statutes of the United States in respect of official oaths, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 7, 1884.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. THOMAS G. ADDISON, D. D., of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

OCCUPANCY OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 5479, to prevent the unlawful occupancy of the public lands, be taken from the House Calendar for present consideration.

The bill, with the amendments reported by the Committee on the Public Lands, was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CASSIDY. I would like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] to explain the bill, subject to objection.

Objection was made.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by two or three gentlemen, and the regular order is called for. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

The Committee on the Judiciary having been called,

Mr. BROADHEAD. The Committee on the Judiciary have directed me to report back the bill which I send to the desk.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] withdraws the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is proceeding with the call of committees, but will state that the objection came from another gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. Objection having been made to the bill, I asked for the regular order.

Mr. PAYSON. Is there not some misapprehension as to this matter? The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. CASSIDY] simply desired an explanation of the provisions of the bill, reserving the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Some gentleman on the other side objected at the same time.

Mr. PAYSON. I would like to make inquiry who the gentleman was?

The SPEAKER. When the Chair has concluded the call of committees, he will again submit the request of the gentleman from Illinois for unanimous consent.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. BROADHEAD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1116) to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE J. W. LOCKE.

Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the memorial of William Bethel and others, asking the impeachment of James W. Locke, judge of the United States district court for the southern district of Florida; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FEES PAID BY VESSEL-OWNERS, ETC.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, as a substitute for H. R. 6131, to amend paragraphs 6 and 8 and to repeal paragraphs 7 and 9 of section 4382 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to fees levied and collected from the owners and masters of vessels navigating the waters on the northern frontiers of the United States, a bill (H. R. 6925) to amend sections 4381 and 4382 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to fees levied and collected from the owners and masters of vessels in domestic commerce, which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed; and the bill 6131 was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL ELECTRICAL EXHIBITION AT PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. BOYLE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 2655) to authorize the appointment of a scientific commission which may conduct a national conference of electricians and special investigations on the occasion of the international electrical exhibition to be held in Philadelphia in 1884; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

TRADE WITH SOUTH AND CENTRAL AMERICA.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 6926) to authorize the appointment of three commissioners to visit the principal countries of South and Central America, and also Mexico, for the purpose of collecting information looking to the extension of American trade and commerce and the strengthening of friendly and mutually advantageous relations between the United States and all the other American nationalities, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed; and bills of the following titles, for which the bill just reported was designed as a substitute, were laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. 124) to authorize the appointment of a special commissioner for promoting commercial intercourse with such countries of Central and South America as may be found to possess the most natural and available facilities for railway intercommunication with each other and with the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 1240) for the encouragement of closer commercial relationship and in the interests of and the perpetuation of peace between the United States and the Republics of Mexico and Central and South America and the Empire of Brazil.

MANAGEMENT OF SOLDIERS' HOMES.

Mr. ROSECRANS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Whereas experience hitherto shows a steady increase in the numbers as well as in the percentage of disease and death of the inmates of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteers, which increase will probably continue for ten or fifteen years and will demand enlarged provision for the care and maintenance of disabled soldiers; and

Whereas the board of managers of those homes, solicitous for the best possible administration thereof, have repeatedly requested Congressional examination of their system, and especially in view of certain general and specific complaints which have reached the Committee on Military Affairs as to the workings and management of some of the homes, it is desirable, for guidance in future legislation, that Congress should have full and authentic information on these matters:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and it is hereby, empowered to examine and report to this House upon the plan, practical workings, and management of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and to recommend what, if any, legislation appears necessary to insure the most effective, economical, and humane application of the funds annually appropriated by Congress to this great beneficence; and for that purpose the committee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the House, to examine by subcommittee such of the homes as it may deem necessary, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ such clerical assistance as may be required for this work, and to meet during the recess of Congress; all the necessary expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon the certificate of the chairman of the committee.

JOHN V. B. BLEEKER.

Mr. TALBOTT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 6346) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of the late John V. B. Bleeker, a pay director in the Navy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BOYNTON LEACH.

Mr. TALBOTT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6483) for the relief of Boynton Leach, late a lieutenant in the United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LANDS IN SAN MATEO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. LEWIS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 70) to authorize the correction of certain boundaries of certain lands in San Mateo County, California; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FELIX M'KITTRICK.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5333) providing for the payment of the claim of Felix McKittrick for depredations committed by the Mescalero Apache Indians, of the Territory of New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRED PHILLIPS.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 681) for the relief of Fred Phillips; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SOUTHERN KANSAS RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6110) to grant a right of way through the Indian Territory to the Southern Kansas Railway Company, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

OVERTON LOVE.

Mr. PIERCE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3772) for the relief of Overton Love and the administratrix of Wyatt Gilschrist; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

W. H. L. DOUDLE.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 3174) for the relief of W. H. L. Doudle; and
A bill (H. R. 5294) for the relief of Nicholas Hatter.

CATHARINE S. EDMONDSON.

Mr. PATTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6205) granting a pension to Catharine S. Edmondson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. PATTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 4591) granting a pension to William H. Banner;
A bill (H. R. 1333) granting a pension to P. F. Seaman;
A bill (H. R. 2654) granting a pension to Mary A. Tyson;
A bill (H. R. 2701) granting a pension to Frederick Mayer; and
A bill (H. R. 4891) for the relief of Anna Hesson.

THEODORE ARTZ.

On motion of Mr. PATTON, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2681) granting a pension to Theodore Artz; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

CATHARINA WUNSH.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 316) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharina Wunsh; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. Petition of Charles Shivers, jr., late hospital steward of the United States steamer Princess Royal.

MRS. LUCY LE G. JEFFERS.

Mr. STRUBLE. I do not desire to make a report at this time, but if in order I wish to call attention to a report made by me from the Committee on Pensions on the 30th of April, for the purpose of having a correction made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. STRUBLE. Under direction of the Committee on Pensions I made a report on the 30th of April on a bill for the benefit of Mrs. Lucy Le G. Jeffers. It seems that two bills had been introduced for the relief of Mrs. Jeffers, and I accompanied the report which I made with the wrong bill, with House bill No. 2998, for the relief of Mrs. Lucy Le G. Jeffers, widow of the late Commodore William M. Jeffers, when the House bill No. 3661 should have been the one reported. I would like to have the last bill named by me substituted for the other bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can now report that bill, and the Chair will direct that it take the place on the Calendar of the other bill.

Mr. STRUBLE. I now report back with a favorable recommendation from the Committee on Pensions the bill (H. R. 3661) granting an increase of pension to Lucy Le G. Jeffers.

The SPEAKER. The bill just reported by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] from the Committee on Pensions will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, to take the place of a bill heretofore erroneously reported by him.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

THOMAS THATCHER.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2483) for the relief of Thomas Thatcher; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ALFRED G. HATFIELD.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1368) for the relief of Alfred G. Hatfield; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HENRY J. FELTUS.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5013) for the relief of Henry J. Feltus; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ETHAN A. SAWYERS.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported adversely a bill (H. R. 3797) for the relief of Ethan A. Sawyers; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

COLUMBIA HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN, ETC.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back the joint resolution (H. Res. 241) providing for the publication of the continued report of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

MONUMENT TO THE MOTHER OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. WOODWARD, from the Committee on the Library, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 5410) for the completion of the monument to Mary, the mother of Washington, at Fredericksburg, Va.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REBECCA GOODRICH.

Mr. CONNOLLY, from the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 3253) for the relief of Rebecca Goodrich; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The remainder of the committees were then called.

The SPEAKER. This completes the list of committees to be called. Some gentlemen who were not present when their committees were called desire to make reports, and if there is no objection the Chair will recognize them to do so.

There was no objection.

NATIONAL HOME IN MICHIGAN FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. CUTCHEON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 6929) to provide for the location of a branch National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers in the State of Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. CUTCHEON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, also reported back the bill (H. R. 5050) to authorize the location of a home for disabled volunteer soldiers in the State of Michigan; and the bill (H. R. 5521) to amend chapter 3 of Title LIX of the Revised Statutes of the United States, entitled "National homes for disabled volunteer soldiers," by adding thereto section 4838, for which the bill (H. R. 6929), previously reported, was intended as a substitute; and the same were laid upon the table.

SONE & FLEMING MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4183) for the relief of the Sone & Fleming Manufacturing Company (limited), of the city of New York; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. GREENLEAF, from the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, reported a bill (H. R. 6930) to increase pensions in certain cases, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANT NAVAL CONSTRUCTORS.

Mr. HARMER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6516) regulating the appointment of assistant naval constructors; which was placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM C. DODGE.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Patents, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5917) for the relief of William C. Dodge; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. LE FEVRE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported adversely the following bills; which were severally laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 2165) granting a pension to Robert Bryant;
A bill (H. R. 2166) granting a pension to James Kitchen;
A bill (H. R. 3652) for the relief of Benjamin Burchett; and
A bill (H. R. 4967) for the relief of Robert M. Dore.

TAXATION OF BANK SHARES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SPRIGGS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6629) taxing shares of incorporated banks in the District of Columbia as other personal property; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN MARINE CORPS.

Mr. MCADOO, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1852) to regulate appointments and promotions in the staff of the Marine Corps; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SALE OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY AT HARPER'S FERRY.

Mr. DIBBLE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 1628) authorizing and directing the sale of the real estate and riparian rights now owned by the United States at Harper's Ferry, in the State of West Virginia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to make a privileged report. By instruction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I report a bill making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes. This is the bill commonly known as the river and harbor bill. I ask that it may be printed with the accompanying report and recommitted.

It is proper to state that upon one item in this bill—that in relation to the Hennepin Canal—the committee were divided. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] and other members of the committee, including myself, were of the opinion that this item was not properly before the committee. Instead, however, of filing a minority report, we have reserved to ourselves the right to oppose this item in the House and to give our reasons for that opposition when the matter comes up for discussion.

Mr. HAMMOND. I reserve points of order on the bill.

The bill (H. R. 6931) was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, recommitted and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SLOCUM. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Before putting that motion the Chair thinks it proper to state there is thought to have been some mistake about an objection made to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] for the consideration of a bill in relation to the unlawful occupancy of the public lands. The Clerk will report the title of the bill again, and the Chair will then ask whether there is objection.

Mr. PAYSON. Before the Clerk reads the title I desire unanimous consent, if it be in order, to occupy two minutes in explaining the bill before objections are called for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to make a statement——

Mr. MORRISON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. PAYSON. By whom?

Mr. MORRISON. By your colleague.

Mr. PAYSON. I have a right to know, I suppose.

Mr. MORRISON. Very well, sir; you know.

Mr. BELFORD. I shall object hereafter to anything being done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM], that the House now proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table,

The question being taken, there were—ayes 70, noes 64.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, and Mr. SLOCUM were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 102, noes 59.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not insist further upon the demand for a quorum.

So the motion to proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table was agreed to.

REPEAL OF TEST-OATH.

The first business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3926) to repeal the act of July 2, 1862, and such sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States as perpetuate the oath prescribed in said act.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments of the Senate. The House will be in order.

Mr. BELFORD. I rise to a question of privilege. I am a member of this House; and I have a right to know what is being read at the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so, and is endeavoring to obtain order.

Mr. BELFORD. If gentlemen on the floor can not keep quiet, I think they should be put under the supervision of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen in the rear of the seats will please stop conversation.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 1218 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 1218. No person who held a commission in the Army or Navy of the United States at the beginning of the late rebellion, and afterward served in any capacity in the military, naval, or civil service of the so-called Confederate States, or of either of the States in insurrection, during the late rebellion, shall be appointed to any position in the Army or Navy of the United States.'

"'SEC. 2. That section 1756 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and hereafter the oath to be taken by any person elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit, either in the civil, military, or naval service, except the President of the United States, shall be as prescribed in section 1757 of the Revised Statutes. But this repeal shall not affect the oaths prescribed by existing statutes in relation to the performance of duties in special or particular subordinate offices and employments.

"'SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall in no manner affect any right, duty, claim, obligation, or penalty now existing or already incurred; and all and every such right, duty, claim, obligation, and penalty shall be heard, tried, and determined, and effect shall be given thereto, in the same manner as if this act had not been passed.

"'SEC. 4. That section 820 of the Revised Statutes, imposing certain disqualifications on grand and petit jurors in the courts of the United States, and section 821 of the Revised Statutes, prescribing an oath for grand and petit jurors in the courts of the United States, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.'

"Amend the title of the bill so as to read: 'An act amending the Revised Statutes of the United States in respect of official oaths, and for other purposes.'"

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to concur in the amendments of the Senate; or if any gentleman would like to non-concur, I am willing that motion shall be made.

Mr. KEIFER. Would it not be better to refer the bill, with the amendments of the Senate, to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. COX, of New York. No, sir. I am informed by Senators on both sides that they have done just about as well as they can do with the bill. That is the opinion of Senator LOGAN and Senator GARLAND.

Mr. KEIFER. Our own Judiciary Committee has not examined the matter, I believe.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to concur in the amendments of the Senate. I will state that this substitute relieves Congressmen from the obligation to take the iron-clad oath; it also relieves jurors from disqualification on account of inability to take that oath. It continues in force the old law so far as concerns future Presidents of the United States.

The third section of the Senate substitute saves all rights, prevents all possibility of trouble growing out of the repeal of the test-oath. It is, I think, the general sentiment that this oath should be repealed as to Senators and Representatives in Congress and as to jurors in the United States courts.

It leaves the law stand so far as the President of the United States hereafter to be elected is concerned, and compels him to take the old iron-clad oath in case he was a rebel, so called.

It keeps the present law in existence so far as it concerns officers who hold commissions under the United States and who graduated at West Point or Annapolis. Therefore this bill as amended is not all I could wish. It is all I could get, I know, by a committee of conference. The Senate has passed it, the Judiciary Committee in the Senate have approved it, and I call the previous question on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendment to the title will also be concurred in.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. COX, of New York, moved to reconsider the votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. 1015) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, returned from the Senate with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Fitz-John Porter, late a major-general of the United States Volunteers and a brevet brigadier-general and colonel of the Army, to the position of colonel in the Army of the United States, of the same grade and rank held by him at the time of his dismissal from the Army by sentence of court-martial promulgated January 27, 1863, and, in his discretion, to place him on the retired-list of the Army as of that grade, the retired-list being thereby increased in number to that extent; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only: Provided, That said Fitz-John Porter shall receive no pay, compensation, or allowance whatsoever prior to his appointment under this act."

Mr. KEIFER. I move the reference of that bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SLOCUM. I move to amend by substituting for that motion that the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. That can not be moved as a substitute.

Mr. SLOCUM. Then I move as an amendment to the gentleman's motion that the Committee on Military Affairs have power to report at any time.

Mr. RANDALL. A motion to concur or non-concur has precedence, I think.

Mr. KEIFER. That would change the standing rule in reference to this bill that the first motion in coming up as it does is a motion for reference.

Mr. RANDALL. If I recollect aright a motion to concur or a motion to non-concur has precedence over a motion to refer.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. RANDALL. I may be, but I think not.

Mr. KEIFER. The rule provides the order, and a motion to refer takes precedence.

Mr. RANDALL. The House has the right to conclude legislation by such motion of concurrence rather than to retard action by a motion to recommit.

Mr. KEIFER. Allow me to say the gentleman has reference to matters not on the Speaker's table, when a motion to concur or a motion to non-concur may be made and will take precedence.

Mr. RANDALL. I may have forgotten and confused the old with the new rule, but I think not.

The SPEAKER. The rule will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

5. Unfinished business having been disposed of, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House do now proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, which, the motion prevailing, the Speaker shall dispose of in the following order:

First. Messages from the President and other executive communications.

Second. Messages from the Senate and amendments proposed by the Senate to bills of the House.

Third. Bills and resolutions from the Senate on their first and second reading, that they be referred to committees or put on their passage; and the motions so to refer shall have precedence of all other motions touching their disposition.

Fourth. Engrossed bills and bills from the Senate on their third reading.

The SPEAKER. That rule, as to references, relates only to Senate bills, and this is a House bill with a Senate amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The theory of the rule, and of all rules indeed, is in the direction of completing legislation by concurrence in amendments between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read also in reference to priority of motions, from which it appears there is nothing contained in the written rules of the House on this subject. It is a matter of practice only.

Mr. SLOCUM. I hope the House will vote down the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

4. When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, to take a recess, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motions shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer or amend, or to postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question.

The SPEAKER. It will be observed that this rule does not seem to have any application to House bills with Senate amendments. The Chair is not aware of any positive rule of the House on that subject. It is a mere matter of practice.

Mr. RANDALL. And the practice has been to give precedence to motions which have for their object the completion of legislation.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker, we have passed this bill through the House. It went to the Senate. The Senate added an amendment to it. It came back here, and the only thing for us to do is to concur or non-concur in that amendment of the Senate. If the House refuses to concur, it must, in the nature of things, go to a committee of conference. This attempt, then, to have it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs is a stealthy attempt to avoid doing justice to a man whom General Grant, one of the greatest generals of your Army, said had been treated with contumely and injustice. I say, under the rules of this House, the only procedure is to concur or non-concur in the Senate amendment, and then, if we non-concur, to send the whole subject to a conference committee.

I have been in this House for eight years, and I have never understood that it adopted any other rule, and I do not propose to stand by the Republican side of prejudices or partisanship in this case against the greatest general of the American Army, who has certified to the fact that injustice has been done to this man.

Mr. SLOCUM. I move the previous question.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. What motion is now pending?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has moved to refer the Senate amendments to the Committee on Military Affairs. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] moved to non-concur in the Senate amendments, and the point of order was made that the vote should first be taken upon the motion to non-concur.

Mr. BAYNE. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that motion would take precedence.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to say a word upon that subject.

Mr. SLOCUM. I have demanded the previous question.

Mr. BAYNE. That may be so, but the gag law can not be and should not be applied to this case; and I have the floor now and I will not yield.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York insist upon the demand for the previous question?

Mr. SLOCUM. I do.

Mr. BAYNE. Not while I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The demand was made before the gentleman took the floor.

Mr. BAYNE. But I have the floor now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the demand for the previous question was made before the gentleman obtained the floor; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it will be remembered, obtained the floor upon the statement that he desired to make a parliamentary inquiry, which, of course, gave him the right to be recognized for that purpose only.

Mr. REED. But can the previous question be moved until the point of order is decided as to which motion takes precedence?

The SPEAKER. Pending the point of order the Chair thinks not, and that the demand for the previous question would have no effect.

Mr. REED. Is it not necessary, then, before the previous question is moved, to know on what it can be moved?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so, and was about to decide the point of order.

Mr. REED. Therefore the point of order must be decided before the previous question is ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to have read, as bearing upon this subject, what I send to the desk from the Digest.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONCURRENCE.

[The question which first arises on a resolution, amendment, or conference report, is on concurrence. And as the negative of concurrence amounts to the affirmative of non-concurrence, no question is afterward put on the latter motion. This, however, does not apply in the Committee of the Whole to a negative vote on a motion to lay aside a bill to be reported favorably to the House. In such case the bill is not to be reported adversely to the House, but retains its place on the Calendar and is subject to further debate and amendment.]

Mr. RANDALL. That bears directly upon this point, and I submit the practice as there stated governs the House; therefore that the motion of the gentleman to concur takes precedence, for that being voted down is equivalent to non-concurrence and ends the subject.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the Chair permit me a moment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman from New York had moved the previous question, the gentleman from Ohio could not have made the motion to refer.

The SPEAKER. That was not done until after the motion to refer was made.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But the gentleman from Ohio having made the motion to recommit to the Committee on Military Affairs, the question then came up whether the motion to concur took precedence of the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. No; if the gentleman from Iowa will permit the Chair to correct him, the question was whether the motion to non-concur had preference over the motion to refer the amendments to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chair stated when the gentleman from Pennsylvania submitted his parliamentary inquiry that in his opinion the motion to concur would take precedence.

Mr. RANDALL. And the Chair is sustained by the paragraph I have just caused to be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so stated to the gentleman from Pennsylvania in response to his inquiry; and the question before the Chair is whether the motion to non-concur has preference over the motion to commit.

Mr. RANDALL. And that motion is not necessary, because as shown by the practice of the House the adverse action of the House on the motion to concur is equivalent to a motion to non-concur.

The SPEAKER. But that motion had not been made before the previous question was demanded.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Now, Mr. Speaker, a moment upon that point. If the gentleman from Ohio had risen in his place and moved that the House concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, nobody for a moment would have doubted that it was in order, for that is the common practice of parliamentary law. The motion to recommit takes precedence of the motion to amend, and consequently the motion of the gentleman from Ohio takes precedence of a motion to non-concur, for a motion to amend would take precedence of a motion to concur.

And I have no doubt—I may be wrong; I hesitate always to oppose the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], knowing how well versed he is in parliamentary law—but I have no doubt if the House wants to refer before it considers the question of concurrence or non-concurrence, it can do so, and do so in conformity with the rules.

Mr. KEIFER. It is very obvious that the gentleman from Pennsylvania states the rule accurately when he says the motion to concur shall take precedence of the motion to non-concur. But that is not the question presented here. It is the question whether a motion to refer to one of the standing committees shall take precedence of the motion to non-concur, which I understand is the motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM]. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the motion to refer can be made at all it must take precedence of a motion to concur or non-concur. If we are to vote on the motion to concur or non-concur first, we in so doing dispose of the whole matter and take it out of the power of the House to refer a bill with Senate amendments to one of the standing committees of the House; and it is impossible to reach the motion to refer at all.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, the will of the majority prevails, nevertheless.

Mr. KEIFER. I like that statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania very well. I have always believed in the doctrine that the will of the majority should prevail. But this is a question of how that will shall be expressed; whether the majority shall be allowed to vote on a question of reference, or whether we shall give such construction to our standing rules as shall cut off the making of one of the most appropriate motions provided by the rules, to wit, a motion to refer a subject-matter before the House to one of the standing committees of the House. The gentleman's construction of the rule would deprive the House of the right to have this matter referred to a committee for consideration; it would deprive the House of the right to have that question voted upon at all.

It is very true that the House can decide this question by a majority. It can vote down the motion for a reference, as in the case of bills from the Senate on their third reading, as to which it is very clear from paragraph 5 of Rule XXIV, the motion to refer is the first motion in order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania might just as well state, as against that, that it abridges the right of the House, because the House might want to consider in the first instance, and not to vote on the question of reference.

The practice has been, I submit, that a motion to refer any matter that may be found on the Speaker's table shall take precedence. Then a motion to concur or a motion to non-concur may be in order, and if both are made the former takes precedence.

Mr. RANDALL. I dissent from the view expressed by the gentleman from Ohio. There being, as has been stated by the Speaker, no rule absolutely fixing, in the condition in which this bill is, the priority of a motion to refer or a motion to concur, we are left to the practice as stated in the passage of the Manual which I have caused to be read; and if the gentleman from Ohio now insists that when a bill which has been passed by the House and returned from the Senate with amendments is reached on the Speaker's table a motion can be interposed to refer before a motion of concurrence or non-concurrence, I ask the decision of the Chair on that question.

Mr. SLOCUM. I withdraw the motion for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] withdraws his demand for the previous question and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] moves to concur.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to concur, and I want to say a word on that motion.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman pardon me one moment? Has the Chair decided the question of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion to concur under the practice of the House has precedence over a motion to refer to a committee. Substantially it comes to the same thing. It is merely a question which motion shall come first. If a majority of the House is in favor of committing, it can vote down the motion to concur. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] withdrew his demand for the previous question, and thereupon the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] obtained the floor and made the motion to concur.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, but I will say I do not think it is in accordance with the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the purpose of all parliamentary law is to bring the two Houses together if possible, and if there is no positive rule to the contrary such a practice should be adopted as will tend to produce that result at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. BAYNE. I have only a word or two to say.

Mr. SLOCUM. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania five minutes.

Mr. BAYNE. I have made my motion and speak in my own time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] has the floor.

Mr. BAYNE. This bill as it comes back from the Senate is substantially the same bill as passed the House. An impression went abroad and was published in some of the newspapers of the country that the bill which was passed by the House allowed back pay. That was not the fact. I myself had proposed an amendment in the House with the concurrence of the gentleman on my right who supported the bill, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], and with the concurrence of the gentlemen on that side who agreed to it that there should be no back pay; and we inserted words in the bill in the shape of an amendment that shut out all back pay. The bill was passed by the House in that form. It was the understanding of every one in the House that it did not carry with it back pay. It went over to the Senate and the Senate modified the bill in a single particular; that is, it emphasized or made perhaps a little more definite or more explicit the proposition of the bill that it should not carry back pay.

Nobody wants the bill to carry back pay; nobody expects it to carry back pay. The bill is now just what the friends of Fitz-John Porter ask for and insist upon. I say that good faith to Fitz-John Porter, good faith to the integrity of legislation, requires that we shall vote to concur in the Senate amendment and let this bill go to the President for his approval or disapproval. That is all that is involved in this motion to concur. It is simply a concurrence in the proposition put in the bill by the Senate, which proposition means exactly the same as the proposition which was put into the bill by the House. The proposition of the Senate perhaps makes the meaning a little more clear and a little more explicit, but nevertheless it means that and means nothing more.

I say, therefore, that the fair, square, honest vote on this bill is to vote to concur in the Senate amendment and let the bill go to the President for his approval or disapproval. That is all I have to say.

Mr. KEIFER. I think we should be heard in opposition to this motion to concur. I do not expect to take more than a minute or two for what I have to say. The pending proposition is to concur with the Senate in an amendment to a bill passed by the House some time since. There is nothing very materially different in the amendment of the Senate from the original bill, unless it be in the respect mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

I do not propose to discuss now the broad merits of the proposed legislation. I am satisfied with what I have hitherto said upon that subject. I believe that to enact this bill into a law will be a very dangerous precedent, and I am sorry that it has been reserved to this Congress to consummate this outrage upon the patriotic and brave soldiers of the country.

But my purpose in rising was to call attention to what I have not hitherto heard mentioned this session, though it may have been. This is a proposition that is startling in this respect: this bill proposes to create an entirely new office, one that is wholly unknown to the law or to the Constitution of the United States. The proposition is to create the office of "a colonel in the Army." There never was such an office in the United States Army as "a colonel in the Army." Some gentlemen may wish to controvert that, but I guess they will not.

There are colonels of regiments in the Army; there are perhaps colonels connected with the staff corps of the Army, both in the volunteer and regular Army. But the proposition of this bill is to create a new office. Of course that proposition standing alone by itself might be done by law.

But what is proposed still further is to declare by this bill that that single office created by this proposed law shall be only filled by the President of the United States in exercising his constitutional power, by the appointment of one man, to wit, Fitz-John Porter, a man who was dismissed from the service, after a full trial, for disobedience of orders, &c. Therefore the constitutional power of the President to make appointments is here limited so that he has not the discretion which was given him by the Constitution to make selections to fill an office created by law. I need not stop to read that portion of the Constitution.

This method of legislation would enable the Congress of the United States to usurp all the executive power to fill offices created by law, or to compel the President to fill all such offices by just such persons as the Congress might name. Suppose, for instance, we should create an additional judge of the United States court; we might say that the office of judge of the court so created for such and such a district, or whatever judge we chose to make it, shall be filled by the President by the appointment of John Smith or some other person named by Congress. We could in that way always direct the President in the exercise of his appointing power, and take away from him that discretion which was supposed to have been secured to him and was secured to him by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. RANNEY. It is not obligatory upon the President in this case.

Mr. KEIFER. It is suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] that it is not obligatory upon the President to appoint Fitz-John Porter to this office of "a colonel in the Army;" that it is only a matter of discretion. But suppose we were creating an additional justice of the Supreme Court, as has been done in years past by Congress increasing the number of the justices of that court; we might say that for the office of justice of the Supreme Court so created the President might exercise his discretion by appointing the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY], which would be a very good appointment, no doubt. But if we followed in that bill the terms of this bill it would not leave the President the right to appoint to that office the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND].

I do not know that I desire to pursue this matter further at present. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] has intimated to me that he desired some time upon this matter. I will ask him how much time he wants?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I should like to have fifteen minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. I will yield to the gentleman for fifteen minutes and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This bill is now before the House once more and comes to us in precisely the form which my amendment would have given it, if adopted, on the 1st of February last. At that time, as appears from the RECORD, I moved to strike from the bill the words "together with all the rights, titles, and privileges," calling the attention of the House then to the fact that among those "rights, titles, and privileges" to which this bill would have restored Fitz-John Porter was the right, title, and privileges of a major-general of volunteers, which rank he held at the time of his dismissal. The Senate of the United States has adopted the amendment which this House then refused to adopt; and the bill is now before us for further consideration.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is to pass. I suppose that this amendment is to be concurred in. But before this act is consummated and before this last record upon this case is made in this House, I desire for the second and the last time to be heard for a few moments.

I suppose, as was said the other day by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] in debating the tariff bill, that though one should rise from the dead and bring a message to this House to-day protesting in the name of all the martyrs slain and all the heroes buried on a thousand bloody fields, it would not prevent the passage of this bill. But if it be passed, Mr. Speaker, it shall be passed over my most earnest and repeated protest; and I stand here, Mr. Speaker, to make that protest, in the name of those 2,000,000 men who bore the flag of our country through four years of bloody war, against this act of sacrilege and to protest also in the name of the living heroes who gave their blood as the token of their devotion not only to the cause of their country, but also in token of their devotion to military subordination and obedience to orders.

I come not this morning, Mr. Speaker, to address further words to the gentlemen on the other side of the House. I am satisfied it would be in vain. But I have a few words in conclusion to the gentlemen who sit about me on this side of the House. During my five months' of service here I have never yet found it necessary to utter the word "Democrat" or the word "Republican" in the debates here. Upon every measure that has come before me I have sought to act according to its merits, without regard to party lines. We are told that this is not and can not be made a party question; that there is nothing in the nature of the case that would constitute it a party question. With all deference to my brethren on this side of the House who voted for this bill on its passage before, I beg to differ from them. I say that this is and from its nature must be to a certain extent and in a certain sense a party question. The policy of the two great parties in the prosecution of the war is on trial here this morning, and more than that, Mr. Speaker, to-day the three greatest names of the Republican party, Abraham Lincoln, Edwin M. Stanton, and James A. Garfield, are deeply involved; and you can not give a vote for this bill unless you give a vote to defame the name of Abraham Lincoln, to blacken the memory of Edwin M. Stanton, and to send down to posterity with obloquy the name of our last great martyr, James A. Garfield. [Applause.]

Mr. BELFORD. Tell us about General Grant.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In due time. Mr. Speaker, just before the events involved in this bill transpired there occurred a great and wide departure between the two great parties in this country in regard to the prosecution of the war.

When George B. McClellan, commander of the Army of the Potomac, changed his base from the Chickahominy to the James and withdrew from Malvern Hill to Harrison's Landing, McClellan joined issue with Abraham Lincoln in regard to the policy of the prosecution of the war; and from that time on there was a vital difference of policy between the two great parties.

The policy of the administration, which was arraigned by the eloquent gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] in the closing speech of the previous debate on this bill, was the policy of emancipation, the prosecution of the war for the purpose of wiping out that great institution which was the cause of the war. The policy of the Democratic party as voiced by George B. McClellan in his famous letter from Harrison's Landing was the perpetuation of the institution of slavery, the cessation of the war, and the reconstruction of the Union upon that basis.

On the 28th of June, 1862, George B. McClellan telegraphed from the front, saying:

If I save this army now, I tell you plainly that I owe no thanks to you—

This was his telegram to the President of the United States—

I owe no thanks to you or any other man in Washington. You have done—

Addressing these words to Abraham Lincoln—

you have done your best to sacrifice this army.

A more indiscreet dispatch was never penned by a commanding general to his commander-in-chief. It was an attempt upon the part of George B. McClellan to alienate the allegiance and the loyalty and the fidelity of the great army which he commanded from the Government, and to attach it to himself. It was a part of that same transaction of which General Daniel E. Sickles boasted in his after-dinner speech at Detroit two years ago at the reunion of the Army of the Potomac—that "McClellan might have been dictator of the United States." Mr. Speaker, the man does not now live, the man never has lived, who could be dictator of the United States. [Applause.]

But George B. McClellan became from that time forth the mouthpiece and the voice of the Democratic policy of the war—the policy of the preservation of the institution of slavery. Abraham Lincoln was the representative of the opposite policy. And here and now Fitz-John Porter stands as the exponent of the Democratic policy of the war. And those who oppose this bill stand here as the defenders of the administration of Abraham Lincoln and those who stood with him. There is a difference heaven-wide between those two policies, and I believe this very difference of policies is the key-note of the disobedience of Fitz-John Porter at the battle of Manassas on the 28th of August, 1862.

When this case arose George B. McClellan had been practically removed from command of the Army of the Potomac. Division after division and corps after corps of his army had been taken from his command and placed under the command of General John Pope, who was in accord with the political policy of the administration. It was the full determination of those who sympathized with McClellan, among them Fitz-John Porter, to restore that command once more to McClellan's hands. There was but one way to do it, and that was to force the Army of the Potomac and the Army of Virginia back into the works around Washington, where McClellan by right of seniority would be commander of the reunited army. That was the key to the whole situation. It was an issue between the Democratic policy of the war with the preservation of slavery and Lincoln's policy of the war, which was emancipation.

And, gentlemen, we are here to-day enacting the last scene of that great contest. As I said before, I suppose this bill will be passed; but I appeal to gentlemen on this side of the House, if it be passed, it shall not be passed by the votes of those who belong on this side of the House. If the name of Abraham Lincoln is to be blackened let it come from the same hands that fought against him in the war. Let it come from the same men who, during those four years, were accustomed in their common speech to denounce him as Lincoln the tyrant, as Lincoln the harlequin. If James A. Garfield's memory is to be smirched here to-day, let it be done by the same men who in 1880 crawled under cover of darkness to write cabalistic figures on door-posts and fences, in order that they might by innuendo traduce the name of Garfield; by the same men who sent forged letters by the car-load to California and New Jersey, to obtain by fraud electoral votes which otherwise they could not have gained. I beg my Republican associates here not to lend their aid to complete and consummate this outrage and this sacrifice.

I do not care here and now to re-enter upon the merits of this case. Since I addressed the committee before on this subject new evidence has come into my possession which I would be glad to present, but I suppose it will make no difference whatever. I have a letter from a gentleman who resides in this city who was then an officer on the staff of Major-General Pope, and on that night in question, the night of the 27th and 28th of August, 1862, was sent back from Bristoe Station to Warrenton Junction to bring up a regiment which had been left on picket by oversight. He declares he marched over that very road that very night at the very hour Fitz-John Porter should have been marching over it, and it lay open and clear and bright under the starlight, and that anybody who tells him that there was any difficulty about marching that night knows not of what he affirms.

I have another letter from an old commander of mine, who at that very time commanded one of the divisions of Reno's corps, and he stated his command marched until after midnight on both those nights. He says he was present at a council of war on the 28th, when this matter was discussed, and there Maj. Gen. Phil. Kearny, in the presence of General Pope and General McDowell and General Reno and General Stevens, declared to General Pope he need expect no co-operation from Fitz-John Porter, for he would afford none; that they were determined the Army of the Potomac should be forced back within the forts of Washington, in order that McClellan might be restored to the command of the reunited armies. This brigade commander, I wish to say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], is no other than Brig. Gen. Daniel Leasure, who raised the One hundredth Pennsylvania "round head" regiment in his own city of Allegheny.

So far as I am concerned I submit this question to this committee. If it is passed it will be, in my judgment, one of the greatest wrongs in history. It will be saying to major-generals in our regular Army that obedience or disobedience is a matter of choice with them and not a matter of military necessity. It will be revoking the judgment of the greatest court-martial that ever sat on this continent. It will be to dishonor the memory of Abraham Lincoln. It will be to consign to obloquy the names of Edwin M. Stanton and James A. Garfield.

Mr. KEIFER. I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire very briefly to discuss the question which is now pending. It has been my fortune once or twice before to call the other side of the House back to the Constitution, and this morning I shall make a few remarks in that same line, and believe that I shall be able to furnish some good Democratic authorities, and which I will commend to the consideration of the other side. First I will read a provision of the Constitution of the United States touching the powers and duties of the President:

He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint embassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

"He shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint embassadors, &c., and all other officers of the United States." It is to these words I invite attention.

The sole limitation on the appointing power of the President is the Senate.

Sir, we have before us a bill which manifestly creates the office of colonel in the Army of the United States, and after having created that office limits the President in making his selection of a proper person to fill it to one person—Fitz-John Porter. The other day a bill was here in which it was sought to limit the appointment of governors in the Territories to the persons resident within the Territories respectively, and I found gentlemen upon the other side of the House that agreed with me that that bill was a limitation upon the constitutional power of the President in making his appointments, and I have been informed that a committee of the Senate has so decided. Suppose that this bill, instead of creating the office of a colonel in the Army, had created the office of an additional judge of the Supreme Court of the United States and at the same time limited the appointing power of the President to a single individual to fill that high position; or suppose that it had been a law limiting the appointment of a judge or of a governor of a Territory to one, two, three, or more individuals, would my friends defend the constitutionality of such a law? There is not an office or a position that I could not invoke here to illustrate the position I take. As to offices created by act of Congress, it is within the power of Congress to repeal the statutes creating them, and once having repealed the statute you can pass new laws creating new offices with the same jurisdiction as the old ones, and limiting the power of the President to fill them with a particular individual, if this bill is constitutional. But I have said, sir, that I had some Democratic authority upon the question. I have that which is entitled to consideration from the Democratic side of the House and which I trust they will respect. In 1821 a law was passed by Congress to reduce and fix the military and peace establishment of the United States. It will be remembered that at that time James Monroe was President of the United States.

It was sought to limit the appointing power of the President to particular individuals or classes of individuals that he should nominate as officers in the Army. I believe that John C. Calhoun was then Secretary of War, and I have before me a message of the President to Congress, some portions of which I shall take the liberty of reading. This is what President Monroe says upon that question:

In filling the original vacancies in the artillery and in the newly created office of adjutant-general, I considered myself at liberty to place in them any officer belonging to any part of the whole military establishment, whether of the staff or line. In filling original vacancies, that is offices newly created, it is my opinion, as a general principle, that Congress have no right, under the Constitution, to impose any restraint by law on the power granted to the President so as to prevent his making a free selection of proper persons for these offices from the whole body of his fellow-citizens. Without, however, entering here into that question, I have no hesitation in declaring it as my opinion that the law fully authorized a selection from any branch of the whole military establishment of 1815.

A little further on in the same message he uses this language:

Having already suggested my impression that in filling offices newly created to which on no principle whatever any one could have a claim of right Congress could not, under the Constitution, restrain the free selection of the President from the whole body of his fellow-citizens, I shall only further remark that if that impression is well founded all objections to these appointments must cease. If the law imposed such restraint it would in that case be void. But according to my judgment the law imposed none.

Again, in another place, he says:

If the right of the President to fill these original vacancies by the selection of officers from any branch of the whole military establishment was denied he would be compelled to place in them officers of the same grade whose corps had been reduced and they with them. The effect, therefore, of the law as to those appointments would be to legislate into office men who had been already legislated out of office, taking from the President all agency in their appointment. Such a construction would not only be subversive of the obvious principle of the Constitution but utterly inconsistent with the spirit of the law itself, since it would provide offices for a particular grade, and fix every member of that grade in those offices at a time when every other grade was reduced, and among them generals and other officers of the highest merit.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. From what is the gentleman reading?

Mr. ROSECRANS. May I ask the gentleman from New York a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. After I have answered the question of my colleague. He asks from what I am reading. I am reading Niles's Register, from March, 1822, to September of that year. This I believe is the new series which I hold in my hand, and the message from which I read, and to which I call the attention of the House, will be found on page 410 and following.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from California, but as my time is limited I hope he will be as brief as he can.

Mr. ROSECRANS. My question is this: The offices about the filling of which the gentleman has just been reading were permanent offices, as I understand; they continued and were to be filled successively as long as the law stood. Is that the case?

Mr. HISCOCK. I have not looked particularly to see if there was a limitation upon the time those offices were to be held, but I presume there was none.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Then I will ask the gentleman this question. In his experience does he not know Congress has authorized the appointment——

Mr. HISCOCK. My time being limited, I will anticipate the question. I do know that Congress has passed repeated acts authorizing the President to nominate to the Senate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint men to the Army with a provision afterward in the law for their retirement. I know all that, and I know there is precedent for this bill. But I believe the time is now reached when we may as well meet that constitutional question and have it disposed of.

Mr. MAGINNIS. What will the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] do with the acts of Congress already passed? The law provides that the President shall not have the right of selection of officers of the Army below the rank of general. All others are promoted in accordance with and his choice is limited by the rule of seniority. What would he do with the law making Grant General of the armies, and after Grant's election to the Presidency promoting Sherman to be General and Sheridan to be Lieutenant-General? There was the act restoring Granville O. Haller to the Army after that officer's dismissal. A bill recently passed to place General Averill on the retired-list and many other acts of the same nature have become laws. Certainly if these laws are unconstitutional the courts have never so decided, and the Congress is late in finding out the fact.

Mr. HISCOCK. The first point suggested by the question I can not in my limited time discuss at any length. If the laws regulating promotions can be defended as constitutional, it will be under that clause of the Constitution which grants to Congress the power "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces of the United States." There may be some other provision; I have none in my mind that justifies promotions under a rule of seniority; but this provision, I believe, is the warrant for it, and was so understood and construed by the fathers of the Constitution, but it does not apply to or countenance the appointment of a particular man from civil life to the office of colonel in the Army by act of Congress. And now, sir, I will read the act approved July 25, 1866, Thirty-ninth Congress, first session, (14 Stat., page 223, chapter 232), the law under which General Grant was made General of the Army:

An act to revive the grade of General of the United States Army.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the grade of "General of the Army of the United States" be, and the same is hereby, revived; and that the President is hereby authorized, whenever he deem it expedient, to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a General of the Army of the United States, to be selected from among those officers in the military service of the United States most distinguished for courage, skill, and ability, who, being commissioned as General, may be authorized under the direction and during the pleasure of the President to command the armies of the United States.

It will be noted, the General of the Army was to be "selected from among those officers in the military service of the United States most distinguished for courage, skill, and ability, who, being commissioned as General, may be authorized under the direction and during the pleasure of the President to command the Army of the United States."

Promotion on account of great merit and enlargement of authority may well be said to come within the power "to make rules for the government and regulation of" the Army. Note, no one was named. All understood upon whom the great honor would be conferred, and I doubt not, but for the constitutional provision I first read, General Grant would have been named in the law. I frankly say, however, I am entering somewhat into the field of conjecture upon that point, as I have not examined the debates or report of the committee that reported that act, if one was made.

Mr. Speaker, admitting that laws have been passed that afford precedents for this bill is no answer to my objection. I ask if there is a lawyer upon either side of the House that believes a law of this character would be constitutional which provided for filling a civil office—any branch of it? And where lies the distinction?

The constitutional question may never have been raised; but when raised it must be passed upon honestly.

It is true that there are but very few authorities upon this question. In this case which I have before me the Senate considered the question of rejecting the nominations of President Monroe because he had not complied with the law. The question was fairly presented by a conflict between the Senate, the confirming power, and the President; and he said in reference to it, "Congress has no power to limit me in making my nominations. I have the right to take my nominees from the body of my fellow-citizens. I do not believe the law which you passed does limit me; you seem to think that it does. If I am right and it does not, then for that reason my nominations are not to be rejected; on the other hand, if it does limit me, then I say the law is unconstitutional, and you can not reject the nominations because I have not regarded the restrictions."

I believe John C. Calhoun was then Secretary of War. Doubtless this message emanated from his pen. Certainly it is authority that should command respect from every gentleman upon the other side of the House.

I hope this bill will be committed to the Committee on the Judiciary, that the very learned and able chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], with such associates as he has, including my very able colleague from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER], may bring in here a report passing upon this constitutional question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will yield me three minutes longer.

Mr. KEIFER. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, we have passed several bills in this House in which the same principle is involved. This has become a serious question. I urge the House, on account of those bills and with reference to a multitude like them that are now pending on our Calendar, that this case, a leading case, be sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, that they may pass upon the question. And I can most properly urge it in view of this message delivered by a Democratic President and which discusses this question, advancing the point and the argument which I have made here, or rather repeated. I desire further, in this connection, to have read from the Clerk's desk the opinion of one of the ablest lawyers who ever adorned the United States Senate, upon this same question, the late Senator Carpenter.

The Clerk read as follows:

There is another grosser violation of the Constitution, which has existed so long that perhaps it never can be corrected; and that is provided by law for the appointment of officers in the Army and Navy, and how they shall be promoted. General Sherman is as much an officer of the United States as the Chief-Justice. What does the Constitution say in regard to all officers of the United States? It says that the President shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint all the officers of the United States except where by law the appointment of inferior officers may be lodged with the President alone, the heads of Departments, or the courts of law. The commanding general of the Army is certainly not an inferior officer; and yet he is an officer of the United States, and so down through the ranks of the Army, the subordinate generals to the colonels of regiments, and lieutenant-colonels, and majors, and captains, and so on. They are all officers of the United States, who, the Constitution says, shall be nominated by the President, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be by him appointed.

Where do we get the authority for declaring by law whom he shall nominate? Suppose the President happens to know that the man entitled by promotion to the next grade of rank is wholly unfit to perform its duties; the Constitution lays upon him the duty of nominating a suitable and proper man for that place; we pass a law providing that he shall not do so; that he shall appoint the next man below, fit or unfit; the law is imperative. A man perfectly fit for a captaincy may be entirely unfit to be a colonel; the President may know it; but that has nothing to do with the question under our laws; he must promote the senior officer of the grade below, whether he believes him fit or unfit, because Congress has commanded him to do so.

Now what authority has Congress to command him to appoint a particular man in the Army any more than it has in the civil service? Nothing whatever but usage, nothing whatever but consistent and persistent, obstinate violation of the Constitution and encroachment upon the power of the Executive.

Cadets at West Point by law are appointed, as it is called, by the President; but they are to be appointed upon the nomination of members of the House of Representatives, each member of the House having the power to nominate one, who must be appointed, and appointed as a cadet he is to be moved up the line by promotion, until he may be the commander-in-chief of the Army.

We had here, I believe, at the last session a bill establishing a national board of health. What clause of the Constitution does that act rest on? "Why," it is said, "is not the preservation of the health of the people necessary to the existence of the nation?" Undoubtedly. So is education essential to free government; so is matrimony, to say nothing of divorce, essential to the peace and well-being of society; but who would maintain that upon this ground these subjects fall within the jurisdiction of Congress?

These constant violations of the Constitution are setting daily and hourly a bad example to the people. Any violation of the Constitution tends to familiarize the mind with the idea that the Constitution is of no consequence when it stands in the way of our present wishes and purposes.

Mr. KEIFER. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. SLOCUM. I would inquire of the Chair how much time the gentleman from Ohio has?

Mr. KEIFER. I had an hour in the beginning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman now has fifteen minutes of his time remaining, and will have twelve minutes after the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] shall have occupied the three minutes now yielded to him.

Mr. PETERS. Notwithstanding the lengthy discussion upon this bill in this House and in the Senate I believe there has been no change of public sentiment on this question. I believe that four-fifths of the ex-soldiers of the Union Army who were engaged in the battles of the hot days of August in 1862 are opposed to the passage of this bill in any form. I believe that nine-tenths of the survivors of those who served in the Union Army during the last war are opposed to the passage of this bill, either in its original form or as amended by the Senate.

I know that so far as the State which I have the honor in part to represent is concerned, whose population is composed largely of ex-soldiers, the sentiment is almost unanimous against the passage of this bill. Since the last discussion of this question in this House I have received hundreds of letters from the soldier-constituents of the delegation in this House from Kansas, and not one of them but what has indorsed the action of the Representatives from that State upon this bill.

I know more. I had occasion, in some remarks which I made in opposition to this bill, to say that I believed that the members of the court-martial who were yet living had no reason to change their judgment upon the question. I know that one of the members of that court-martial now living, but whose days upon earth are nearly numbered, has seen no reason to change his opinion, but stands to-day by the decision of that court-martial.

Mr. RAY, of New York. Will the gentleman permit me just a moment?

Mr. PETERS. I have but three minutes.

Mr. RAY, of New York. I would like to know how you know how he voted and how he stands?

Mr. PETERS. I know from a man who heard him say how he stands at present on this bill.

Mr. RAY, of New York. Then he violated his oath.

Mr. PETERS. He did not.

Mr. RAY, of New York. He did, if he made known his vote on this question.

Mr. PETERS. He did not make known his vote, but did approve of the judgment of the court-martial of which he was a member.

The SPEAKER. The three minutes yielded to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] has been exhausted. The gentleman from Ohio has nine minutes of his time remaining, instead of twelve, as the Chair stated a short time since. The Chair omitted to deduct from his time the three minutes last yielded to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Before the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] concludes his remarks the Chair desires to state, upon the question of order, that upon further examination and reflection he is satisfied that his ruling upon the question of order was not correct. The effect of such a ruling of course would be to prevent under any circumstances the reference of a Senate amendment to a committee of the House, because it is well established that a refusal to concur is equivalent to non-concurrence, while a refusal to non-concur is equivalent to concurrence. Therefore in either event the matter would be finally concluded in the House by the vote either to concur or non-concur, and there could be no reference to a committee.

The Chair thinks that inasmuch as a refusal to refer to a committee does not prevent a vote afterward on the other motions, the Chair was wrong in his ruling, and now holds that the vote should be first taken on the motion to commit. It does not appear that the precise question now presented has heretofore been decided in the House. It is unquestionably true, as stated in the extract read from the Digest, that the first question is upon concurrence—that is, as between the motion to concur and the motion to non-coucur—but so far as the Chair can ascertain it has never been decided that a motion to concur or to non-concur has precedence over a motion to commit or to postpone the consideration of the amendment. In the absence of any positive rule upon the subject, and in view of the fact that if the motion to commit is not put to the House before the motion to concur or non-concur it can not be voted on at all, the Chair thinks his former ruling ought not to be adhered to.

Mr. KEIFER. Some other gentlemen had applied to me for some portion of my time, but they do not now ask for it.

It was not my purpose to say anything more than to indicate the point against this bill which I have already made. I believe that if this bill shall pass it will be the duty of the President of the United States, in upholding the Constitution of the United States and in standing firmly by the prerogatives of the President of the United States as secured by that Constitution, to veto this bill, and, even if the bill should be approved by the President, I believe it would be wholly unconstitutional and ought to be disregarded in consequence of its unconstitutionality, as it leaves no discretion to be exercised by the President of the United States in the appointment of Fitz-John Porter to the office of "a colonel in the Army."

We have had a General in the Army; we have had Lieutenant-Generals in the Army; we have major-generals in the Army; we have brigadier-generals in the Army. But we have no such office as colonel at large in the Army, and never had.

Mr. ROSECRANS. But you have had major-generals and brigadier-generals created by law for the purpose of giving places to Sprigg, Carroll, and others.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman states something that has no possible relation to this matter.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Yes, it has, for those laws made the new offices of major-general and brigadier-general.

Mr. KEIFER. The office of major-general is an office well known to the Army, and it is an office at large.

Mr. ROSECRANS. This colonelcy is to be an office of colonel on the retired-list. The bill authorizes the President to make Fitz-John Porter a colonel on the retired-list; that is all there is of it.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman from California [Mr. ROSECRANS] says that he is to go upon the retired-list. But he is first to be appointed a "colonel in the Army," a new office to be created, unknown now and in the past. And when this office is created, we are to say to the President by law that he shall appoint to it the particular officer in the Union Army during the war who was found guilty upon trial of disobedience of orders, and to exclude all the distinguished officers of the Army now out of service, exclude all who went through the war and did their duty, exclude even the gentleman from California himself, with all his record of distinguished services, from appointment to this office, if he should choose to take the place. He and all others are to be excepted, and Fitz-John Porter, on whose brow is written condemnation by a court-martial which assembled and properly tried and solemnly convicted him, is to be appointed.

But for Fitz-John Porter, on whose brow is written condemnation by a court that was properly assembled and which solemnly tried and convicted him, we are proposing in the Congress of the United States to make a new office and take from the President his power to go at large among the citizens of the United States to fill this office. We propose to require by the terms of the bill that the President of the United States fill this office by appointing thereto one particular man, Fitz-John Porter. That is my constitutional objection.

I did not intend to say anything against Fitz-John Porter here. I do not think it is necessary. I have noticed in the public prints that he thanks the gentlemen on the other side of the House chiefly for voting for him. He sends greeting by letter published abroad—I have not a copy of it here—thanking the Southern gentlemen for voting for him, telling them that he is with them. That is the substance of the language of a letter written to a distinguished member of this House as I have seen it in the public prints. That of course he has a right to do. He should be grateful to those people who here upon this floor propose to reverse judicial history in the war in order to relieve him from the sentence of a military court and restore him to the Army with pay henceforward.

Mr. SLOCUM. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to debate this bill. I believe that the House and the country have heard debate enough upon it. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] says that he rose with no intention of saying a word against General Porter. I am very glad he has said something against him, and I think General Porter will himself be glad, because what he says against General Porter I think the General will regard as a compliment, and I think it will be so regarded by the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have only been surprised that the gentleman from Ohio did not summon here Mr. Charles Garfield and Elder and Works to sustain his cause in this instance, as he did a few days ago to sustain himself. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KEIFER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I supposed that the gentleman in the peculiar exigencies of the case of Fitz-John Porter would get down to something or other that would be beneath the dignity of a member. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SLOCUM. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. DORSHEIMER].

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. Speaker, I should not address the House on this subject if I had not been requested to make a very obvious reply to the legal points which have been made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] and by my colleague from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

The gentleman from Ohio says that this bill creates a new office, and is for that reason unconstitutional. As I understood the argument, it was in brief this: that this bill authorizes the President to appoint Fitz-John Porter to the office of colonel in the Army, and that there is no such office as colonel in the Army. This criticism of the gentleman from Ohio was plainly founded upon an entire misapprehension of the bill. This bill provides "that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Fitz-John Porter, late a major-general of the United States volunteers and a brevet brigadier-general and colonel of the Army, to the position of colonel in the Army of the United States, of the same grade and rank held by him at the time of his dismissal."

Now, what was his grade at the time of his dismissal? As I remember—if I am wrong I hope some gentleman will correct me—he was a colonel of infantry. Therefore this bill by its express terms, instead of authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Fitz-John Porter a colonel in the Army, authorizes the President to appoint him a colonel in the Army of the grade of colonel of infantry in the Army. Hence the bill is in no way liable to the criticism of the gentleman from Ohio, a criticism which is so easily disposed of that I am surprised it should have been made on the floor of this House.

Now, as to the criticism of my colleague [Mr. HISCOCK], I understand the point to have been that this bill is unconstitutional for the reason that it limits the action of the President in making an appointment to an office; that it is in other words a restriction upon the will or volition of the President in making an appointment to office. Now let me say to my learned colleague that this bill has directly the contrary effect. It does not propose to limit the power of the President at all. It is designed to remove from a single citizen a disability under which that citizen rests.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will my colleague read that part of the bill which removes the disability?

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I will.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let us have it read.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. The bill recites——

Mr. HISCOCK. No; I do not care for the recitation. I desire to have read the portion which removes the disability.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I said the effect of the bill was to remove a disability. What the disability is, is recited in the preamble.

Now I wish to proceed in the line of thought I was stating.

As the matter stands at present, there is one citizen in the United States as to whom the Presidential volition is restricted. By the decision of a court-martial, and as the result of its proceedings, there stands one citizen upon whom the President can not confer an office. The effect of this bill is simply to enable the President of the United States to confer an office upon a citizen now under disability.

Mr. CUTCHEON rose.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. One moment; I want to finish my line of thought, and then I will consent to any questions.

Does this bill in any event propose any restriction upon the Presidential volition? I say no, for the reason that by the language of the bill the President will act or not just as he sees fit.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Perhaps my colleague will give me a minute or two longer.

Mr. SLOCUM. Yes, I will yield five minutes.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. The act in that particular provides that the President be and he is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and so on, to appoint.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to ask my colleague what word, what phrase, what language removes disability?

Mr. CUTCHEON. And what disability does it remove?

Mr. DORSHEIMER. As I have already said the whole effect of the provision is to remove a disability. Would there be any objection to pass this act if the disability did not exist? The preamble states a disability, and the only reason for the act is the existence of a disability, and the only effect is to remove it. When the act is passed the President is at perfect liberty to appoint or not appoint.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But the preamble recites——

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Oh, let me proceed without interruption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to proceed without interruption.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I submit as to the first point it is clearly disposed of, and the bill is in no way liable to the objection that it creates a new office, because it appoints to an abstract colonelcy. It authorizes the appointment of Fitz-John Porter to the position of colonel of infantry in the United States Army, if it were a colonel of infantry, as I believe it was, which he held at the time of the court-martial.

As to the constitutional point, I also submit this bill instead of limiting the Presidential choice expressly leaves it unfettered, and instead of limiting the number of citizens from whom he may choose it increases the number of citizens from whom he may choose. It increases the number of citizens from whom he may choose by adding one more man now under disability to the great body of the community.

Mr. SLOCUM rose.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not rise for the purpose of asking time, but I do rise for the purpose——

Mr. SLOCUM. I can not yield.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am not going to make an argument but merely to make a suggestion. I suggest the propriety of its being referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and let that committee report on the question I have presented. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] There will be no objection on this side of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOCUM. I will yield now to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] for ten minutes.

Mr. LAIRD addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1477) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. 2167) for the relief of the estate of J. J. Pulliam.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. SLOCUM. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD].

Mr. BELFORD. One of the most gratifying experiences I ever had in the city of Washington occurred in the hall at Willard's Hotel. There must have been from five hundred to a thousand people there. The Republican convention was in session at Chicago, and I heard the tick of the telegram which announced that Roscoe Conkling, the grand Senator of the Republic, was nominating to that convention the great soldier of the nation, General Grant. That great general has passed his judgment on this case. He says injustice has been done, and I pit his judgment against that of General KEIFER or any other general on the floor of this House.

Did you ever hear debate of such character as we have heard on this side of the House to-day? The gentleman from Michigan told us that it was a party question. Great heavens! Are men to be robbed of their rights and of justice in order to subserve the interests of political parties? Are we going to run the next campaign upon the theory that we have deprived a citizen of justice? Or are we going to have our platforms constructed on a tombstone and a set of grave-clothes?

These are questions, gentlemen, which it is well enough for you to consider. The primary, the supereminent question for the consideration of honest men is, has injustice been done? If it has, let us correct it. And I declare in the presence of this House that the constitutional quibbles brought up by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] are to give the President an excuse to veto this bill. That is the honest truth, in my judgment. I have heard this matter canvassed and discussed. I have heard it said that the President was in a quandary. And the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Ohio, who are trying to be the guardians and custodians of his conscience, are seeking to furnish an excuse by which he can be justified in vetoing this bill.

Is General ROSECRANS a traitor? Is General SLOCUM a traitor? And have they not supported this bill? Take the blazing glory of General Grant and spread it like a mantle over your heads, and let it warm up your hearts and your consciences to do justice in this case, where injustice has been done. [Applause.]

Mr. SLOCUM. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY].

Mr. RAY, of New York. For twenty years I have belonged to the Republican party, and it has been my pleasure during that time never to have had my fealty to that party questioned. During that time I have struck some hard blows at the Democratic party, and upon all political questions I have seen fit to do the same upon the floor of this House.

But I thank God, Mr. Speaker, that I belong to that class of men who can rise above passion and prejudice when the rights of an individual are in question, whether that individual be a Democrat or whether he be a Republican. Those gentlemen who to-day upon the floor of this House are raising the constitutional question, who are saying that it is unconstitutional to pass this bill for the relief of General Fitz-John Porter, have stood here heretofore and have advocated and voted for bills to do away with the findings of courts-martial, and to restore to the ranks of the Army men who belonged to the Republican party. I say, gentlemen, that it comes with poor grace from men who have made that record, who have put their votes upon the records of this House in that line, to stand here to-day and talk about the unconstitutionality of this measure when it is applied to Fitz-John Porter, whereas they have heretofore supported such measures when applied to other men.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will you please name one?

Mr. RAY, of New York. My time is very limited.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Very well; name one, just one.

Mr. RAY, of New York. I will name them from the record if the gentleman wishes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Name one now; you make the charge now.

Mr. RAY, of New York. I desire to call attention to one or two things. I regret very much that any feeling should have been exhibited between members upon the floor of this House. My colleague from New York who has this bill in charge [Mr. SLOCUM] can not be charged with being a traitor. If I recollect history correctly he led some portions of the Union Army in the campaigns in Virginia. If I have read history understandingly it was he who commanded one wing of the Union Army as it marched through Georgia and swung up through the States to Richmond. He stands here the life-long friend of General Fitz-John Porter, and, believing as he does that Porter was right, that Porter was unjustly dealt with, can we say aught against him if he displays some feeling when men take occasion unnecessarily to abuse and malign General Porter? Gentlemen, when you put the brand to the powder you must expect that flame and fire will follow.

It were far better now, after twenty years of peace, that we act with deliberation; that we act with judgment. And I say it is poor policy, I say it is bad judgment, for gentlemen upon this side of the House to insinuate or to intimate that the supporters of General Porter were all rebels, or that they were all traitors, or that they were men who had no interest in the success of the Union cause.

Mr. BRUMM But all here who were rebels are his supporters and friends.

Mr. RAY, of New York. If I heard the roll-call aright, there was a brave and stanch Union General, ROSECRANS, whom the boys delighted to call "old Rosy," who voted for the restoration of General Porter. [Applause on the Democratic side].

If I listened to the roll-call aright, there was heard the voice of that old Republican war governor of Pennsylvania who stood as the stanchest, the bravest, and the truest in the old State of Pennsylvania during that struggle [renewed applause on the Democratic side] and did more for the success of the Union cause than any other governor through the entire loyal North, and he supported the bill. Do you call him disloyal? And General BAYNE and Colonel LYMAN, and LAIRD, all Union soldiers, and Republicans then as now, they voted for the bill. Are they disloyal? And Governor LONG, three times the Republican governor of Massachusetts, and Judge POLAND, of Vermont, the old enemy of the Ku Klux, and the fifteen other life-long Republicans here on this floor who voted for the bill, are they, were they ever disloyal?

After the vote was taken on this bill in the Senate I saw it announced in the public press that not one Union general there voted for the restoration of General Porter to the Army. Gentlemen, you should not so blind yourselves, neither should the press of this country so blind itself or attempt to blind the people. If I have read history correctly, General WILLIAM J. SEWELL, of New Jersey, the honored Senator from that State, a gentleman who rose to the rank of major-general in the Union Army, was at the head of his brigade upon the battlefield of the second Bull Run. It was he who in the Senate of the United States led the supporters of General Fitz-John Porter. It was he, that loyal, that brave, that generous, that patriotic Union general, who, in an able and eloquent speech, advocated the cause of Fitz-John Porter, and, sir, he is a Republican. Then no longer publish such things to the people of this country.

Mr. Speaker, there is one other fact to which I desire to call attention. Gentlemen have stood on this floor time and time again, and have undertaken to assert that this member or that member of the court-martial that tried General Porter then voted against him and have ever since stood by their opinion. They say that the lamented and the loved Garfield the President we all honored and respected, believed in the guilt of Fitz-John Porter to the day of his death.

Gentlemen, have you looked at the letter that Garfield wrote to General Porter in which he apologizes, in which he tells him that he has introduced a bill or a measure for his relief and that he is willing that the new evidence shall be examined? And, sir, when he came to sign and address that letter he addressed it to Maj. Gen. Fitz-John Porter. Now I ask, if Garfield believed that General Fitz-John Porter was a guilty man, and that he had been justly deprived of the rank of a major-general in the Army, could he have so stultified himself as fifteen years afterward to address him as Maj. Gen. Fitz-John Porter?

Sir, it is incredible. Each member of that court was sworn to eternal secrecy, and if any member of that court has proven false to that oath he stands self-condemned as unfit for the place he held.

Capt. Myron Dunlap was court-martialed during the war and dismissed the service and deprived of the right to hold office. Sir, the Committee on Military Affairs unanimously said the sentence was unjust and that this House had the constitutional right to annul and set aside that sentence. And this House, at this session, Republicans and Democrats voting together, has passed a bill reversing that sentence.

This House, Republicans and Democrats together, no one raising a constitutional question, voted to restore General Averill to the Army and place him on the retired-list.

Heretofore this same thing has been done many times.

Sir, this is a question on which men, honest, brave, true, and patriotic men, honestly differ. Let us respect opinion. Here, sir, we have the right to read and think and vote as we believe right and justice demand, and I am opposed to that narrow-minded idea that denies this right to any man. And we cast no reflection upon Lincoln or Stanton or Garfield. I am sure had they known the truth Porter would not have been convicted. And I am also sure that a time will come when we shall all agree that General Porter was not only loyal and brave but true and obedient.

Mr. SLOCUM. Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the House by almost a three-quarters vote; it had more than a two-thirds vote. I believe that the bitterest enemy of the bill on the floor to-day must acknowledge that more than two-thirds of the House are now in favor of its passage. All that I ask is that the bill shall remain in the hands of its friends. I do not want this bill to go to a committee——

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Why not pass it to-day?

Mr. SLOCUM. I will tell you.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will you really tell that you do not want it passed until after the 3d of June?

Mr. SLOCUM. I will tell you before I get through. I do not want it to go to the Committee on the Judiciary or to the Committee on Military Affairs, because when it comes back to the House it will go to the foot of the list and be lost. I do not want to concur in the amendment of the Senate for the simple reason that I want to have an opportunity to examine that amendment carefully [laughter on the Republican side], and at the proper time, when I get good and ready, I will bring it back into the House and have it passed. I now call the previous question.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman give us an idea how long a time he would like to have to look over these amendments? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the previous question.

Mr. KEIFER. I understood the Chair to say that my motion was first in order. I now insist upon that motion being put. I do not understand how the gentleman from New York has the right to take charge of that motion. I do not wish to occupy any further time, but I ask that my motion may be put first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that upon further reflection he had come to the conclusion that the vote ought first to be taken on the motion to refer; otherwise the House might not have the opportunity to vote on that motion at all. Therefore the first question is upon that motion. The gentleman from New York demands the previous question.

Mr. EVERHART. Is it in order to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The previous question has been demanded.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to refer the bill, with the amendments of the Senate, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The next question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to concur in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EVERHART] desires, I understand, to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. REED. But not on the motion to concur.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that the two motions were independent motions, both of which might be pending at the same time, the question being as to which should be first put to the House.

Mr. REED. I believe the previous question was not ordered on all of them, was it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood.

Mr. SLOCUM. I certainly made the motion for the previous question on the whole subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood, and thinks the House so understood.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BAYNE to concur in the amendments of the Senate, it was not agreed to.

Mr. SLOCUM moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] will begin the consideration of these amendments as soon as possible. [Laughter.]

AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2334) to release the American Baptist Home Mission Society from the conditions of the sale of the marine-hospital building and grounds at Natchez, Miss.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

At the end of line 10 insert:

"Provided, That by proper covenant, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, such society secures the appropriation of the proceeds of such sale to the construction of a school building at Jackson, Miss., to be used for the purposes of education for the benefit of colored people."

Mr. MOULTON. I move concurrence in this amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MOULTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3967) for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle, and to provide means for the suppression and extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I move to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate; and on that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. MILLER, of Texas. I desire to move that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Can not the purpose of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLER] be reached by simply voting down the motion to non-concur? Would not the effect of a negative vote on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri be to concur?

The SPEAKER. It would. The question is upon ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, there being—ayes 94, noes 30.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, the motion was agreed to, there being—ayes 92, noes 40.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORT SMITH MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. 258) donating a part of the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, Ark., to the city of Fort Smith, for the use and benefit of the free public schools thereof, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill donating a part of the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, Ark., to the city of Fort Smith, for the use and benefit of the free public schools thereof, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, Ark., as is occupied by Garrison avenue of the city of Fort Smith, and by the wharf of said city, be, and the same is hereby, donated to said city, to be used by it for the purposes of an avenue and wharf; that an amount of said reservation not exceeding nine acres, to be selected by the city on such part of said reservation as is hereby granted as it may desire, be, and the same is hereby, granted to said city, to be used by it for the erection of public buildings and county court-house for the Fort Smith district of Sebastian County, Arkansas, thereon, and for a public park; that all the remainder of said military reservation, except the streets, alleys, and avenues hereinafter mentioned, and except the national cemetery and one hundred feet around the walls of the same, and except, further, all the ground included within the exterior line of the walls of the fort, together with all of said walls and thirty feet around said walls, and except, further, so much ground as may be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury for public buildings, be, and the same is hereby, granted to said city of Fort Smith, to be held in trust by said city for the use and benefit of the free public schools of the single school district of Fort Smith, and to be applied to the benefit of all children of school age without distinction of race.

SEC. 2. That the said city shall, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, cause the said reservation hereby granted to be divided into lots and blocks corresponding as near as possible with the plat of said city; that all streets, alleys, and avenues laid out on such part of said reservation as is hereby granted be, and the same are hereby, granted to said city, to be held by it as streets, alleys, and avenues for the use of the public: Provided, That the said city shall lay off, and for all time keep in repair, a street or avenue sixty feet in width leading to the front gate of the national cemetery, and a street or avenue from Garrison avenue, of such width as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, to the entrance of said fort fronting on said Garrison avenue; and if the said city shall fail to so lay off and keep in repair the said streets or avenues, the nine acres of ground hereby granted to her shall revert to the United States. That the said city shall, within ten years from the date of the passage of this act, cause all that part of said reservation granted by this act to it in trust for the use of the free public schools of the single school district of Fort Smith to be sold in single lots, at public sale, for cash, to the highest bidder, the city, when such sale is made and the purchase-price paid, to make a deed to the purchaser for the same; and as soon, and from time to time, as the purchase-price is paid, the same shall be paid to the treasurer of the school board of the single school district of Fort Smith, to be used by said board in the erection of school-houses and for the pay of teachers and the maintenance of the free public schools in said district.

SEC. 3. That all persons having fractional lots fronting on Garrison avenue, in said city of Fort Smith, and extending back to the northeastern boundary line of said military reservation, shall have the right to purchase, at private sale, of said city, within two years from the date of the passage of this act, so much of said reservation as shall be necessary to extend their respective fractional lots back to a distance of one hundred and forty feet, so that said lots will be one hundred and forty feet in depth, at the rate per square foot that the lot on the reservation nearest to each respective lot may sell for; and the said city, on the payment of the purchase-money, shall make the purchasers a deed therefor.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior shall, as soon as possible after the passage of this act, issue to the city of Fort Smith a patent for all said reservation hereby granted to it for its own use and benefit, and also a separate patent for all of said reservation hereby granted to it in trust for the use and benefit of the free public schools of the single school district of Fort Smith; and said last-named patent shall recite that the lands so granted are held in trust by said city for the use and benefit of said school district.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I ask for the reading of the report which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The report is as follows:

Mr. HENLEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following report:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 39) donating a part of the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, Ark., to the city of Fort Smith for the use and benefit of the free public schools thereof, and for other purposes, report the same back and recommend that the bill be passed with the amendments hereinafter suggested.

It is proposed to amend the bill:

First. By adding at the end of the first section of said bill the words "and to be applied to the benefit of all children of school age, without distinction of race."

Second. By inserting the word "free" before the word "public," in line 27 of section 2 of said bill.

Your committee states that it is found that the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith contains, all told, three hundred and six acres, and that upon it there is a national cemetery containing 14.81 acres, and the walls of a fort inclosing buildings and embracing between four and five acres; that the remainder of the reservation is wholly unimproved, and the whole reservation lies alongside the city of Fort Smith and between it and the line between the State of Arkansas and the Indian Territory.

In conformity to an act approved February 24, 1871, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of useless military reservations," the War Department, March 21, 1871, transferred the whole reservation to the Interior Department for disposition under the provisions of said act.

By executive order, dated May 22, 1871, so much of the reservation as is occupied by the national cemetery was reserved from sale and restored to the custody of the War Department, and by like order, dated December 3, 1875, additional land was reserved for the use and to form a part of the national cemetery.

On the 3d of March, 1871, the United States district court for the western district of Arkansas was removed by act of Congress from the town of Van Buren to the city of Fort Smith. There being no public buildings in the city of Fort Smith save the garrison buildings within the walls of the fort on said reservation, it became a necessity to use and occupy them, and they are now and for many years have been used and occupied by said court. For this reason alone it is utterly impracticable to sell and dispose of the reservation as provided by the act of February 24, 1871.

It is proposed by this bill to permanently reserve the national cemetery grounds, now thus in the custody of the War Department, and one hundred feet around the wall of the same; and also all the grounds included within the exterior line of the walls of the fort, together with all of said walls, and thirty feet around the same; and also so much other ground as may be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury for public buildings, and to donate the remainder to the city of Fort Smith for the use of the free public schools of that city, and for county buildings and public park.

Your committee have taken great pains to communicate with the Departments of the Government to learn and know whether or not the proposed permanent reservations are sufficient for its uses or purposes. From information received from the Departments of Justice, War, and the Interior, it is believed they are ample, not only for all present but prospective uses as well, and are of as much value to the Government as the whole reservation would be should it be retained. It is ascertained that the city of Fort Smith has no public park and no public buildings, and that the Fort Smith district of Sebastian County, the courts of which are held at Fort Smith, has no court-house. To supply grounds for the needed park and buildings, the bill proposes the grant of nine acres for that purpose, and for a forfeiture thereof should the city fail to lay off, under the direction of the Secretary of War, and for all time keep in repair an avenue sixty feet in width leading to the front gate of the national cemetery, and a street or avenue leading from Garrison avenue (which is the principal business street of the city), of such width as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, to the entrance of said fort fronting on said Garrison avenue. Roadways to national cemeteries are constantly costing the Government much money in laying off and keeping them in repair; and, considering the needs of the city in conjunction with the obligation upon it to keep in repair the avenue and street above mentioned, the grant of nine acres for the purposes aforesaid meets with the full approval of your committee.

The committee more readily assent to the donation of the nine acres for the purposes of a public park and county buildings since it is believed the location of said park and public buildings on said reservation will enhance rather than diminish its value to the public-school system of said city. A glance at the map of the city of Fort Smith discloses the fact that there must have been some misapprehension as to the line between it and the reservation, and that its principal avenue, evidently intended to run parallel with and equidistant from said line, as it approaches the river encroaches upon the reservation, and that a portion of the city wharf is located thereon. For these reasons the provisions of the bill granting to the city so much of the reservation as is occupied by Garrison avenue and said wharf, and allowing fractional lot owners to make purchases of adjoining lands to fill out their lots so as to conform in size to the full-sized lots lying between the avenue and the reservation, are regarded as highly proper.

The only remaining provision of the bill worthy of comment is that donating the remainder of the reservation to the city of Fort Smith, to be held in trust for the use and benefit of the free public schools thereof. This commends itself with more force to your committee than any other provision of the bill. The school board of the city represent that, by their last annual enumeration, there were in the school district of said city 1,520 children of school age, 1,199 of whom are white and the remainder, 321, colored; that by paying the annual State school-tax, and voting the highest additional school-tax under the law, they raised last year $6,223; that 830 pupils were enrolled last year in the public schools; that a large number will, in the nature of things, apply for enrollment this year; that the city owns but two school buildings; that a third building used by the school board for the colored school is the property of the Howard Association, and may be taken from the board at any time; that, all told, they have but eleven rooms for the accommodation of 830 pupils, and more than half these rooms are unsuitable for the purposes for which they are used, the main school building having been originally constructed for a residence; that for several years the schools could not have been kept open more than seven months in the year but for private subscriptions to the general school fund; that for want of room and teachers all the primary departments have only half-day schools.

The Government derives no benefit whatever from said reservation or any part thereof, except that portion witheld by the provisions of this bill. The reservation remaining in its present condition, undisposed of, is an obstruction to the growth and prosperity of the city of Fort Smith, by the capital and industry of whose citizens in erecting buildings and making improvements near the reservation its value has been mostly enhanced.

While it appears that the people of Fort Smith are poor, and in great need of additional buildings and means for the payment to accommodate their entire school population, resulting from their poverty, yet they exhibit a zeal in that direction worthy of the great cause of education, and far beyond that of the wealthy in many localities of our country. A people thus struggling in so noble a work deserve encouragement.

In many instances in early times out-lots and commons of towns were granted to them for school purposes. Later, large cities have been given properties of great value; schools of high grade have received munificent donations, and railroads and other corporations have fattened and grown rich from the magnificent, if not profligate, grants made to them from the public domain.

Reviewing the history of grants made from the public domain nothing is found to condemn the proposed grant of a portion of this reservation to Fort Smith for the purpose aforesaid, but such review rather strengthens your committee in the opinion that the grant ought to be made.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

A minority of the Committee on the Public Lands, being unable to concur in the recommendation of the committee as to bill H. R. 39, beg leave to report as follows:

By the act approved February 24, 1871, providing for the disposition of useless military reservations, in which the Fort Smith reservation was designated, the Secretary of the Interior was empowered to dispose of this property "for cash, according to existing laws of the United States relating to the public lands, after appraisement, to the highest bidder, and at not less than the appraised value, nor at less than $1.25 per acre." He was also authorized "to cause any part of the reservation to be subdivided into tracts less than forty acres each, or into town lots."

We are unadvised whether this course has been followed in the present case; but whether it has or not, we deem it to be the proper method of opening abandoned military reservations to settlement. And under the provision for subdividing such land into town lots the same result would be reached in that respect as by the present bill. In the former case the proceeds of sales would go into the national Treasury; in the latter they would go to the city of Fort Smith. The general if not universal practice has been that of converting moneys derived from the sales of public lands into the public Treasury, and the act of 1871 rested upon this fundamental principle inhering in the very nature of a public domain. It is for the House to say whether this case should be an exception. Perhaps it should. But if so, we call attention to the fact that in so far as such action may become a precedent it is a dangerous precedent—one more honored by its breach than by its observance.

We concur in those provisions of the bill which donate to the city so much of the reservation as is occupied by Garrison avenue and by the wharf, and also so much as may be needed as building sites for a county court-house, city schools, and public buildings of the United States. In addition to nine acres for a public park, upon the conditions stated, there would still remain about two hundred and seventy-five acres of the reservation exclusive of the fort and cemetery grounds. This land when divided into city lots should be worth at least $400 per acre, or $100,000, and before the ten years specified in the measure shall expire would probably be worth much more.

The bill proposes to donate this property to the city "in trust for the use of the free public schools of the single school district of Fort Smith," and that the proceeds derived from its public sale shall be—

"Used by the school board of that district in the erection of school-houses, and for the pay of teachers, and the maintenance of the free public schools in said district."

There is no limitation as to how much of the fund shall be expended in the erection of these buildings, or how much in salaries of teachers. Without such limitation it is quite possible, if not probable, that nearly the whole amount would be expended in the erection of buildings. So that the naked proposition is that of donating, say, $100,000 to the city of Fort Smith for school buildings. As an educational measure this may be wise; but if adopted there should be a provision requiring the city as trustee to restore the buildings in case of destruction by fire.

While it is true that large grants of public lands have been made to many States for schools, colleges, and universities, yet, so far as we are aware, in no case could the proceeds of such lands be legally used in the erection of buildings, the design of the grant being that of providing for the payment of teachers and kindred expenditures. And in our judgment if this donation is to be made for the encouragement of education, then the creation of a permanent fund, the principal of which shall remain forever undiminished, and the interest of which shall be used in conducting free public schools, would be a gift far more durable and valuable than perishable buildings can possibly be, and one which in the long run would prove of greater benefit to that city as well as to the nation.

We have deemed it to be our duty as members of the committee to whom the bill was referred to report these considerations to the House, and complete that duty by proposing the following amendment:

In section 2, strike out all after the word "same," in line 23, and add: "And all moneys received from such sales shall be invested by the said city in United States bonds or other safe securities as a permanent fund which shall be forever undiminished, and the interest of which shall be only used for the payment of teachers in the free public schools of said city: Provided, That if the principal of said permanent fund shall by any reason be diminished for a longer period than one calendar year, this act shall then become and be null and void, and all of the land designated in this section shall revert to the United States, and be disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior as stated in the act of February 24, 1871, to provide for the disposition of useless military reservations."

VIEWS OF MR. BRENTS.

The abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith is now public domain of the United States, and is worth at least $100,000—possibly much more than that sum—and is rapidly increasing in value. The bill reported by the majority of the committee proposes to donate this valuable property, or the greater portion of it, to the city, "in trust for the use of the free public schools of the single school district of Fort Smith." The minority of the committee regard this as a new departure in the disposition of the public lands of the United States, and that the passage of this bill will establish an unwise and dangerous precedent, open the door to great abuses and extravagance, with but few beneficial results to the cause of education. The proposed donation would be far less objectionable if it were to go to the State of Arkansas, be placed in the irreducible free public school fund, and the interest be used for the support of education in all parts of the State, instead of to a district containing only about 1,500 children of school age. It would certainly be in much safer hands and far less liable to be squandered or diverted from its purpose. And if Congress thus gives a bounty of $100,000 to this city, should it not give a sum to all other cities or school districts in the United States proportionate to their population and necessities? To do one-half this would deplete the Treasury, and not to do it fully and to all alike would be invidious and unfair. I think the bill should not pass.

THOS. H. BRENTS.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. The Senate bill is an exact copy of the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands in this House. A similar bill passed the Senate last year as it has passed the Senate this year. It was favorably reported in the House last year as it was this year.

Mr. MAGINNIS. It was also reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not waiving the point of order, I wish to state it seems to me the language of the bill is hardly sufficient to prevent the proceeds of this land from being applied to some educational purpose other than common-school education. The whole country is interested in the matter of common schools, but the whole country is not interested to the same extent in education beyond that. It will be desirable therefore some provision should be attached to this bill that the proceeds of that property should go to the general benefit of common-school education of the State rather than to apply them to any particular community.

I do not intend to urge that. The point I wish to make is the language "public school" is vague.

Mr. DUNN. Under the laws of Arkansas that is not an indefinite phrase.

Mr. HOLMAN. But those laws do not necessarily enter into this bill.

Mr. DUNN. I think they would myself.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest a proviso be added: this grant is made on the express condition the proceeds arising from the sale of said land shall be appropriated exclusively to common schools. I do not think Congress ought to make a grant of lands for the purpose of education which from the nature of the case may not reach every child of the community. Higher grade of education reaches comparatively few. I would be glad if the gentleman would consent to the provision I have suggested.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, on that subject I will say if this bill does not precisely accomplish that purpose it is because the best ability I could bring to bear, assisted by my colleagues and the distinguished Senators, has been unable so to draft it.

The idea of appropriating this property to the free public school system of the State of Arkansas originated with a distinguished gentleman, Judge Parker, who now presides over the Federal court in that district. He drafted the bill originally. He is the friend of the free public school system. I am its friend. The bill was drafted exclusively that we might get this property for the support and maintenance of the free public schools at that city.

In this connection I will state to my friend from Indiana the State constitution of Arkansas makes it imperative that a free public school system shall be maintained free to all colors and all classes of society alike.

And I say to him I most seriously trust and urge upon him, I appeal to him in behalf of the people who are needing the proceeds of this fund to build up the school system, that he will not insist upon my accepting an amendment which will of necessity send this bill back to the Senate for its concurrence, and delay, jeopardize, or even possibly defeat its passage. After having the report read, if he desires it, I will make such a statement as I hope will induce the gentleman to withdraw his opposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend from Arkansas will not make this appeal personally. It is a matter of legislation, and addresses itself to our sense of public duty—to his, of course, as much as to mine.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I ask now, still reserving the right to object, that the first section of the bill be again read.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is quite manifest, Mr. Speaker, from the reading of the last clause of that section that this fund must not necessarily be applied to the purposes of common-school education; and I really think my friend from Arkansas would not find himself at all embarrassed by the attention of the Senate being called to the importance of adding a provision that the fund should be applied exclusively to the purposes of common schools. I think he would find in future the interests of education in his community would be greatly promoted thereby, and more certainly than if there was permitted to be an option as to expenditure, as we know there is usually a tendency to devote such fund to the higher branches of education instead of the common schools.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I have sent, as I have stated, for a copy of the constitution of the State of Arkansas, the reading of which I think will show the gentleman that his objection upon that ground is unfounded. Of course, if the gentleman insists upon that amendment I would undoubtedly prefer to accept it to having the point of order raised. I would like to have the language of his proposed amendment read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will suggest the addition to the first section of these words:

This grant is made on the express condition that the proceeds of the said lands shall be applied exclusively to the support of common schools in said district.

Mr. HENLEY. That is the amendment the gentleman from Indiana proposes?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the amendment I would suggest to this section.

Mr. DUNN. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me a moment, I want to suggest to him that he has probably employed in that amendment language or a descriptive term unknown to the laws of the State of Arkansas. I have not the statutes before me, but I think the designation in the bill is an exact description of the only common schools that are known to our laws.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. That is exactly the point to which I desired to call the gentleman's attention by reading from the constitution of the State.

Mr. DUNN. In other words, the gentleman from Indiana in his proposed amendment is describing something that does not exist. Now, the language of this first paragraph of the bill means the same thing. In Arkansas the free public schools of the State are what are usually called the common schools in other States.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the term "common schools" is of public application throughout the country.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Not in our constitution or in the laws of our State.

Mr. COBB. "Free public schools" is a technical term, as I understand it, used in the State of Arkansas, which corresponds with our common schools elsewhere.

Mr. DUNN. But the language of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana applies to something else, and uses terms that are not recognized in our State constitution.

Mr. HOLMAN. But there is nothing to prevent the application of this fund to other educational institutions, like academies, for instance.

Mr. DUNN. They are not common free schools. This relates to the free public schools of the State.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I want to state to the gentleman from Indiana that in the State of Arkansas there are two universities, not kept up by taxation, but by annual appropriations from the State Legislature; and the only free schools in Arkansas are our public schools, what we call our free public schools, and that term is imbedded in the constitution, and we can not change it if we desired to do so. The language of this section is:

And the same to be held in trust by said city for the use and benefit of the free public schools of the single school district of Fort Smith.

Then an amendment by Mr. HOAR, so as to make it broader in its application:

And to be applied to the benefit of children of school age, without distinction of race.

Then another amendment by Mr. GARLAND, to give emphasis to that, in another section:

For the pay of teachers and the maintenance of the free public schools in said district.

Now, I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that is the only public-school system that is known under our Constitution. It is recognized both under the law and the Constitution, and these funds can not be diverted from the purpose of the bill even if we sought to do it, for the terms of the bill are in the express terms of the constitution of the State.

Mr. STORM. I desire to ask my friend from Arkansas whether he objects to putting in a clause of reversion or reverter to the United States in case the grounds appropriated for the purpose of erecting the public buildings and county court-house shall not be utilized for that purpose?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. That is already in the bill substantially.

Mr. STORM. I do not so understand.

Mr. YOUNG. That is implied——

Mr. STORM. There is no provision for its reversion to the United States if not used for that purpose.

Mr. YOUNG. That would be done anyhow by the operation of law.

Mr. STORM. I think there is occasion for it, because in the establishment of the Hot Springs Commission some years ago, by which there was authority given to them to set apart a portion of the public lands for a court-house, the land was not occupied for that purpose, but was leased, and the court-house was built elsewhere.

Mr. YOUNG. That is without authority.

Mr. STORM. The grant was an unconditional one, and there is no failure by reason of non-performance.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will see that land to the amount of nine acres is expressly reserved to be used for the erection of public buildings.

Mr. STORM. The second section provides that if the city shall fail to lay off and keep in repair the streets or avenues provided for, the nine acres of ground shall revert to the United States. It does not recite the neglect to use them for a court-house or public building.

Mr. HOLMAN. There can be no reversion there, because the nine acres are not granted——

Mr. STORM. The bill says—

That an amount of said reservation not exceeding nine acres, to be selected by the city on such part of said reservation as is hereby granted as it may desire, be, and the same is hereby, granted to said city, to be used by it for the erection of public buildings and county court-house for the Fort Smith district of Sebastian County, Arkansas, thereon, and for a public park.

Mr. HOLMAN. On reflection, although I am not entirely satisfied with the phraseology used here, yet I can not say it would not accomplish the purpose. The language perhaps would have the effect of preserving this land for the exclusive purposes of public schools; and I believe, so far as I am concerned, I will not insist on the question of order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. STEVENS] may have desired to present the same point of order. But so far as I am concerned I am inclined on the facts stated not to insist on it myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] reserved the point of order; but his not insisting on it does not prevent another gentleman from making the point of order.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not desire to make any point of order. I desire to ask the gentleman from Arkansas some questions.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I will take great pleasure in answering the gentleman.

Mr. STEVENS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas if the land disposed of by this bill is the same tract of land that was originally conveyed to the Government by one Rogers and wife?

Mr. ROGERS. It is; and I want to say I am not connected with that family, if that is what the gentleman is after.

Mr. STEVENS. I did not suppose you were.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. That Mr. Rogers was a very worthy gentleman from Pennsylvania originally, I believe, while I am from another State. I never knew or saw him in my life.

Mr. STEVENS. I find from an examination of the facts in that case that when the United States came into possession of this property it consisted of about three hundred and six acres, originally conveyed by one Rogers and wife to the United States for $15,000. And as the land is exceedingly valuable, while I am in favor of rendering all the aid possible to all the common schools throughout the United States, it does seem to me to be just and proper that the pitiful sum of $15,000 paid by the United States for this land should be refunded to the United States, the city of Fort Smith being given the benefit of all the advance in the value of the property. After deducting the nine acres referred to and the ground occupied by the national cemetery there will be two hundred and fifty acres of land left. Gentlemen better acquainted than I am with Fort Smith tell me it is a prosperous and enterprising city and that the value of property there is rapidly increasing. This donation to that city is a munificent one, and I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Arkansas whether he would accept an amendment providing that the sum of $15,000 paid by the United States shall be refunded from the proceeds of this land.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. In that connection I have simply this to say: That if I should accept that amendment it would necessarily defeat the operation of the bill; for in Arkansas all our cities are chartered under one general law, and by the terms of that charter such powers as the city has are delegated to it. But in the constitution of the State we are prohibited from using the powers of the city for any purpose of that description. We have the power of taxation and the other powers incidental to a city, but we have no power of that sort and can get no power of that sort through our legislation under our constitution. We can not lend our credit, we can not issue our bonds, and we must act within the scope of the provisions of the charter as well as within the scope of the provisions of the constitution.

I want in this connection to make this additional remark to my friend from New York [Mr. STEVENS]. There is one misapprehension, I take it, upon his part. In addition to the reservation of the national cemetery, which is situated upon this ground, and a very beautiful place it is indeed, and one hundred feet all around its walls, there is reserved that portion of the ground upon which were situated originally, and are now situated, all the public buildings formerly belonging to the Government. They are occupied to-day by the Federal court and by officials and others appertaining to that court. And this property itself, which is reserved from the sale without having any reference to the cemetery and to the value that might attach to that, is worth infinitely more than the Government originally paid Rogers and his wife for the whole property; worth more for the reason that that property was of little value, but by the growth of the city and the energy and thrift of our people it has been enhanced in value until those parts reserved, independent of the amount of twenty-five acres to the railroad company and the cemetery, are worth more, a great deal more, than the Government originally paid for the property, after being stripped by the Government, of course, of all the beautiful timber which originally stood upon it.

In evidence of that fact I will state that the commissioners, who in 1873 valued that property, placed the improvements alone at $22,855; and not only are those improvements reserved, but the grounds on which they stand—ten or fifteen acres—are reserved for the use of the Federal Government, and they would be worth between $25,000 and $30,000. Then there is the cemetery and an amount of twenty-five acres to the railroad company which have all been taken out of the property of which the Government has had the benefit. I submit to my friend from New York we ought not to stickle in view of these facts, in view of the purposes of the grant, and in view of the large surplus in the Treasury, for a few thousand dollars which the city could not pay under the constitution and the laws of the State; and of course it would not be expected that we should do it by private subscription.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman from Arkansas permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG. At the time the property was sold to the Government was the full price paid for it, its real value?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. The Government paid what was probably a very large price at that time.

Mr. STEVENS. As I have already stated, I do not wish to antagonize the benefits accruing to parties living at Fort Smith by reason of the cession to them of this property. In reply to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], who says that under the constitution and laws of his State it would be impossible for the city of Fort Smith to issue its bonds or to loan its credit in order to repay to the Government the amount which was paid for this property, there is no necessity for the city to issue its bonds or loan its credit, but simply to pay the United States the sum of $15,000 from the proceeds of the sale of this land.

My only desire is that the House understand the value of the property we are called upon to give away and the munificence of the gift. If this land has increased in value since it was purchased by the Government, that increase should inure to the benefit of the Government.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS. As I understand it, valuable and extensive improvements have been made upon this land by the Government; some twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars of the Government's money has been expended in making these improvements. The only question is as to the land which the United States originally bought in 1838 for $15,000. From that is to be reserved one hundred acres for a national cemetery and nine acres more for a park.

It seems as if the same spirit of aggression which characterizes the white man everywhere characterizes our friends in the city of Fort Smith. Some of them have lots which extend over, or naturally would extend over, onto this reserve. I notice that there are provisions in this bill by which these parties are to have the first right to purchase this land, so as to extend their lots onto this reserve, in order to make them of proper proportion.

I can see no soundness in the argument that it is impossible under the constitution and laws of the State of Arkansas for the city of Fort Smith to make provision for refunding to the United States the amount of money which it paid for this land. On the contrary, it seems to me that there is a very simple way in which that can be done.

But my chief desire, as previously stated, was to have this House fully understand the character of this bill. I know that the general argument is that the Government of the United States should never realize any profits from its investments. That seems to be one of the arguments here; perhaps it is a good one. Certainly it is a very old one.

I will not insist upon offering an amendment to this bill if the gentleman from Arkansas feels that it would jeopardize or prejudice its passage. I want to see the schools of that State prosper, as I want to see them prosper everywhere. I presume that in a few days we shall be called upon to decide by our votes the question of appropriating within the next few years from seventy to one hundred millions of dollars for the education of the illiterate throughout this country.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS of Arkansas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM L. WHITE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. 621) for the relief of William L. White; which was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to audit and allow the claim of William L. White for actual services performed by him as a clerk in the land office at Oregon City, Oreg., under contract with the register and receiver thereof, to the amount of $1,333.33½, the balance due on said contract; and the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby authorized to pay the same out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to reserve all points of order on this bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the bill will be taken up for consideration at this time and that no point of order will be made against it. I can make a full explanation of the bill in a few minutes.

A bill exactly similar to this has been considered by a committee of this House and reported unanimously with a favorable recommendation. This is simply to pay a worthy citizen of my State for services which he rendered in the land office at Oregon City, for which services only a portion due him has been paid. The Government has recognized the services, has paid him in part, and now it is necessary to make a further appropriation in order to pay him what the Government agreed to pay him.

Mr. RANDALL. Was there a law authorizing the employment of this man, and was it a deficiency in the appropriation which prevented him from being fully paid for his services?

Mr. GEORGE. The law was peculiar. While it authorized the employment of this gentleman and others to do this work, yet it provided that it should be subject to the approval of Congress. Congress afterward appropriated the sum of $7,000 to pay these persons who had rendered service, and it was found that it was not sufficient to go around, and consequently it was applied pro rata.

It was not technically a deficiency, for the reason that the original act required the approval of Congress in reference to the final payment of these persons. It could not, therefore, be called technically a deficiency, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania will readily see, and it becomes necessary to provide the money for the payment by the passage of a private bill—in other words specially and not through the regular appropriation bill for deficiencies.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think it came here in obedience to any law either.

Mr. GEORGE. The law was passed in 1856, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to employ this gentleman, along with others, to do this particular work, which he did. This bill has passed the Senate four times. I hope the point of order will not be pressed against it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] insist on the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not in the face of a unanimous report of a committee of the House.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GEORGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DAM AT ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the joint resolution (S. R. 9) making an appropriation for the improvement of the pool above the dam at Rock Island arsenal.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. RANDALL. That ought to go to a committee. The truth is that all appropriations for the Rock Island arsenal and everything relating thereto are provided for in the sundry civil appropriation bill. If the appropriation contained in this joint resolution is a proper one it ought to be inserted in that bill with the rest of the appropriations for that public establishment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the reference of the joint resolution?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; I think it had better go to the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MRS. J. P. WILLIAMS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. 379) for the relief of Mrs. J. P. Williams.

The bill was read.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve a point of order on this bill for the purpose of inquiring whether any committee of this House has considered the matter. If not, it seems to me it ought to receive investigation from a committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that it go to the committee to which it appropriately belongs.

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

J. A. HENRY AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. 537) for the relief of J. A. Henry and others.

The bill was read.

Mr. RANDALL. Reserving the point of order, I wish to say that if I understood correctly the reading of the bill it applies to accounts which have been audited and adjusted in the Treasury Department. If so, they are probably included in a document which has been sent by that Department to the Speaker of this House, and which, by reference, is now in the possession of the Committee on Appropriations. In all probability, therefore, the claims provided for in this bill would find a place in the deficiency appropriation bill. So perhaps the bill had better go to the Committee on Appropriations. If that reference be made, I will not make a motion to reconsider and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. Hence, if the action of the House in referring the bill should be found to work a hardship, it will be within the power of any member to correct it by a motion to reconsider.

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

JAMES AND WILLIAM VANCE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. 677) for the relief of the estates of James Vance and William Vance.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the legal representatives of James Vance, deceased, and to the legal representatives of William Vance, deceased, the sum of $5,500, in full payment for the use of buildings at San Antonio, Tex., between August 5, 1865, and August 20, 1866.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not see now in the House the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] who represents the district from which this case comes.

Mr. OATES. I will state to the House that I have knowledge of these claims. In the last Congress, if I am not mistaken, they were before the Committee on Claims, and were referred to another gentleman and myself as a subcommittee. We made a thorough investigation, and if these claims are the same the proof is abundant that they are just and ought to be paid.

Mr. RANDALL. Has any committee of this House examined the matter?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania propose the reference of the bill?

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I suggest that it remain on the Speaker's table till the gentleman representing that district shall be present.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be passed over informally.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think that is the proper course, because the Committee on Claims have investigated, I think, that claim, and as stated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], if it is the same we investigated it is eminently proper it should pass or retain its place on the Calendar.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing it shall be taken up by consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] is now in his seat.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman from the San Antonio district of Texas will give his attention to this bill.

Mr. HANCOCK. Certainly. I suggest that bill has been acted on by the House committee and reported favorably. This bill comes from the Senate, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is this the same bill which was before the Committee on Claims?

Mr. HANCOCK. It is.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is proper I should state, then, this claim was examined thoroughly and carefully, and I do not hesitate to say it is a bill that ought to pass.

The facts briefly are these: The Government of the United States occupied the property for which this rent is claimed prior to the war. When the war broke out it held that property without rent or any stipulation for rent. There is no desire expressed on the part of the claimant for pay for the war period. Immediately after the war closed the commandant of the post requested the owner of the property to put it in repair. He did so, with the understanding, as the committee believed, the Government would rent it from him. The Government occupied it for a year next succeeding the war, and for that period he asks pay. He only asks the amount obtained for the property prior to the war. This does not embrace any of the war period. I think it should pass.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the War Department approve of it?

Mr. McMILLIN. My memory is it does approve of it. It is for a period subsequent to the war. The property was held under an agreement the owner should make certain repairs. He did make them, and that fact alone would be sufficient, if there were nothing else in the case, to convince the committee it was held by quasi-contract at least. It is certainly proper it should be paid for.

Mr. OATES. I remember the claim well, and the only reason why the Department did not pay it was because it was anterior to the proclamation of the President that the war had closed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HANCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

T. J. BOYLES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. 975) for the relief of T. J. Boyles, administrator of the estate of Marcus Radich, deceased; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to T. J. Boyles, administrator of the estate of Marcus Radich, deceased, of Houston, Tex., the sum of $440, in full for the rent of two buildings belonging to the said Marcus Radich, deceased, situate in Brownsville, Tex., one of which houses was occupied by the United States military authorities from August 21, 1865, to December 31, 1865, at the rate of $60 per month, and the other of which houses was occupied by the United States authorities from January 31, 1866, to March 31, 1866.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there any report on that case?

Mr. STORM. There is, and I ask it to be read.

Mr. MORRISON. That bill had better go to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. STORM. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that point.

Mr. MORRISON. Very well; I will withdraw it.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. STORM, from the Committee on War Claims, submitted the following report:

The facts out of which this claim for relief arises will be found stated in Senate report of the Committee on Claims, No. 54, first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, a copy of which is hereto appended, which said report was adopted by the Committee on War Claims in House report 1680, first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, and which said Senate report your committee adopt as their own, and report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. HOUK, from the Committee on War Claims, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 6756:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Marcos Radich, submit the following report:

The facts out of which this claim for relief arises will be found stated in Senate report of the Committee on Claims, No. 54, first session Forty-seventh Congress, a copy of which is hereto appended.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

[Senate Report No. 54, Forty-seventh Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 619) for the relief of Marcos Radich, have considered said bill, and report thereon as follows:

A bill for the relief of Marcos Radich was introduced in the Senate during the Forty-sixth Congress and referred to the Committee on Claims. It was assigned to Mr. Teller, as a subcommittee, for examination. On the 1st of March, 1880, Mr. Teller inclosed the duplicate vouchers hereinafter set forth to General M. C. Meigs, Quartermaster-General, and asked for all papers and any other information relating to said claim in the Quartermaster-General's Office.

On the 15th of March, 1880, Mr. Teller's letter was returned to him from the Quartermaster-General's Office, with the following indorsement thereon:

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, March 16, 1880.

Respectfully returned, by direction of the Quartermaster-General, to Hon. H. M. Teller, United States Senate, Washington, D. C., and attention invited to copy of letter of September 3, 1866, which is the last action of record in this office, and also to the act of February 9, 1867, as given on page 3 of General Orders No. 59 of 1867, Quartermaster-General's Office.

The transfer and amount as stated in voucher for $260 is found to have been duly reported to this office.

Regarding the voucher for $180, it is found that on Captain Plato's Form 2 for January, 1866, he takes the building up with thirteen others, with remark, "No rate of rent agreed upon. These buildings (fourteen in all) I found occupied upon assuming the duties here of supervising quartermaster, but these were not transferred to me by my predecessor. I consider it important that they should be reported as in occupation of the Government."

The report is same in February and March, 1866. Reported also on his April rolls at $60 per month, with remark, "Voucher given to March 31, 1866."

Captain Plato's rolls are approved by his commanding officer, General G. W. Getty.

JAS. L. MOORE,
Quartermaster, U. S. A.

The letter referred to in this indorsement is as follows, namely:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., September 3, 1866.

Col. C. G. SAWTELLE,
Chief Quartermaster Department of the Gulf, New Orleans, La.:

COLONEL: The papers in the claim of Marcos Radich for rent of building at Brownsville, Tex., inclosed in the letter of Col. S. H. Manning, chief quartermaster Department of Texas, and transmitted to you by this office for examination on the 2d ultimo, are herewith respectfully returned, with the information that, under instructions from the War Department, rent in Texas can not be considered prior to the President's proclamation of August 20, 1866.

By order Quartermaster-General.

Very respectfully, &c.,

J. J. DANA,
Colonel, Quartermaster's Department, Bvt. Brig. Gen. U. S. A.

The following is a copy of the duplicate vouchers transmitted to General Meigs by Mr. Teller, as hereinbefore set forth:

No. 22.

The United States to Marcos Radich, Dr.

1866, March 31. For rent of building on Elizabeth street, occupied as an ordnance warehouse, from August 21, 1865, to December 31, 1865, being four months and ten days, at $60 per month..... $260

BROWNSVILLE, TEX.

This voucher is given subject to the approval of the chief quartermaster Department of Texas, whose particular attention is called to Maj. O. O. Potter's certificate on No. 53, namely:

I certify that the transfer-list bearing date January 1, 1866, but actually transferred on the 24th day of April, 1866, contains the building actually occupied, with the true time and rental, determined by a board of officers; that circumstances beyond my control prevented me from making the actual transfer sooner.

O. O. POTTER,
Major and Chief Quartermaster Dept. Rio Grande.

Was transferred to me by Maj. O. O. Potter, late chief quartermaster Department of the Rio Grande, on the 24th day of April, 1866, with the above amount due and remaining unpaid, said transfer-list bearing date January 1, 1866.

NELSON PLATO,
Capt. and Quartermaster, Sup. Dept. Rio Grande.

No. 22.

The United States to Marcus Radich, Dr.

1866, March 31. For rent of building on Elizabeth street, occupied as an ordnance warehouse, from January 1, 1866, to March 1, 1866, both days inclusive, being three months, at $60 per month..... $180

BROWNSVILLE, TEX.

This voucher is given with the above rental per month, subject to the approval of the chief quartermaster Department of Texas, no rent having been reported by me heretofore, nor any transferred by my predecessor.

I certify that the above account is correct and just; that the services were rendered as stated, and that they were necessary for the public service, and that the services have been reported by me, according to Army Regulations, as per my report of persons and articles for January, February, and March, 1866.

NELSON PLATO,
Capt. and Asst. Quartermaster, Supt. Quartermaster D. R. G.

The act of February 21, 1867 (volume 14, United States Statutes at Large, page 397) provides that the act of July 4, 1864, "shall not be construed to authorize the settlement of any claim for supplies or stores taken or furnished for the use of or used by the armies of the United States, nor for the occupation of or injury to real estate, nor for the consumption, appropriation, or destruction of or damage to personal property by the military authorities or troops of the United States, where such claim originated during the war for the suppression of the Southern rebellion, in a State or part of a State declared in insurrection by the proclamation of the President of the United States dated July 1, 1862, or in a State which, by an ordinance of secession, attempted to withdraw from the United States Government." On August 20, 1866, the President by proclamation declared that the insurrection in the State of Texas was at an end.

Under said act of February 21, 1867, the Departments have refused to pay any claims originating in the insurrectionary States from the beginning of the insurrection to the date of the President's proclamation declaring the insurrection at an end, whether such claims arose under contracts or otherwise. And thus all persons whose just claims are based upon an express contract between themselves and the proper officers of the Government, made within the limits of the insurrectionary States within the period above named, are forced to appeal to Congress for relief.

This claim arose out of a contract between the claimant and the proper quartermaster. It was duly certified and reported by the quartermaster, and a record of the claim is in the Quartermaster-General's Office. Your committee are of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to be paid the amount of rent agreed to be paid by Captain Plato, the proper quartermaster, to wit, the sum of $440.

For the purpose of rendering the bill more definite and certain in its terms, we recommend that the bill be amended by striking out and inserting as shown on the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STORM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STATUTE OF CHIEF-JUSTICE MARSHALL.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a suspension of the order of business of the House for a moment to pass a resolution giving the assent of the House to take part in the ceremonies of unveiling the statue of Chief-Justice Marshall on Saturday next.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives will at 1 o'clock p. m. on Saturday, May 10, attend as a body the ceremonies of unveiling the statue of John Marshall, late Chief-Justice of the United States.

The resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 3926) amending the Revised Statutes of the United States in respect of official oaths, and for other purposes.

KANSAS CITY, FORT SCOTT AND GULF RAILROAD COMPANY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the joint resolution

(S. 21) for the relief of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I make the point of order upon that bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope the gentleman will permit me to make a suggestion, reserving his right to object.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PERKINS. I merely wish to state that the same resolution has been reported by a committee of this House——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What committee?

Mr. PERKINS. From the Committee on Pacific Railroads. It was introduced here and referred to that committee, and you will find a bill identical with this on the House Calendar, on page 19.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. On that statement I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DUNN. I renew it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What was the condition of that bill in committee?

Mr. PERKINS. It has a favorable report from the committee. There is no adverse report. I will state further that this bill passed the Senate twice.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But was the action of the committee on the bill unanimous?

Mr. PERKINS. I can not say that. I only know that there was no adverse report, and I take it for granted that the action of the committee met with no dissent on the part of its members.

Mr. DUNN. I insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made, the bill will go to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. PERKINS. May I ask what objection there is to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DUNN. If I am indulged, I will state the reason. I have no objection to making known my reason.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

M. P. JONES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. 269) for the relief of M. P. Jones.

The bill was read a first and second time. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $24,597.75, to reimburse M. P. Jones for money deposited by him in the United States depository at Portland, Oreg., to complete the United States surveys along the line of the Oregon central military wagon-road in Southeastern Oregon, and to pay the expenses of the clerical work in the office of the United States surveyor-general of Oregon, said money being deposited under the provisions of an act of Congress approved May 30, 1862, upon the surrender by him to the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the duplicate or triplicate certificates of deposit held by him.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the point of order will not be made against this bill and that it will be considered now. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement with reference to it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman can make the statement.

Mr. GEORGE. This bill proposes to repay Mr. Jones for moneys which he deposited, as he thought, under a law which would allow him to use the certificate in the payment for public lands.

The House will remember that there is a law upon the statute-books providing that where money is paid under the deposit system for the survey of lands which the United States propose to survey the certificates which shall be issued for this sum of money can be used in payment for the public lands. Now, had the amount of money covered by this bill been deposited in $400 amounts, then it could have been used as I have indicated, but being deposited in a single sum of between $24,000 and $25,000, it was impossible under the law for him to avail himself of the benefits to which he was entitled. The highest single claim allowed settlers is one hundred and sixty acres, and this at $2.50 per acre would not admit of the use of a certificate amounting to over $400; consequently this twenty-four-thousand-dollar certificate has never been of any use.

The Government has had the full benefit of the money paid for its use; the surveys have been made; they have been passed upon and accepted by the Government; but Mr. Jones is not allowed the use of the certificates which he would have had if the money had been deposited in sums of $400 each. This is simply to correct an injustice and inequality of the law in his case, so that Mr. Jones may have the benefit of the deposits made by him.

I will state further that this bill has passed the Senate four different times. I believe it has been twice favorably reported to the House, and is now unanimously reported from the Committee on the Pubilc Lands. I hope the point of order will not be made against it.

The SPEAKER. Is the point of order insisted upon?

Mr. McMILLIN. Has the gentleman the report of the committee of this House?

Mr. GEORGE. I have; and it can be read, if desired.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let it be read, reserving the right to object.

The report was read. It is as follows:

Mr. BRENTS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 1301:

A bill identical in its provisions with this one passed the Senate during the Forty-fifth Congress and again at the present session of the present Congress, and is now on the Speaker's table of this House. It was also favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Public Lands during the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses, by the House Committee on the Public Lands during the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses, and by the House Committee on Claims during the Forty-seventh Congress.

After a very careful re-examination of the matter, the committee concur in these several recommendations, and adopt the views so well expressed in the report of the Senate Committee on Public Lands of the Forty-seventh Congress, which is as follows:

It appears in this case that M. P. Jones deposited to the credit of the United States in the city of Portland, Oreg., moneys for the survey of public lands in said State as follows:

	For surveys.	For office-work.
May 21, 1875	$19,470 00	$530
September 13, 1875	4,896 00	104
Total	24,366 00	634	— $25,000 00
That of this amount the United States have expended	23,963 75	634
Leaving unexpended	402 25	000	— 402 25
Leaving a balance due M. P. Jones			24,597 75

That under this deposit so made the United States made surveys of lands hereinafter described, and the United States surveyor-general for Oregon approved the maps of the same on January 3 and January 11, 1876, respectively, said surveys being as follows, to wit: of the sixth, seventh, and eighth standard parallels south, and exterior lines of township 35 south, range 26 east; exterior lines of township 36 south, ranges 25 to 31 east; exterior lines of township 37 south, ranges 24 to 28 east; exterior lines of township 38 south, ranges 25 to 28 east; exterior lines of township 29 south, range 24 to 28 east; exterior lines of township 35 south, range 31 east; exterior lines of township 32 south, range 40 east; and subdivisional surveys of township 36 south, ranges 25 to 29 east; township 37 south, ranges 24 to 28 east; township 38 south, ranges 24 to 26 east; township 39 south, ranges 23 to 25 east; township 35 south, ranges 26 to 31 east; township 36 south, ranges 25, 30, 31 east; township 37 south, range 24 east; township 38 south, range 24 east; township 39 south, range 26 east; townships 31 and 32 south, range 41 east; township 30 south, ranges 44 and 45 east; township 31 south, ranges 42 and 44 east; township 32 south, range 39 east.

That the township plats of surveys so made and so approved were filed with the proper register and receiver at the local United States land office on February 24, 1876.

That this deposit of $25,000 was not made in accordance with the provisions of any law of the United States, but this amount of $25,000, when deposited by said M. P. Jones, was placed in the United States Treasury to the credit of the fund or appropriation entitled "Deposits by individuals for the survey of public lands," under acts and resolutions of Congress provided only for the deposits of money by actual settlers for the surveys of public lands.

That the total number of acres surveyed by this district was 531,732, and of which 237,731 passed to the Oregon central military wagon-road under an act of Congress.

That the surveys made and paid for by said deposits inured to the benefit of the United States; said surveys were made under the supervision of the United States surveyor-general for Oregon in the same manner as other public-land surveys in said State were made.

That if these surveys had not been made at that time and paid for with the moneys thus and so deposited by said M. P. Jones, that then the United States, at some subsequent time, would have surveyed the same townships, and at the same cost, and paid for the same from the appropriations made by Congress from time to time for the survey of the public lands in said State.

That the grant by Congress to the Oregon central military wagon-road was made in a section of the country to which the public surveys had not been extended, and the terms of the grant require that this road should be completed within five years, and that the lands should be used for the purpose of paying for the construction of said road.

That if the lands had not been surveyed in the manner they were, then the provisions of the act of Congress could not have been complied with.

That Congress has refunded deposits of this character in similar cases (United States Statutes, volume 17, page 515), directing the payment to the Saint Paul and Sioux City Railroad Company the sum of $1,370 out of the appropriation of $50,000 for surveys in Minnesota. Said $1,370 was deposited October 4, 1869, by said company, and in accordance with said act of Congress was refunded to them on July 12, 1873. (See also volume 18, United States Statutes at Large, page 213, appropriating $10,600 to reimburse the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Company for surveys along the line of that road; money deposited August 20, 1872, and refunded August 20, 1874.)

That a bill for the payment of this amount of $25,000 to M. P. Jones (Senate bill No. 150) passed the Senate on the 15th day of June, 1878. (See Senate Journal, second session Forty-fifth Congress, page 716, June 15, 1878.) And which bill was thereafter referred to the Committee on Public Lands of the House and by it favorably considered, and by it ordered to be favorably reported to the House with a recommendation that it should pass, but which report failed to be made to the House in time to be acted upon during the Forty-fifth Congress.

That of the amount so deposited by said M. P. Jones ($25,000) the sum of $402.25 remains unexpended, and which unexpended balance has been refunded to said M. P. Jones, leaving still due him the sum of $24,597.75.

The committee unanimously concur in recommending the passage of the bill as amended.

Your committee concur in this view of this case. The Government has applied the moneys of Mr. Jones to its own use to the amount of $24,597.75. It was advanced by him to the Government in good faith, and from a necessity which grew out of his relations with the Government, and should be refunded as much as borrowed money between the individual borrower and lender.

The committee unanimously recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. GEORGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UTE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. 241) to repeal section 8 of an act entitled "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," approved June 15, 1880; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 8 of an act entitled "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," approved June 15, 1880, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and that the lands referred to in said section are hereby restored to the public domain.

Mr. BELFORD. I should like to have that bill considered at this time; and I desire to make a statement, if the House will hear me in reference to it.

Mr. WELLER. I reserve the point of order while the gentleman makes his statement.

Mr. RANDALL. I think we had better have the report in this case read.

Mr. BELFORD. I have not got the Senate report, but I can make a statement on the accuracy of which I think the House can rely.

In 1880 we passed an act to ratify an agreement with the Ute Indians by which we removed them from Colorado to Utah. There was a section of ground there close to the town of Ouray, four miles in extent, and this bill provided that that section should be subject to the same general Ute reservation. Here is a section lying close to the town of Ouray; thousands of people have entered upon it and made their homes on it; and now to refuse to pass this bill is simply to put their titles in dispute for all time to come. Every dollar that the Indians could acquire by carrying out the general provisions of the act will be given them, while you allow this land to be settled, the settlers having already entered upon it. There is no doubt about it. The people are there and they want to pay the Government the amount of money required for the entry of public lands; and under the other general provision of the act that money goes into the Indian fund.

If I can not get this bill considered now, and it goes to a committee and is reported back to be placed on the Public Calendar, I know I can not again reach it. As I have said, there are thousands of citizens of my State settled on this four-mile tract of ground and not an Indian within two hundred miles of them, and all they ask is to be permitted to pay the Government the price of the land provided for under the treaty. Therefore I ask for the present consideration of the bill. If I can not get it now I know I must fail, and that thousands of people who have homes and ranches on that four-mile strip will be in constant trepidation in regard to their titles. I have tried to make an honest statement of the thing according to my information, and I ask the House to allow the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WELLER] make the point of order?

Mr. WELLER. I do.

The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WELLER. My point of order is that the bill makes an appropriation out of the public Treasury and that it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the bill to make any appropriation. As the Chair understands, it does not make an appropriation either of money or of property. On the contrary, it restores certain lands to the public domain.

Mr. WELLER. I understand the bill does make an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill again.

The bill was again read.

Mr. WELLER. I make the further point that the bill has never been considered by a committee of this House.

The SPEAKER. That may be a good reason for proposing now to refer the bill to a committee, but it is not the ground for a point of order.

Mr. WELLER. Then I move that it be referred to the proper committee.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Indian Affairs would be the proper committee under the rules of the House, as the bill relates to an Indian reservation. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WELLER] to refer this bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 56.

Mr. WELLER. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WELLER].

Before the count by tellers was proceeded with,

Mr. WELLER said: I withdraw the point as to a quorum.

So (further count not being called for) the motion to refer the bill was not agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BELFORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDEBTEDNESS FOR INDIAN SUPPLIES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. 84) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amount due citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for payment thereof; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I make the point of order that the bill makes an appropriation, and must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The bill will go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

LOUISA BODDY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. 271) for the relief of Louisa Boddy; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. GEORGE. Another bill of similar import has become a law. The necessity for this bill therefore no longer exists.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The question was taken, and was decided in the negative.

GEORGE A. IAEGER.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. 439) for the relief of George A. Iaeger; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I make the point of order that the bill makes an appropriation. The same bill was before the Committee on Claims in the last session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. MORRISON. Before that motion is put, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the order for evening sessions for debate only.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] asks consent that the order of the House heretofore made for a daily recess from 5 o'clock until 8 o'clock p. m. be vacated.

Mr. REED. I hope the gentleman will add that the House hereafter meet at 12 o'clock instead of 11 o'clock.

Mr. MORRISON. I will not.

There being no objection, the order for evening sessions for debate only was vacated.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. HAMMOND that the House adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 84, noes 41.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. SPRINGER said: I call for the yeas and nays. There is business enough here to keep us until the middle of August.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the demand for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken, and there were 26 in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. Upon ordering the yeas and nays there are 26 in the affirmative—more than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. HAMMOND. I ask that the other side be counted.

A further count was had, and there were 124 in the negative.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers, and there were 10 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of a quorum) tellers were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. Upon ordering the yeas and nays upon the motion to adjourn there are ayes 26, noes 124. There not being one-fifth in the affirmative, the yeas and nays are not ordered.

Mr. SINGLETON. Before the result of the vote on the motion to adjourn is announced I desire to give notice that to-morrow I will call up for consideration the Congressional Library bill.

The result of the vote on the motion of Mr. HAMMOND was then announced as ayes 81, noes 41.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Also, memorial of the Grand Army of the Republic of the State of New York, relative to pensions—to the same committee.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 8, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 3926) amending the Revised Statutes of the United States in respect of official oaths and for other purposes, heretofore signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES AMONG DOMESTIC ANIMALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3967) for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle, and to provide means for the suppression and extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals.

On motion of Mr. MILLER, of New York, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MILLER, of New York, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. WILLIAMS.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1015) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

On motion of Mr. SEWELL, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendment to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SEWELL, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. COCKRELL.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask to be excused from serving on the conference committee. It is well known that I oppose any proposition in reference to that matter, and therefore I could not and would not agree in conference to any proposition to pass a law for the relief of the person mentioned. Therefore I do not think I am a proper person to be on the conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has been under the impression that one gentleman of the minority is usually put upon committees of conference. The Senator from Illinois asks to be excused from service on the conference committee. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair will appoint in place of the Senator from Illinois, excused, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY.]

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a supplemental provisional estimate for an appropriation of $272,620 made in anticipation of the probable enactment of laws involving additional labor upon the Pension Office in the adjudication of additional pension claims; which, together with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of Cummings Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Hinesburgh, Vt., in favor of the adoption of the recommendations of the pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic in regard to pensions, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MANDERSON presented resolutions adopted by William F. Barry Post, No. 159, Department of Nebraska, Grand Army of the Republic, Liberty, Nebr., favoring such legislation as will grant pensions to all ex-Union soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a resolution of Andrew Crawford Post, No. 6, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio, New Philadelphia, Ohio, favoring such legislation in regard to pensions to ex-Union soldiers as is recommended by the pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWELL presented a resolution adopted by the Northern New Jersey Indian Association, favoring an increase of the appropriation for Indian education; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a memorial of citizens of Albion, N. Y., remonstrating against the establishment of a governmental monopoly of the telegraph business; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VAN WYCK presented a resolution of Parson Brownlow Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Chester, Nebr., and a resolution of Valley Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lowell, Nebr., favoring legislation giving pensions to all ex-Union soldiers; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LOGAN presented resolutions of the Maritime Association of the port of New York, favoring the passage of House bill No. 5892, known as the Dingley pilotage bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers and sailors, the petition of A. A. Matthews Post, No. 49, Department of Wisconsin, and a petition of McPherson Post, No. 106, Department of Illinois, praying for the passage of general legislation favoring ex-Union soldiers; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Watson Post, No. 240, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois, in favor of general legislation favorable to ex-soldiers; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a letter of J. M. Hodges, commander Department of New York, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the passage of the bill providing additional pay for officers honorably mustered out under the act of July 15, 1870; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented three petitions of officers of the line of the United States Army, praying for the passage of Senate bill 1677, extending the provisions of section 1207 of the Revised Statutes to the lieutenants of the line of the Army; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented two petitions of late officers of the volunteer army, praying for the passage of the Senate bill 1306 and House bill 3485, increasing the rate of pension to all commissioned officers; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Winfield Scott Post, No. 104, Department of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of the so-called equalization-of-bounty bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Union ex-prisoners of war, citizens of Chicago, Ill., favoring the passage of Senate bill 44, granting pensions to Union ex-prisoners of war; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Oregon Post, No. 115, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the enactment of a general law favorable to pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Jasper County, Illinois, praying that the pension laws may be made less stringent; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Harker Post, No. 189, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois; resolutions adopted by Hays Post, No. 3, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania; resolutions adopted by Republic Post, No. 43, Grand Army of the Republic, Hannibal, Mo.; resolutions adopted by Ed. Crippen Post, No. 429, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois; resolutions adopted by Barnhill Post, No. 162, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois; resolutions adopted by T. H. Richardson Post, No. 92, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Missouri; resolutions adopted by R. K. McCoy Post, No. 331, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois; resolutions adopted by New Boston Post, No. 433, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois; resolutions adopted by Joe Spratt Post, No. 323, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New York; resolutions adopted by W. A. Babcock Post, No. 416, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois; and resolutions adopted by Jo. Hooker Post, No. 69, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois, indorsing the recommendations of the pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic in regard to pensions; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of 450 ex-Union soldiers of Whitesville, Conn., and vicinity, praying for the enactment of legislation favorable to ex-soldiers who were in rebel prisons; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Anna D. Werner, widow of Adolph Werner, late private Company A, Twenty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Charles B. Spencer, late of the United States Marine Corps, praying to be granted a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented resolutions of Captain Keyes Post, No. 302, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio, in favor of the passage of Senate bill 340, granting public lands to soldiers and sailors of the war of the rebellion; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of W. H. L. Wallace Post, No. 55, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, and a petition of Thomas Hardy Post, No. 214, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, praying the passage of an act giving to every ex-Union soldier and sailor who served sixty days in the war of the rebellion a pension of $8 a month; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a telegraphic memorial from Elmer Washburn, president of the Chicago (Ill.) Live Stock Exchange, remonstrating against the enactment of any law in regard to the contagious diseases of cattle; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of inventors and manufacturers, citizens of Chicago, Ill., and vicinity, remonstrating against the pending legislation changing the patent laws; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. HARRIS. I present the petition of Wright Rives and a number of other citizens of the District of Columbia, praying that a special appropriation be made for the improvement of the Bladensburg road. I will ask its reference, at present, to the Committee on the District of Columbia, while the ultimate reference should be to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4981) granting a pension to Isabella I. Ramsdell, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 773) granting a pension to Mrs. Kady Brownell, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLAIR. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1923) granting a pension to Clarissa T. Maies, to report it adversely and recommend its indefinite postponement. The claim has been allowed under the general law by the Commissioner of Pensions.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BLAIR. By direction of the same committee, I report back the bill (H. R. 5464) granting a pension to Clarissa T. Maies with the same recommendation, that it be indefinitely postponed, both bills being indefinitely postponed because of the allowance of the claim by the Commissioner of Pensions.

The bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5667) granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported adversely thereon; and they were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 30) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican and other wars therein named, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 666) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican and other wars therein named, and for other purposes.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1940) granting a pension to Thomas Williams, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

WILBUR F. M'DANIEL.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution declaring that the services of Wilbur F. McDaniel, provided for by Senate resolution of May 20, 1879, shall be terminated, reported it with an amendment, striking out "May 5" and inserting "May 9."

Mr. PLATT. Having voted on the yeas and nays against the amendment of the resolution when it was before the Senate, I suppose it is hardly necessary for me to say that I do not concur in this report of the committee. At the same time, the action of the Senate having been taken upon it, I shall make no extended opposition to it.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I ask that the resolution be placed on the Calendar. I shall call it up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be placed upon the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 82) in relation to ceremonies to be authorized upon the completion of the Washington Monument.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 2334) to release the American Baptist Home Mission Society from the conditions of the sale of the Marine-Hospital building and grounds at Natchez, Miss.; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 2181) for the benefit of D. R. Haggard; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2182) granting a pension to Joseph Lowry; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GROOME (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2183) to determine the rights of William Wheeler Hubbell and the United States, respectively, therein stated; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SHOOTING OF BLACK WOLF.

Mr. DAWES. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to inform the Senate what measures, if any, have been taken by the Department of Justice for the arrest and trial of Hal Palfarino for the shooting of the Indian Black Wolf, on or about the 12th of March last, in the Territory of Montana, and whether any reasons known to the Department exist why said Palfarino has not been brought to trial for such alleged offense.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to put on record the facts in this case, that they may aid the Department of Justice if it is groping around in the dark for any person who has committed this offense.

There is a little band of Cheyenne Indians who went up on the Tongue River, in Montana, in 1877, and are located there as farmers upon land, as peaceable as any Indians or any white men, and are cultivating farms there. They were pressed very much last winter by the severity of the winter, and we have made a special appropriation for their relief. The Interior Department has taken considerable pains to see that their farms are supplied and fenced.

Last March the herdsmen who occupied the public domain there, without any more right to it than I have, with their cow-boys, were in that vicinity, and in broad daylight one of their cow-boys made a bet with his associates that he could put a ball through the hat of an Indian who was at a distance without hitting his skull. The wager was taken, but the cow-boy made a mistake and fired a little too low and brought down the Indian. The Indian's friends, in anger at what they deemed an outrage upon private rights, combined, and, as is always the case, visited their vengeance upon an innocent household and burned down the house of an innocent party a short distance off, and we came very near having an Indian war. We were only saved from an Indian war by the vigilance of the officials of Montana, who seized the Indians who burned down this man's house and tried them and sentenced them to the penitentiary for four and five years for burning down the house. They had no right to burn it down, and they could not make any defense; but the man who fired the bullet through the head of the Indian has gone his way. He has never been arrested; he goes about there like any other man and is just as well known to everybody in that vicinity as any other man, and the interesting fact that I have related in connection with his history is known, for the deed was done in broad daylight before the people.

This is my information, communicated from the officials and the Interior Department. This was known and published in the papers last March, but it has just come through the official channels to the Interior Department. I thought it possible it might be well for the Department of Justice to be inquired of whether they had taken any steps or what obstacles there were in the way of bringing this man to trial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

BURLINGTON HARBOR.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to report to the Senate, as soon as may be, the extent of the damage done to the United States breakwater in the harbor of Burlington, Vt., by the recent gale there, together with an estimate of the amount necessary for its reparation.

PUYALLUP BRANCH OF NORTHERN PACIFIC.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask for the present consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to withhold granting patents to or recognizing any claim made by the Northern Pacific Railroad adjoining and on account of what is known as the Puyallup Branch, built many years ago, until this Congress shall take action on the question of the forfeiture of lands granted to said road.

Mr. CONGER. That had better lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over until to-morrow and be printed, if there be no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 241) to repeal section 8 of an act entitled "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," approved June 15, 1880;

A bill (S. 258) donating a part of the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, Ark., to the city of Fort Smith for the use and benefit of the free public schools thereof, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 269) for the relief of M. P. Jones;

A bill (S. 621) for the relief of William L. White;

A bill (S. 677) for the relief of the estates of James Vance and William Vance; and

A bill (S. 975) for the relief of T. J. Boyles, administrator of the estate of Marcus Radich, deceased.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the act (S. 767) for the relief of Columbus F. Perry and Elizabeth H. Gilmer.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, being the shipping bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1448) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine, encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. MCPHERSON in section 19, to strike out from line 6 to line 10, inclusive, as follows:

For transporting the mails of the United States between any port of the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the Atlantic and ports in the Pacific, touching at any foreign port, a sum not exceeding $1 per mile on the trip each way of actual.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For transporting the mails of the United States from any port of the United States to any foreign port a sum not exceeding $1 per mile; and between Atlantic ports of the United States and the Pacific ports of the United States, touching at any foreign port, a sum not exceeding $1 per mile on the trip each way of actual.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. FRYE. In justice to the Senator from Alabama, who is going to make some remarks on the amendment he has offered, as well as in justice to myself, I desire to say that the Senator from Alabama in a conference I had with him a few days ago expressed himself as very desirous if a duty was put upon ships admitted to American registry that the duty should be ad valorem. I combated as well as I could the idea, I preferring a specific duty, and I thought for well-established grounds. Since then I have been led to investigate very carefully the cost of these ships, and I find that they cost from $60 a ton to $225 a ton, instead of the information which I conveyed to the Senator the other day. The Alaska cost $215 a ton; the Oregon cost a little over $215 a ton; iron sailing ships cost from $60 to $70 a ton; so that if you put on one specific duty it is obliged to reach across a chasm from $60 to $225. That would not do at all. On $60 it would be 40 per cent. ad valorem; on $225 it would not be over 6 per cent. ad valorem.

I desired to make this explanation before the Senator proceeded that he might understand it. My judgment now is with the Senator's judgment before our conference, and that is that the duty must be ad valorem on account of the wide difference in the cost of the vessels.

Mr. BAYARD. Or arranged in proportion to the cost of the ship in some way or other.

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, my purpose has been throughout the whole of this investigation to find some common ground upon which we can stand for the purpose of carrying into effect the common desire which is recited and expressed in the title of the bill, "to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine, encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and for other purposes." I have not participated in the debate, because I was sitting at the feet of Gamaliel all the while. I do not profess to have studied this question in the economic views of it as I know it has been studied by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], and other gentlemen who have devoted a great deal of time to such investigations. Never having lived on the seaboard, not having any practical information about shipping or navigation, I have to gather my information from those persons who are better informed than myself.

I am very glad to find that the House and the Senate and Senators on both sides of this Chamber are agreed upon a good many of the propositions involved in the bill. I hope that we will come to a final agreement upon some bill that will pass both bodies; for if we can not at a single movement gain all that either side may think best, we ought at least to accomplish all that we agree should be done. Whenever I find that we have reached a point where there is a disagreement between the two Houses as to any part of the bill, and at the same time that the two Houses have agreed substantially upon other parts of it, I for one shall sustain that action, as far as it goes, in order to get some remedial legislation upon our statute-books.

My study of the history of this subject as far as it has gone has convinced me that it is necessary now, in some measure at least, to reverse the policy with which our fathers set out when they were engaged not merely in commercial but in actual controversy—warfare—with one of the greatest powers in the world. We have also grown up to a very great and commanding stature in respect of our ability to compete with foreign powers and foreign governments commercially and in every other sense; and although it appears that our commerce has fallen back until we now have only about 85 per cent. of the tonnage engaged in the transportation of our own surplus productions, yet compensation has come to the people of the United States in a way that has been extremely valuable to us.

I am not of the number who are disposed to complain at our situation merely because we have lost a large amount of the tonnage that we used to have upon the high seas. I have no doubt at all that our legislation has, in later years, very largely contributed to that loss; but the attention and the capital of the American people have been withdrawn from investments and enterprises upon the high seas and have been directed in other channels, whereby the country has very greatly profited.

We are constantly in the habit of contrasting our situation with that of Great Britain. We have learned many lessons of wisdom from Great Britain, and we are continuing to copy her lessons almost daily in our legislation and in our public administration, not perhaps with any disadvantage to us. At the same time I do not know that I can commend in the fullest sense that spirit which causes us to trail after Great Britain and merely to copy her systems of economy, her systems of administration, and her systems of commerce without indulging American skill and genius and enterprise and capital and industry in the beneficial exercise of those immense powers which have been so rapidly and so splendidly developed in later days.

The improvements in postage, the reduction of the rates of postage, have been copied very largely from Great Britain, and indeed a good part of our financial system sooner or later has been copied from the experience of Great Britain. Our commercial system and laws of navigation have been copied also from Great Britain, but in this particular we take the old statutes and the old experience instead of the more modern, appearing to be fearful to strike out and enter upon a system which is peculiarly American and which is justified by our own situation.

Great Britain has built up her merchant marine more largely from the fact that she is the center of a vast system of colonial possessions than from any other fact. With a small area of territory included in the kingdom, she has immense outlying possessions separated from her by wide dividing seas, and she has been compelled to build up by every encouragement she could possibly devise to give the most rapid and safe and economical means of intercommunication with her colonies abroad.

We have a very compact country, not separated in fact by any great natural barriers, certainly not by any water barriers. We have an immense area of country as yet but partially subdued, I may say, even to civilization. We have nine large Territories, out of which we shall make at least nine States, and we may make as many as fifteen or twenty. We have a large number of governments in the United States that are still incomplete. We even adopt the laws of savage tribes for the purpose of governing a very large portion of our own citizens. In the effort to extend the conveniences of commerce between the different distant points of our own country we have spent enormous sums of money an immense outlay of labor and material of every description, and it is one of the marvels of the age that we should have expended so largely and should have made these investments profitable in this country. Our attention has necessarily been drawn to the subject of intercommunication between our distant commercial points within our own border, while that of Great Britain has been drawn to the establishment of like communication between commercial points separated from the mother country by vast intervening oceans.

Under these circumstances, Mr. President, I do not think that we have any cause to deprecate the fact that while we have been improving so greatly and growing so rapidly in one direction, Great Britain has been able to compass so much of advantage and success on the high seas of the world. But now, having grown up to that degree of stature and that force in respect of our productive industries and in respect also of the surplus that we are daily sending abroad to foreign countries, we begin to turn our attention naturally and necessarily to improving the merchant marine of our country, and in doing this we find certain barriers in the way which Congress is now earnestly setting about to try to remove or to modify, and I will lend my hand and my voice to that work, because I esteem it now to be one of the essential elements of a correct national policy on the part of the people of the United States.

I am of that class of politicians, if you call us politicians, who believe that this subject will never be properly handled until we have reformed our tariff system; but I waive the discussion of any question of that kind this morning. It has been sufficiently argued and discussed before the Senate, and the body as at present organized is not in favor perhaps of any general reformation of the tariff laws of the United States. I must therefore content myself with doing the best that I can within the limits of the system that already exists and which I shall have no power and no opportunity now to improve. I can not go as far as I would like to go, but still I will go as far as I can in the direction of removing the burdens upon the American merchant marine.

The points upon which the two Houses are agreed and the points upon which we have already passed in the Senate in the consideration of this bill are as follows:

First, that a foreigner may be employed on an American ship even in the coastwise trade in case of necessity arising while the ship is on a foreign voyage or a voyage from an Atlantic to a Pacific port. When the ship loses any officer below the rank of captain or master and is engaged in the foreign trade or engaged in trade between the Atlantic and the Pacific ports, she may for that voyage engage men of foreign birth. That is a relaxation in favor of the ship-owner to enable him to navigate his vessel.

Second, we agree that when a seaman is discharged under sections 4560, 4561, 4580, 4582, 4583, and of the Revised Statutes, he may have one month's extra pay or wages instead of three months'. That may be called the sailor's contribution to the relief of the burden upon the American merchant marine.

It seems that the observation and experience of men acquainted with this subject have taught them that it is not necessary now, and perhaps it is injurious, to give to a seaman under any circumstances three months' advance pay, or indeed any advance pay whatever; and it is also not right, not just, that when a seaman is discharged in a foreign country, no matter for what cause, he shall receive more than one month's additional wages.

This is a very large concession which we require the seaman to make for the benefit of the navigator and ship-owner. I do not know how they will receive it, whether they will retire from our merchant service on account of it or not. I must put my trust in respect to this matter in the judgment of those who are better informed than myself, and I will therefore sustain that provision of the bill notwithstanding that it appears to be a harsh one, at least harsh as compared with the system that heretofore gave the seaman three months' pay whenever he was discharged for any cause in a foreign port.

In section 10 of this bill we forbid the payment of any wages to seamen in advance under any circumstances or for any cause, but we permit a man to enter into a stipulation at the time he makes his contract for shipment that his wife or his family may be provided for out of his pay after it is earned. An exception is made in this section in favor of whalers, which I suppose to be a proper exception. This is another very considerable concession made in behalf of our American seamen for the purpose of taking the burdens off the merchant marine. A seaman ships on board a vessel and goes abroad not knowing when he can return or whether he is to be cast away upon the voyage or not, and he is not permitted to make any provision for his family by receiving wages in advance, and he is only permitted by a stipulation in the articles of shipment that his wife or his family shall receive a certain proportion of his wages. That concession made by the seaman I have no doubt is to him a very important one. Still I will make no point that we should not require it of him for the reason that the experience of the committee, and it seems of the committees of both Houses, and, indeed, the experience of both Houses as expressed in their votes concurs in the proposition that that is a just requirement to make of him.

Now, sir, for all these concessions made by the sailor for the relief of these burdens, we give to the sailor the advantage of a slop-chest in which he can purchase certain articles that are required to be kept, such as clothing, flannel, shirts, tobacco, &c., at an advance of 10 per cent. on the wholesale price in the port at which these articles are purchased or the port from which the ship last sailed. An American ship sailing from an American port with this slop-chest on board and thus supplied would of course buy the goods in American markets, charged with all the duties that our revenue laws impose upon them, whether external or internal. This seaman would be required, of course, to pay 10 per cent. profit on tobacco on its original value or cost with the internal-revenue duty added, and as to his blankets, his woolen jackets, his clothing of every description, he would be required to pay American prices, and duty added, with 10 per cent. profit added.

That is another concession that he makes, and it is an important one for a poor man, that the master of the vessel or the owner of the vessel shall become his merchant while he is abroad, shall furnish him, of course, having the exclusive right to furnish because he has no money to buy it anywhere else, with what he may need upon the voyage, and that the sailor shall be required to pay him a profit not exceeding 10 per cent. after having paid the duties which were imposed upon the goods that are brought in from abroad.

In addition to this advantage of the slop-chest, if that is any advantage to him at all, we relieve the sailors as a class of about $400,000 a year (if I understand the figures) hospital tax, and we assume the burden upon the Treasury of the United States of sustaining the hospitals which hitherto have been sustained by a contribution of 40 cents a month from every sailor who ships on board an American ship.

Mr. ALLISON. This hospital tax, I will say to the Senator, is also levied on all our coastwise trade. It applies to inland trade as well as to our foreign trade.

Mr. MORGAN. Nevertheless it is a contribution made by men engaged in service upon the waters, and I am speaking now of the contributions these men have made for the relief of burdens on the American merchant marine. My purpose is to contrast, if I can, fairly and correctly the contributions that are made under this bill by the different classes of men with whom we deal in the change of the laws proposed to be changed by this bill.

From the ship-owner or the navigator, the man who is interested in the charter-party or whatever it may be, the man who receives the freights from the ship and the profits that may result from its use, we take off all consular fees of every kind and character, and we put that burden upon the Treasury of the United States. We do not repeal the consular fees; they are to be paid, but we remove them from the ship and from the navigator, the man interested in the freights, and place them upon the Treasury of the United States to be paid by the people at large. This is another contribution of $100,000 a year, at the present rates of income from that source, which the people of the United States make at large for the purpose of lifting the burdens off the merchant marine. I have not any doubt that that is a good contribution and that the people of the United States ought to stand that tax rather than to have their vessels handicapped by consular charges in foreign ports. Some governments, I understand, do not make these charges upon their navigators, and we ought to give to our navigators in all the different parts of the world every advantage that is possessed by the navigators of any other country that pretends to be a commercial country. So I do not complain of that transfer of $100,000 a year, a sum that will be very much increased, I have no doubt, in the future from the navigators themselves to the general Treasury of the United States.

We proceed further in our agreement in this matter and we take off the entire tonnage tax and thereby deplete the Treasury to the extent of $1,400,000 a year. That sum of course would be very much increased under existing laws as our tonnage is increased. The repeal of the tonnage tax is so much money taken out of the Treasury by our consent, and so much reduction of the revenue annually that we should otherwise receive into the Treasury but for the repeal that we are now, I hope, about to enact, that is said to be a war tax. I am in favor of getting rid of war taxes, and if there were nothing else in this bill to recommend it to me, I should sustain it because it does get rid of $1,400,000 a year of war taxes. It is wrong that the people in time of peace or any portion of the people, whether they are navigators or whether they are producers or consumers, should be compelled to contribute to the Treasury of the United States taxes that had been abandoned entirely under the policy of this Government before the war and were then reinstated merely because there existed a state of war which required a very large amount of money to carry on the operations of the Government.

I, for one, shall rejoice in the passage of that feature of this bill, and I was very glad yesterday to find that the Senate, upon the offer of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to amend the bill in this particular, came to an agreement, both sides of the Chamber concurring on that subject, taking off all the tonnage tax from foreign ships. The removal of the tonnage tax from foreign ships is essentially a free-trade movement. Any vessel may come to the port of New York or elsewhere in the United States after this bill shall have been enacted into a law without paying any tonnage tax at all. In that particular they are admitted precisely on a parity with American ships. There is no particular reason why this concession should be made to this class of owners of foreign property except that in making the concession we remove a restriction amounting to a heavy tax upon one of our own industries. We give, in other words, a greater freedom to trade. The principle involved in it commends itself to my approval, and the results to be attained by it would justify it, even if there was some violation of principle involved; but where the result and the principle coincide I am very cheerful in giving my consent to the passage of that feature of this bill.

We remit the duties on all articles of foreign production needed and actually withdrawn from bonded warehouses for the supplies of vessels engaged in foreign trade or between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. That must amount to a very large sum. I have heard no estimate as yet made upon that subject, but the supplies that may be withdrawn from the bonded warehouses by foreign ships and by American ships must amount in the aggregate to a very large sum of money. Upon that we retain nothing. We do not, as I understand the law, retain even 10 per cent. for collection, for it is not in the light of a rebate that this is given, but it is the privilege of withdrawing from the bonded warehouse, without the payment of any duties, whatever may be necessary for the supplies of ships sailing abroad from any American port.

There is a discrimination in this also in favor of the foreign navigator. It is not American ships alone that can withdraw from bonded warehouses their supplies without the payment of duty. American and foreign ships may do the same thing, and after goods have been imported here from foreign countries and left in our bonded warehouse, these American and these foreign ships may take them out without the payment of any duty or charge whatever, unless it may be some warehousing charge—I am not sure about that—and use them in their voyages across the seas. That is a very large contribution to commerce, it is a very large contribution to ship-owning in general, to the business of owning and navigating ships; and I sometimes look with surprise upon the contrast which is presented in this bill between the liberality of Senators in allowing such advantages to foreign ships in the respects to which I have already alluded, and their illiberality in refusing to allow Americans who may wish to own foreign vessels and employ them in the American trade or to give them an American register to exercise this clear national right.

The truth is, Mr. President, that when we survey the whole body of the statutes upon the subject of our navigation laws we find that, with one exception, every act that has been passed since the first navigation laws were enacted in this country has been in the direction of the relaxation of the rigors of this system. We have found reasons and excuses one after another, whenever we have touched the subject, for having some relaxation in the stringency of our navigation laws. I am in favor of going on with that relaxation and modification, and proceeding with it as rapidly as we can safely do, not for the purpose of reaching at a bound some view or theory that may be advanced by doctrinaires in political economy, but reaching, through the steady steps of progress, experience, and demonstration, the final result of the liberation of our commerce from the unnecessary, antiquated, and unjust restrictions; and I am glad to be able to point out to the Senate to-day that in the course of the history of our legislation on this subject we have been all the time proceeding in the direction of such relaxation.

The iron rule of prohibition is gradually giving way to the more reasonable and enlightened policy of fair competition in building and running ships.

Now, sir, there is no more important step that can be taken in the direction of relaxing the navigation laws than that encouragement shall be given to free trade upon the high seas between vessels of American build and vessels of foreign build, in enabling both classes of vessels to take materials from our bonded warehouses, without any charges whatever, for supplies across the high seas. This is a good policy, and I heartily commend our Republican friends for its adoption into this bill.

When we come to apply principles of justice and equity and equality to this view of the case, a very natural inquiry arises why it is that a man who carries food or who carries merchandise of any kind from New York to San Francisco by a ship of American build should be permitted to get all his imported supplies free of duty from an American warehouse, and the man who carries the same goods across the continent on a railway, a steamboat or canal, or a wagon should be required to pay an average ad valorem duty of 43 per cent. on everything that he uses. When you come to look at it in that light you find that the relaxation of the rule in favor of commerce and navigation is a very striking one, somewhat remarkable. But Senators seem to incorporate features of this kind in their bills, and make grants of this kind in favor of ship-owners and ship-builders, who would spurn the idea of making a discrimination of that character in favor of a railroad company or a common carrier carrying freight from New York to San Francisco overland.

Mr. President, we become inconsistent, it appears, in this country by force of circumstances; and it is a very pleasing reflection that we are not always consistent in doing wrong, and that we sometimes do things for the public welfare in spite of our inconsistency in refusing to do other things of precisely the same character for the welfare of the public in another direction. Here is another very important relaxation upon this subject of the iron rule of prohibition. On vessels built in the United States for foreign account, and made of foreign materials, we remit all duties upon the materials except 10 per cent.; we give this as a drawback. An American ship-builder wants to build a steamship of the very highest class, like the Oregon, that, I believe, the Senator from Maine says it costs about $220 a ton to build. He is prepared with all his plant, his machinery of every description, his capital. Commencing with the reduction of the ores into metal he goes through all the process of construction until he turns out upon the sea a beautiful ship, splendidly equipped in every particular, finished in the latest style of excellence in all regards. He is building it not for an American owner, but for an English owner; he is building it for foreign account, and not for American account.

When he comes to the question of the material which he uses in that ship all the tariff that we lay upon all such material as is used in one of these magnificent palatial ships is remitted to him, paid back to him as drawback, except 10 per cent., and that 10 per cent. is reserved merely to pay the expenses of collection and reimbursement. He says to the purchaser of the ship, being an Englishman and desiring to put his ship under the British flag, and not being an American and enjoying that glory which was described yesterday so beautifully and eloquently by the Senator from Maine, "I will build you a ship 33 per cent. cheaper than I can afford to build one for an American to go under the American flag." "Forty-three per cent. is the average duty upon the material under the tariff laws of the United States." "If I build a ship for you all the material used that is liable to duty is entitled to a rebate of the whole sum of the duty except 10 per cent. Forty-three per cent. being the average duty, I can build a ship for you at a cost of 33 per cent. less than I can build it for an American citizen." He builds the ship under our iron rule of prohibition to recruit the British commercial fleet, and we pay him a premium of 33 per cent. for this patriotic service.

That is in this bill. That is what we are now enacting. We are putting it in the power of an American ship-builder, because he has a shipyard on these coasts and because he himself is an American, to recruit the British merchant-marine fleet at his will and pleasure at a cost of 33 per cent. less than he can build a ship for an American owner. In view of this cold, solid fact, let us inquire what becomes of these inflammatory bursts of patriotic zeal about building ships for the American flag?

Mr. FRYE. The Senator speaks of this as a new law embodied in this bill. It is a law that has been upon the statute-book for twenty years, and applies not only to ships but to every manufacture in America. It carries out the principle established more than seventy-five years ago by law, and the provision in this bill is simply to enable the ship-builder to use home materials instead of foreign materials. That is all it is in this bill for. It changes but one word, and that is it says "wholly or in part," putting in the words "in part."

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, Mr. President, it is a further relaxation of course in favor of commerce, and that relief inures to the advantage of the foreign ship. It is not to make foreign ships cost more; it is to make them cost less. It is not to make the profits of the American builder less; it is to make them more. That is the object of it. The change is only of a single word, but that change is a great deal. It is a relaxation, a step in advance to meet me in the policy I am advocating, and I am glad to welcome the Senator from Maine as he comes moving gently in my direction on this question. I am not criticising him; I am dealing very gently with him, and I hope he will stand to the ground he has taken and not fly when he sees where it is leading him.

There was a reason for putting it in this bill, for calling up this old law which has been so long on the statute-book and putting a new word into the body of it, and re-enacting it, and that reason is the very same that induced every section in this bill to be enacted "to relieve the burdens of the American merchant marine and to encourage the American foreign carrying trade." They do not say "encourage the American ship-builder," but the "other purposes" cover that. So this part of the bill is exactly in harmony with the declared purpose in the title, and exactly in harmony also with every other part of this entire measure, and I am gratified to find that it is so.

Now, Mr. President, it must be confessed that there is some difference between a ship which is built to live forty or fifty years and goods that are imported from abroad and intended for annual consumption, or consumption within periods much less than a year. We import silks, cotton goods, woolens, shoes, articles of iron and steel suited for domestic industry, for housekeeping purposes, for the various different purposes that mankind need such articles for. These articles, when they are imported under an average duty of 43 per cent., in nine cases out of ten will perish in the consumption, and perish within a very short time; but a ship is built to live forty or fifty years, especially an iron or steel ship, and here we find that all the materials of every kind, whether of iron, or steel, or copper, or brass, or yellow metal, all of the glass in the furniture of the ship, all of the mahogany and rosewood, and the other rich woods, all the fine articles of decoration, all the paintings of every description, all the furniture, all the skill of the machinist in the preparation of his engines and other machines, all of these things when imported from abroad and liable in the hands of an American consumer, whether he is a ship-owner or whether he is not, to a tax of 43 per cent., are, if imported and put into a ship that is to live fifty years, and to be owned by a foreigner, subject to a tax of 10 per cent. This is discriminative legislation against everybody except the ship-builder and his foreign employer, but its tendency is to reduce freights and passage-money, and I will not quarrel with it.

This is a discrimination against the American ship-owner, and against all American producers and consumers, in favor of the American ship-builder and in favor of the foreign ship-owner; and yet Senators with a bill like this, containing such discrimination upon an article of the character of a great steel ship, are talking to us about a want of patriotism when we ask them to make some concession in favor of the consumers and the producers in this country in the duties upon those things which these ships are to carry, and also in favor of men who want to buy ships and ask no more than the privilege to find a market in which they can buy them at fair prices.

It would not be unbecoming in me to say that these positions are by no means consistent, if they are not absolutely contradictory of each other. We go further than that; and after having in 1873, I believe it was, or 1874, by statute interfered with the liability of ship-owners for damages and for contracts, limiting their liability to that of corporators, so that a man's liability for embezzlements on board a ship can not extend beyond his interest in the ship itself; in this bill we still further liberalize those laws, and I am afraid that we do it at the expense of the whole system of maritime accountability, and of the credit of our ships. But this is another step in the direction of liberality which I suppose we must accept, as it is intended to lift a burden from the ship-owner, and to lessen the risk of that line of investment.

Now, sir, in all of these things we have substantially agreed. No quibbles, no constrained points, no unnecessary or factious objections have been taken to all of these decided advances in the direction of the liberalization of the laws affecting our merchant marine. The sailors make their contribution, the farmers make their contribution, the merchants give up their security for losses, the tax-payers of the United States at large make their contribution; everybody makes a contribution to this scheme of liberalizing the maritime commerce of the country and the fostering of the merchant marine except only the ship-builder and the ship-owner. I say that they, too, should come in and join in the modification of this system, and make some contribution and concession out of the monopolies and the peculiar advantages which have been secured to them by law. But, sir, they have held on since the foundation of this Government to everything that they could grasp, even through the distress of the country in times of exigency, when it was necessary that the Government of the United States, in order to preserve its existence, should give them monopolistic power that they never would have got under other circumstances. They hold on to that, although the condition of the country has changed from war to peace, and they demand now a relief from all war taxes, and at the same time they demand that they shall be permitted to hold on to all the advantages which were given to them because of the war.

Look at the statute, which still remains on the statute-book, enacted in 1862, when our ships were leaving the American flag because the confederate cruisers were making that flag an insufficient protection to them. They went off during the war because the Government of the United States did not have the power to protect them, and they took shelter under the British and German and French flags. Thereupon, for the first time in the history of the Government, a statute was enacted that any ship that left the American registry during the war should never afterward be permitted to return, though she might be owned by American citizens. That law stands on the statute-book yet, and you can not get a ship-owner in the United States or a ship-builder to consent to the repeal of that statute, although the events have long since passed which render that statute at all necessary or justifiable. No, sir; they keep those ships under the ban, and whether they are iron or steel ships or whether they are wooden ships, having been driven from the American flag because the flag was not able then to protect them, these men hold to the advantages of their expatriation and deny to these ships the right to come back under American register.

Their crime was that the ocean was made unsafe for them by a foe that their Government could not protect them against.

Mr. BAYARD. Does not the Senator regard such a law as that to which he has referred, and which law still remains on the statute-book, as a kind of punishment to those who owned ships and sought under the disguise of a foreign flag to escape from the ravages which the Government of their country was unable to protect them against otherwise? Was it not a punitive measure upon the part of the Congress of the United States?

Mr. MORGAN. It was punitive.

Mr. BAYARD. To prevent those ships from returning to the national register because forsooth they had for the time being sought to gain safety by taking the disguise of a foreign register. There never was, my friend will permit me to say, a more absurd and a more unjust enactment than that, and coming when it did it had as much to do with dispersing that corps of sailors and navigators essential for a mercantile marine as almost anything in this history of the decline of American shipping. But what my friend seems to consider a fault on the part of the ship-owners was in fact their misfortune. They were made the unhappy victims of a piece of stupid legislation.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not speaking of those ship-owners who were compelled to take refuge under a foreign flag because our flag was not able to protect them. I speak of that class of ship-owners who are here now for the purpose of preventing any relaxation in the navigation laws, who are unwilling that those ships which were driven out during a time of war should now come back under the American flag.

Mr. BAYARD. It would be an idle thing. The war ended in 1865 and this is 1884, nineteen years.

Mr. FRYE. And those were wooden ships.

Mr. BAYARD. And those were wooden ships and by this time, of course, are good for nothing.

Mr. MORGAN. That does not alter the principle. I was using that argument not with a view of attempting to amend this bill so as to reform what I find to be an evil, that other Senators agree is an evil, but I was using it for the purpose of showing what is universally true, that when you confer upon any class of people in this country, or in any other country, by law, a monopolistic advantage, the exclusive control of a certain manufacture, the exclusive control of a certain market, the exclusive advantage of the power of a certain department of the Government, the exclusive benefits and advantages derived from any source of authority whatsoever, you never find them willing to relax their hold upon it.

Now, sir, after we have given to the ship-owners and the ship-builders of this country all that we offer them in this bill, what do they propose to give the rest of the people? What do they propose to concede to other interests out of the advantages which they hold? Nothing whatever. They stand firm and immovable upon the proposition that they shall have a law prohibiting any foreign-built vessel from coming under American register under any circumstances, and that they still shall have a law prohibiting any foreign man from having ownership in a ship that is engaged in American traffic, whether coastwise or foreign.

We have not asked them to relax their demands in respect of the latter proposition, but we have asked them to relax that feature of the navigation laws which prohibits a foreign ship from coming into American register under any and all circumstances. In this particular there has been some unconscious relaxation conceded by the prohibitionists because of imperative necessity. It did not hurt the ship-builder; it did not hurt the ship-owner particularly to give up this little concession; but still from time to time Congress has found it necessary, unavoidably necessary, to make a relaxation of this rule in certain cases. One of them is where a ship is wrecked upon our coast and she is repaired by an American ship-carpenter and she becomes the property of an American citizen, though she might have been built abroad, if the repairs put upon her are equal to two-thirds of her cost when repaired she is entitled to an American register.

Another relaxation is in the case of ships that are captured and condemned as prize of war. When they are brought into our ports, condemned as prize of war, sold and bought by American citizens, those ships, no matter where they may have been built, are entitled to an American register. So a ship that is forfeited for crime, a ship that violates the revenue laws of the United States and is liable to forfeiture and condemnation, is taken into an admiralty court and condemned for a criminal violation of the laws of the United States, as, for instance, if she came in here for the purpose of conducting an expedition against Cuba, or for the purpose of violating in any respect our revenue laws, we carry her into court, we condemn her, we sell her to American citizens, and that ship, owned abroad at the time she committed the violation of the law, is entitled to an American register after she is bought.

These relaxations have all been made in the presence of circumstances that seemed to demand them, and I deny that the policy which has been so long upon our statute-book of prohibiting the introduction of foreign-built ships to American register is based upon anything else than what was conceived to be the true commercial policy of this country at the time those laws were enacted. It never was intended as a settled policy or as an American system, and it should yield when a change in our condition renders it convenient and proper to dispense with it. There is no principle involved in the question whether a ship that carries the American flag ought to be an American-built ship or a foreign-built ship. That is simply a matter of commercial convenience and to the advantage of our merchants. The contribution to our commercial strength is just the same in the one case as in the other. The loyalty of the ship is just the same; the jurisdiction of our country over her is just the same; her means for transporting commerce are just the same; and there is nothing connected with the idea that a foreign-built ship can not be entitled to an American register except the mere fact that we want to build up yards and facilities for constructing ships on our own shores. That is all we gain by our resort to a rigid principle of this character. There is no philosophy in it; no political economy or wisdom in it beyond the mere encouragement to ship-yards, and we find that we relax it whenever we choose if the necessity for the relaxation becomes more apparent than the value of the rule.

There is but one reason now existing to support this prohibitory law, and that is found in the practical monopoly it affords to a few ship-builders.

After we have progressed thus far with this bill and have put into it all that we supposed properly related to it for the purpose of relieving the burdens of the American merchant marine, it is now proposed to introduce an entire change in our sea postal system for the purpose of giving certain advantages additional to our American ships that they do not now possess. I recognize, and have since I have been in this body, the necessity of an entire change in our ocean postal system. I have not any doubt that the Constitution of the United States is quite equal to the purpose of carrying the American mails upon the deck of any ship that floats the American flag, for the deck of that ship is American territory, and it makes no difference in what part of the high seas it may be found throughout the world, there you find American territory. If we can carry the mails of the United States from New Orleans to Ship Island, I will say to any of the outlying islands of our coast, we have equal constitutional right to carry them upon an American deck to any part of the world.

Nobody, I believe, has ever doubted the constitutionality or propriety of the old law standing on our books for a great many years—I believe since the first foundation of the postal system—which authorized the sending of mails under the American flag to foreign countries, giving as compensation for it the sea-postage. That law requires the master of the ship to become the route agent for the mails, to take charge of them, and whenever he returns to a port of the United States to go before a custom-house officer and make affidavit that he has duly delivered the mails intrusted to him upon his former voyage.

It is also made the duty of the ship under the penalty of forfeiture that it shall receive on board at the demand of any authorized postal agent of the United States Government whatever amount of mail or description of mail the Post-Office Department might wish to send to foreign countries, and shall duly deliver it, and shall receive as a compensation for it only the sea-postage. It would look as if it was almost an unconstitutional usurpation of authority over private property for the Government of the United States to take it and condemn it to public use without just compensation. The only thing that can be said in justification of it, I think, is that perhaps we have a right to impose that service upon the ship as a condition of the American register. But aside from that one fact this would be an unconstitutional usurpation of authority over private property for public use. To carry the mail upon a ship is a public use, and if a vessel is ready to sail and may be delayed two days or five days, and compelled to take the mail and carry it to a foreign port and deliver it there, and be responsible for its safety and for its delivery, it looks to me very much as if the Congress of the United States in the enactment of that law had usurped power over private property which the Constitution does not tolerate.

Nevertheless the argument of that point in the case is not now necessary, for that statute is upon the book, and this bill proposes to amend it. I like the form of the remedy that is provided here. In other words, I like the extension of our postal-route system across the high seas. I think it would be better if Congress would designate the routes and say that the mail shall be carried under contract from named ports to and from foreign countries, and, in addition to that, as is provided in this bill, that all vessels of the United States may carry the mails of the United States upon the requirement of the Post-Office Department for the sea-postage. We would thus have both forms of mail service.

I would prefer this plan, but we can not get all that we want in one bill. We can inaugurate the new system here, and I think there is enough of value in the new system as presented in this bill to justify the change. I think we ought to pass this feature of the bill, but I would much prefer to do it in a more guarded form and under conditions more favorable to fair competition in the letting of the mail contracts.

At the same time I am not unaware of the fact, and nobody can be, that the passage of this bill in the shape in which it is now presented does have the effect of subsidizing five great lines—I call them great lines—five existing American lines of American ships sailing from New York, and one of them I believe from Baltimore, but I am not sure of that, and so I will say from New York to various different parts of the earth, including South America, California, the Australian country, China, and Japan. It has that effect. The Senator from Maryland reminds me that there is none sailing from Baltimore.

But how are we to avoid its having this effect if we enter upon the contract system? I do not see how we can do it. We have, as I understood the remarks of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] yesterday, five lines that are engaged in carrying the mails from the United States to foreign countries. These are steamships, some of them very fine vessels, a credit and ornament to any country. These ships have gone out into the enterprises in which they are engaged without reference to the stimulus of contribution from the Postal Department; they went out upon purely commercial ventures, and they are doing well, and I should be glad to know that they were doing better than they are. They are welcome to every dollar they can make in such enterprise, so far as I am concerned, and I bid them Godspeed in their good work of intercommunicating between this continent and other parts of the world in a commercial sense.

Still they exist. These five lines of ships will at least for the next three or four or five years have the exclusive control of the commerce of the United States conducted between the ports to and from which they ply in American ships. That is the fact and will be the fact, for under the present facilities for building ships we can not build up new lines in that length of time, and, more than that, there will be no new inducement to build them. On the contrary, the present existing inducements will be very much interfered with. I will take for illustration of this point one of these unsubsidized lines that has started out upon its own capital to pursue its own enterprises and to make money, and that is driving a thrifty trade with Australia.

The Post-Office Department will be enabled to give that line an additional sum of money amounting to some two hundred and fifty or three hundred thousand dollars a year for the purpose of carrying the mails to and from Australia. The bill provides for a contract for not less than four years. The Senator from Kentucky yesterday remarked upon that feature of the bill, and when we come to it I think it will require very careful consideration whether we should not change the word "less" there to "more." As the bill provides this contract is to exist for not less than four years—it is worth $300,000 a year under this bill to that company—there are $1,200,000 for the four years' term. That is a tremendous bounty to give to a steamship line, an enormous profit to give to a line that is able to support itself without any subsidy. We give to that line within four years $1,200,000 out of the Treasury of the United States, under a contract for carrying the mails between New York and Australia.

Now let me ask if any other line of American-built ships is going to come into existence for the purpose of competing for that trade during those four years? Whether any ship-yard plant will be made, or whether any American will be venturous enough to expend money enough to build a line of steamers to run from New York to Australia in competition with that line? We shall never hear of such a thing. Therefore when they have got the ships already on the ocean and the power of supplying them whenever they are lost, when they have got trade established and we come in and give to them $300,000 a year for the carrying of the mails from New York to Australia, we simply by law subsidize that line and make it permanent and put it out of the reach of competition by any other line that can be or will be built. That is enough to illustrate the whole scheme.

Here are $1,400,000 a year which is to be distributed under this bill, by contract, really between the existing lines of steamers. It is not to be distributed to lines that may be built, lines that will be built, lines that can be built, but lines that now exist, and to no other lines and no other ships, unless we permit our people to purchase ships. When we come to define "monopoly" we can not probably find a better definition of that hackneyed word than to say that it is a power given by law to a particular individual or company to conduct a certain business to the exclusion of others; and that is precisely the effect that will result from this change that we are now making in the sea postal system, if our people are compelled to build ships to carry the mails and are denied the privilege of buying them.

More than that, Mr. President, the ship-builders of this country can get a double advantage by becoming likewise ship-owners and navigators. I will not refer to Mr. John Roach in any terms of reproach because I respect him, I admire him, and I have a great deal more confidence in Mr. Roach than has been expressed oftentimes on the floor of the Senate. The reason is that I have not heard anything of him as an individual or business man to justify me in coming to any different conclusion. He is a Republican and I am a Democrat, but I trust I can yet do justice to a man who belongs to a different political party than myself, and I am certainly willing at all times to grant a due meed of praise and honor to any man who visited our shores and availed himself of our liberal opportunities and institutions when he was a poor, neglected orphan boy, and who has been enabled to build himself up and educate himself to the extent that he has done, and to confer upon this country signal honor in the character of the ships that he has built and in the character of the establishments that he has founded in this land, connected not only with the building of ships but the production of the material out of which they are built.

But I refer to Mr. Roach under these circumstances for the purpose of illustration merely, and only because I know that he owns establishments on the Delaware River at Chester, where he converts the raw material into metal, takes the metal and rolls it and cuts it and rivets it and makes it into ships, and does all else that belongs to the building of ships from the conversion of the ores contained in the earth and the coal with which they are smelted into one of these magnificent productions. Mr. Roach has a large capital and I am glad to know that he has got it, for it is of service to him and of service to a great many people in the United States.

But what is to prevent him from becoming not only a ship-builder but a ship-owner? When you say to Mr. Roach that no foreign-built ship shall come in competition with him as a ship-builder and when you say to him that no foreign-built ship shall ever have an American register and that the coastwise trade between New York and San Francisco by the way of the Horn shall be exclusively in the hands of American ship-owners, you give him the power to lock his doors against the building of ships for any merchant whatever. You give him the power to say, "From henceforth I will build ships, but they shall only belong to me; I will not build them to come in competition with my own, because I find that there is $1,400,000 of sea-postages coming annually into the Treasury of the United States that I can use for my private advantage, and I therefore will not make ships to sell to anybody else to come in competition with me."

That is the situation; that is where we find ourselves; and I propose to try to put some feature into this bill that will after awhile, if not immediately, produce a different effect and will give to the American merchant and the American ship-owner the opportunity that every American citizen ought to have to buy a ship in a foreign country. That is all that I claim here.

The law as it stands, this antiquated law which has become useless and a nuisance upon the statute-book, contains a simple provision of prohibition against the purchase of a foreign-built ship for the purpose of putting it in the coastwise trade or for the purpose of putting it under American register, not a tariff prohibition, but a naked, arbitrary prohibition. It makes no difference upon what principle or pretext that prohibition may be founded or how unjust it may be, there it stands, and I want to get rid of it upon fair terms. The American ship-builders could very well say to us, "If you repeal this prohibition and do nothing more, then you expose us to competition with the British ship-producer, and we can not stand it; we can not make ships within 15 or 20 per cent. of the cost that they make them abroad." That is what they do say to us. I appreciate the argument, and I am not willing all at once to tear down a protective screen, even of this kind, under which these men have built up their industries, and expose them to dangerous foreign competition upon the instant. If we have by our legislative policy, though it be a bad policy, encouraged men to put money into enterprises of this kind, let us not tear away the protection instantly so as to prostrate these men. That would be doing one wrong to get rid of another. Let us rather, as I propose in the amendment which I have had the honor to present to the Senate, give them a fair equivalent of duty upon foreign ships, so that we shall have fair competition between builders of ships abroad and builders of ships in the United States contending for the American market.

A good deal has been said here about a patriotic man not being willing to own and run a British ship if it was given to him. I confess that I have been entirely unable to appreciate the value of that argument. There is either less of sense in it or more of patriotism than I am able to comprehend; I do not know which. I should think that a country that can build the Oregon and ships like that to cross the Atlantic Ocean in a little more than six days' time, and which are able to charge if they wish from ten to twenty dollars per capita more for passenger-money than ordinary ships, ought to feel very proud of its skill, very proud of its success, very proud of the system which has enabled it to accomplish such results, and I think we should be very happy indeed to know that any of the five American lines we have been speaking about had a ship in it of equal speed with the Oregon or in any respect the equal of that great vessel even if it was bought from an English ship-builder.

The reason why Great Britain can build ships so splendidly and fit them so beautifully is that she gets the patronage of the world. The reason why she can cut rates with us upon the sea and carry freights to our people cheaper than we carry them is because she gets more patronage. She has filled the ocean so full of ships now that it is said that that trade is overburdened. I saw a statement the other day in a newspaper that there were 10,000 idle seamen in Glasgow. I dare say it was true. Senators on both sides of the Chamber tell us that money invested in ships only pays about 4 per cent. profit per annum. Great Britain, through the encouragement she has been compelled to give to ship-building, has crowded the ocean with ships, and when we are coming into competition with her we need not expect to do it successfully by building ships at high prices, or trying to maintain high-priced standards for wages and salaries.

No, sir; the way to do it is to allow the American merchants to go abroad and buy good ships at fair prices and put them under our flag. If they buy a ship like the Oregon and put it upon any American line, I shall feel great pride in calling the Oregon an American ship when she sails under our flag, and I have no hesitancy in believing that our merchants are shrewd enough, men of sufficiently good judgment, to buy good ships in place of bad ones whenever they can get them. They will be obliged to do it to come in competition with John Roach and Mr. Cramp and Mr. Hollingsworth, and men like these, for they are good ship-builders.

Mr. President, what objection can there be to the adoption of the amendment I have suggested? It may be that I have got the duties too low. If I have and I can be convinced of it, I will vote to raise them, for all I want in this matter is to put the American mechanic upon a parity with the English mechanic in accordance with the general plan of the existing laws on the subject of the tariff.

I am not trying to cut into the tariff, to invade its system, or to break its principles by this amendment. I wish to make this amendment in general conformity to the principles and policy of the existing tariff laws on this question. Hence I will not object to an increase of the amount of duty, and I am glad to find that the Senator from Maine, after looking the subject over, has reached the same conclusion with which I set out, that we should resort to an ad valorem instead of a specific duty. There can be no difficulty with the ad valorem system in this case for the reason that there is really no chance to undervalue a thing like a ship; ships are like locomotives and other vehicles, their value is easily ascertained.

Now, let me ask, Mr. President, one question upon this subject, for the sake of illustrating my argument. What is the reason that an American railway company running a railway up the Hudson River and around by the lakes to Chicago and transacting daily a great amount of business, having the lives and property of the people under their control, shall not be required to buy an American locomotive to haul these freights and passengers from New York to Chicago? American locomotives are as good or better than the English. They are made by as good or better men. The workmanship of them is just as fine as that of any English locomotive that can be found. Why shall we not compel the railway companies to buy locomotives that are of American build to run these trains? There is not a man in Christendom that can answer that question and yet account for why it is that an American mariner shall buy an American ship and shall not be permitted to buy an English ship. We should have just the same right to require an American mariner to buy an English ship to the exclusion of an American ship as we have to require him to buy an American ship to the exclusion of the English ship.

Sir, I am for free trade in this matter; not in respect of the duties upon the goods, for I think they ought to bear their contribution to the support of the burdens of the Government; not for the purpose of breaking down American manufactures, but for the purpose of giving them a fair chance to live and increase their progress and liberalize their movements by competition with foreign countries, and for the purpose of securing to every man the right to purchase a foreign-built ship in a fair competitive market.

I say this, Mr. President, coming from a State where there is more ship material in juxtaposition than in any part of this world except in Great Britain. I will repeat that remark for the purpose of giving it emphasis, and yet I need not repeat it to those men who have looked into this question, for it has been but a very recent thing that some of the most renowned men in iron and steel manufactures, and in ship-building also, have said to me that there were within the borders of the State of Alabama conveniences furnished by nature for the construction of steel and iron ships that are unparalleled in the whole world except in Great Britain. If I should take a purely selfish view of this question in respect of my being an Alabamian and a representative of that State I might perhaps find it more to my interest to cling to the prohibitory features of the navigation laws than does the Senator from Maine, who represents a State that from the beginning has had the monopoly of the building of wooden ships because she has had the material right at home.

The profit of Maine in the building of ships, in addition to the enterprise of her very enterprising population, has depended upon the fact that she was able to gather together from her own forests the wood necessary to build a ship and to launch it upon the bays of her coast at a less expense than could be done in any other part of the American continent. Maine has always clung to the wooden-ship business; she has made large amounts of money out of it, and I trust will make a great deal more. I believe that that trade is going to revive.

The competition between wooden ships and iron and steel ships will regulate itself. I believe that the calamity of the State of Florida upon the high seas that we have just received the sad accounts of this morning is but a repetition of a number of cases of that kind that have occurred, and will I fear occur hereafter, where the iron and the steel ship, coming in collision with other crafts, have had holes broken into them and have gone to the bottom of the sea like a broken pot. The other ship, it is true, was upset in this collision, but she floated about on the seas bottom upward.

It will be found in the future experience of this country, I think, that passenger ships will be more resorted to that are built of wood than those that are built of steel or iron, at least until we can get those metals so tough that they will bend a great deal before they will break. But however that may be, the wooden-ship trade of Maine is built upon the fact that Maine has the timber there convenient to her bays. The iron and steel ship-building of Alabama is to be and will be predicated upon the fact that we have got the coal and the iron near to our bays, and we have got besides that the yellow pine and the live-oak in all the abundance necessary for such use as is required in the building of the decks and other parts of those ships, and the most beautiful woods in the forest for their decoration and equipment.

England has her Clyde, which she dug out of the bottom of a sandy river. I have myself heard men say that when they were boys they had waded the Clyde with their pantaloons rolled above their knees. Now it is a grand estuary, a vast reservoir of water, where the greatest ships in the world are built. Why has this been so? Merely because the Clyde is convenient to the center of an iron and coal region, where those products are thrown in such proximity that the average haul is not more than about thirty or forty miles to get them to a common center for melting into metal. Sir, I can show you places in the State of Alabama, large areas of country, where the coal and the iron and the limestone can be brought together by an average haul of seven miles, to the furnace for smelting.

Mr. FRYE. To how deep water?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not say to the water, but they can be carried to the tunnel-head of the furnace on an average haul of seven miles, and then when you have your metal made you have a descending grade not to exceed the distance of a hundred miles to a stream that is better than the Clyde was ever for the reception of ships when they are built. More than that, you have three rivers, all navigable, leading from the coal and iron region right down to the Mobile River, which is to be the Clyde of America.

It ought not to be twenty years—I do not speak as a prophet about it, but rather as one arguing logically from existing facts and known demands for enterprises of this kind—it will not be twenty years until steel and iron ship-building will be conducted upon the Alabama River with as much economic advantage to the people of the United States in proportion to the capital used as the Clyde furnishes to-day to the people of Great Britain.

Yet, notwithstanding that belief, which I begin to realize and to feel is near to realization as matter of fact, I plead for the liberalization of the laws in respect of the building of steamships whether of steel or of iron, for I want the manufacturing industries of my country put upon the firm rock of legitimate enterprise, on the basis of supply and demand, so that the people will not be coming to Congress from time to time to demand assistance here for enterprises and investments that ought to be self-sustaining. If we can get them upon that foundation, and I know we are coming to it, that will be all that I could possibly ask for them. A fair competition between the iron and steel ship-builders of the State of Alabama and those upon the Clyde is all that I can ask for my people. Give us that and then give us the stimulus to a market for ships which will be furnished by the additional inducements that you put into this bill of $1,400,000 postal money a year to men to build and buy ships and I shall have a hope of seeing the American merchant marine reinstate itself in some reasonable time. It is not going to be a rapid progress, but it is going to be an entirely secure one.

I shall feel that from the date of the passage of this bill, if we are permitted to buy ships as well as build them, the tide has turned in our favor, and that the honorable Senator from Maine and myself after a few years will be able to congratulate ourselves that in so much of this bill as we can agree upon, if we can not agree upon the whole of it, we have assisted in laying the foundation of a new progress in respect of the American merchant marine which will eventuate in the restoration of our commerce to its former condition of prosperity.

Mr. FRYE. Before the Senator takes his seat I desire to call his attention to the fact that his $15 a ton will average about 10 per cent. ad valorem, while the duty ad valorem upon the locomotives he alluded to is about 45 per cent., and the lowest duty ad valorem upon any manufactured article is from 30 to 40 per cent. I simply desire to call his attention to that fact.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to say on that point that a locomotive is a machine built entirely of iron, steel, and brass, of metal and nothing else, or very little else. A ship, though a steel ship or an iron ship, has a great deal of woodwork, a great deal of glasswork, a great deal of upholstery and furniture and other articles that are taxed at very different rates. We take a ship entire and equipped, a fully completed ship, and we wish to ascertain what would be the average ad valorem duty upon the whole of that ship under the existing statutes.

Mr. FRYE. Would it not be 35 per cent.?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know what it would be. Whatever it is I am willing to agree to, for I do not care about changing the rule of the tariff upon this proposition. I am willing that any Senator who feels competent to make the calculation shall say, looking to all the articles that are contained in a ship, that the average ad valorem duty upon the whole of it would be thus and so, and I will take that because it is the law now in respect of the same things when they are imported, not in a ship but otherwise.

Mr. FRYE. Let me say to the Senator that the average could not be less than 30 per cent. ad valorem, because there is not a single thing that goes into the ship from stem to stern, the furniture or anything else, that will not be over 30 per cent. except the wood that is in the ship.

Mr. MORGAN. I am willing to take 30 per cent. ad valorem. I think that is a fair valuation.

Mr. COKE obtained the floor.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Before the Senator from Texas proceeds, will he allow me to make a suggestion? The Senator from Alabama has been speaking to his amendment, I take it. Although it is not before the Senate, I have it before me.

Mr. MORGAN. I spoke entirely to it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to call his attention to another very grave misfortune, I will call it, which I think is in the bill: that it does not permit an American citizen, although every single share of stock is held by an American citizen, to avail himself of the privilege of going abroad and hiring money at the low rates of money upon the other side and placing a mortgage upon his ship. Again, let me suggest to the Senator, he provides that the $15 per ton shall be on the gross registered tonnage of a ship. I submit to him it should be upon the net registered tonnage.

Mr. MORGAN. I propose to change that entirely to an ad valorem duty upon the ship; therefore it is not necessary to say anything about the tonnage.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Very well.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Texas will indulge me one moment, I had observed and I put it in on purpose—the fact that these corporations or ship-owners could not go abroad to borrow money. I noticed sections 4137 and 4139 in our statutes, which bear upon the same question. I am entirely willing that those statutes shall be made to apply as they exist upon the book to this amendment. I will read them. Section 4137 provides:

> Registers for vessels owned by any incorporated company may be issued in the name of the president or secretary of such company; and such register shall not be vacated or affected by sales of shares of any stock in such company.

Section 4139 is as follows:

> Previously to granting a register for any vessel owned by any company the president or secretary thereof shall swear to the ownership of the vessel by such company without designating the names of the persons composing the company; and the oath shall be deemed sufficient without requiring the oath of any other person interested or concerned in such vessel.

Those two statutes were enacted for the purpose of making it convenient for foreign men to advance their capital to American corporations and companies to build ships, and is another relaxation by evasion of the law that no ship holding an American register shall be owned abroad.

Mr. MCPHERSON. But I submit to the Senator from Alabama, if the Senator from Texas will allow me, the fact——

Mr. COKE. I decline to yield further, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas declines to yield further.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I propose to vote for this bill when it is put upon its final passage, and I desire to say that I approve its general object. While there may be some of its provisions that I would not entirely approve, I do not think it liable to some of the objections that have been made against it, and especially to the objection made by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] yesterday that section 19 contains a provision for a subsidy. Section 19 provides:

> And the aggregate amount to be expended for such service shall not exceed the gross revenue of the Post-Office Department of the United States on mail matter sent to and received from foreign countries during the fiscal year next preceding the year in which such contracts are made, less the amount paid for transportation on foreign vessels, and the net amount paid foreign administrations for intermediary, territorial, and sea transit of such mails.

There is not one dollar to be taken from the Treasury of the United States under this section. Every dollar that is to be expended under this section is to be earned by the Government of the United States in its foreign mail service, is to be evolved from the operations of the Government in the foreign mail service.

I would be as clear of voting for a subsidy as any gentleman on this floor, but I vote heartily and freely for this section so far as this point is concerned, because I believe that the Government has a perfect right, and that it is expedient and politic that the Government should improve its foreign mail service with the revenues earned by the Government in that service involving the imposition of not one dollar of taxation upon the people.

I regret that the amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], which would repeal existing laws on that subject, and permit citizens of the United States to purchase ships anywhere where they could buy them cheapest, was not adopted and ingrafted upon the bill. I voted for it. I believe that it is an amendment which should have been adopted; but it was rejected. I will not allow the fact that the amendment was rejected to cause me to vote against the bill. There are some good things in it. There are many burdens taken off of American shipping, many things provided for in the bill which in my judgment will add something to an improvement in that branch of our service.

I believe, however, that the bill does not reach the root of the evil. While I will vote for it, I do believe that the great cause, not I may say of the decline, but of the absolute destruction of our foreign merchant marine, among a variety of minor causes the great cause, the paramount one, the leading cause of its destruction I believe to be the protective tariff system.

Ships and sailors are the outgrowth of commerce; they spring up spontaneously and grow out of commerce. If we had commerce we would have ships and we would have sailors; but we have no commerce, and therefore we have neither ships nor sailors. Why have we no commerce? And by the term "commerce," in the sense I use it, I mean mutual exchange of commodities. Why has our commercial marine dwindled until I think it was last year or the year before the Secretary of the Treasury reported to Congress that the number of ships built was not quite sufficient to supply the place of those that had decayed during that fiscal year? Why is this?

We remember the time when the ocean swarmed with American shipping and every port in the world saw in the American flag an every-day visitor. We remember when America was a close competitor with England for the commerce of the world; and now we have to confess that England has achieved a magnificent supremacy and does even 85 per cent. of our own carrying. Why is all this? Mr. President, it is on account of our protective system, which obstructs commerce; it is on account of a protective tariff which excludes foreign exchange; it is on account of a system of legislation upon our statute-books which says to the world, "We will not exchange with you." Therefore we have neither ships nor sailors, which alone exchange and foreign commerce can produce.

You can not discuss the question with reference to ship-building and the merchant marine without getting upon the tariff. The tariff is the underlying cause of its annihilation, for I speak, I think, within the bounds of accuracy when I say that our merchant marine has now no existence. I therefore will make a few remarks and detain the Senate but a few moments on the subject of the tariff.

In the spring of 1882 we passed what was called the Tariff Commission bill. The result of the labors of a shamelessly packed commission was in due time promulgated in an elaborate, ingenious, and utterly unscrupulous defense of the worst features of the protective-tariff system. In the spring of 1883 the Senate, recognizing the urgent necessity of making a show of responding to the popular demand for a reduction of the burdens of the tariff, seized the opportunity presented by a bill sent from the House the preceding session abolishing the internal-revenue tax on cosmetics, perfumery, patent medicines, bank checks, &c., and ingrafted upon it by way of amendment a revision by schedules, which was claimed to be a reduction of the tariff. So palpably a false pretense, so plainly an attempt to deceive the country with a sham and a counterfeit was this so-called revision and reduction that the people from every section and State and division of the country spurned it, and the recent unsuccessful effort at tariff reduction voiced simply a great popular demand.

The intelligence of this country can not be hoodwinked any longer. The tariff, in spite of the schemes of politicians and the plans of aspiring trimmers to overslaugh it with the Tariff Commission, to settle it by a fraudulent, pretended, and utterly false so-called revision and reduction, in spite of all the bosh and drivel that has been talked about "taking it out of politics and settling it on business principles," and of every other device and pretext that could be devised for suppressing and covering it up and hiding it away has come to be the leading, paramount, absorbing issue in American politics. The question has come to stay, because brought forward by the people. It was not made by their leaders, but forced upon them after they had exhausted all the resources of political gymnasts to dodge, evade, and shirk it. The question is greater than any party. It will not down; it will not be still; no consideration of party expediency or of personal promotion or of spoils of office or of political success or defeat will arrest or quiet it.

The question is a great popular one, thrown into the political arena by the people who make and unmake parties, and will be held up and pressed by them as a vital, living issue, regardless of all consequences. We are collecting under the present tariff from the people $100,000,000 annually more than is needed for all the purposes of the Government. This is a great wrong against the Constitution, against good morals, against a loyal people, and the only way to correct and right it is to reduce taxation down to that level which will bring only such amount of revenue as is needed to support the Government. All revenue exacted from the people beyond this is taken in defiance of all constitutional or moral right. A high obligation rests upon the people to furnish the revenues necessary to support their Government, and a corresponding right exists in the Government to levy and collect taxes sufficient for this purpose. Beyond this there is no obligation on the people and no rightful power in the Government.

The crime of subjecting the people to excessive and burdensome and unnecessary taxation, producing a surplus revenue, which invites extravagance, which leads to the invention of new methods and lines of expenditure, which stimulates peculation and whets the appetite and sharpens the wits of the legions who infest this capital for prey and plunder, which demoralizes and corrupts the Government in all its branches and ramifications, is getting to be understood and its enormity appreciated by the country. The shifts and evasions and equivocations and prevarications, the sophistries, the play upon words, the platitudinous generalities, meaning anything or nothing as occasion or locality may suggest, through and by which the plain people of this country are sought to be confused and mystified on this subject are also getting to be understood. It is a stubborn fact that a vast amount of money not needed for any of the purposes of the Government, wrung from the people through the medium of the tariff, lies accumulated in the Treasury and is pouring in every day.

The Secretary of the Treasury so reports it, and advises that taxation be reduced as the only preventive of a still further accumulation. This confessed, undenied fact can not be explained away or confused or made doubtful. The paltering and meaningless clap-trap of which the tariff plank of the Ohio Democratic convention is an average specimen, so much indulged in by party platforms and ambitious aspirants for popular favor when attempting to straddle the tariff question and capture the support of both protectionists and anti-protectionists, is powerless to obscure that great fact. A failure to put an end to this worse than useless flow of the hard earnings of the people into the Treasury will need no explanation. It will be rightly understood by the country to have but one possible meaning, and that, that the special interests to build up and enrich which the tariff tax is levied are more powerful in this Capitol than the people themselves. There can be no other reason for it.

In a period of profound peace we are living under a system of taxation devised to meet the expenditures of the greatest war of modern times; a system claimed when enacted to be temporary, and intended solely for the great emergency then existing, but which ceased eighteen years ago. The Tariff Commission even, created for the purpose of whitewashing the protective system, under the pressure of an intelligent public opinion which it was unable wholly to withstand, advised an average reduction of from 20 to 25 per cent., yet the last Congress, Republican in both branches, the creator of that commission, while assuring the country that the recommendations of the commission would be followed, and endeavoring since to create the impression that they have been followed, reduced the tariff an average of only about 2 per cent., the average of the old tariff being 45 per cent., whereas that of the revised tariff of 1883 is about 43 per cent.

This uncandid and disingenuous attempt to mislead the country into the belief that a substantial reduction of the tariff has been made, coupled with the persistent and stubborn opposition to any and every effort to reduce the tariff, shows a fixed determination that taxation shall not be reduced, that the people shall not be relieved, and that revenue not needed for any legitimate purpose of honest government shall continue to accumulate in the Treasury. Ordinarily it is a most pleasant and grateful duty, zealously and promptly performed, to lighten the burdens of taxation on the shoulders of the people, when it may be done without imparing the efficiency of the administration of the Government. The obstinate refusal to perform this act of justice and duty to the people now is of itself conclusive evidence of a fundamental wrong; a fatal defect in our plan and method of raising revenue. A system so constructed as to promote and build up influences so powerful as to be able to successfully withstand a great popular demand for the reduction of confessedly excessive revenues, as ours does of necessity, needs reformation. A statement of the proposition is the strongest argument in its support.

The pernicious principle of "protection," whether "protection for protection's sake" or "the adjustment of tariff duties in such mode as will give the incidental protection of a revenue tariff to the advancement of American industries," must be eliminated from our revenue system, for both mean precisely the same thing and produce precisely the same result. As long as the right of any industry to have all the people of this country taxed for its support and enrichment, either under a directly protective or incidentally protective tariff, is recognized in the legislation of the country as is done in the existing tariff, so long will our revenue system be the monstrous engine of oppression it now is, and so long will the protected interests fattening upon taxation exacted from the people be powerful enough to override the will of the people as they are now doing in preventing a reduction of taxation.

Those who favor "the equitable distribution of the incidental protection of a revenue tariff," and those who are frank enough to admit themselves in favor of "protection for protection's sake," recent events conclusively show mean the same thing, aim at the same end and accomplish the same result, to wit, a high protective tariff. The difference between them is simply verbal. They vote together, work together, scheme together, and are in full accord both as to methods and results. The debates and votes in Congress on the tariff show that Democrats who favor the "equitable distribution of the protection incidental to a revenue tariff" stood shoulder to shoulder and side by side with Republicans who honestly avow themselves in favor of "protection for protection's sake," both fighting against and successful in defeating revenue reform and tariff reduction, and thoroughly in accord in perpetuating in a time of profound peace a war tariff. The tariff planks in the Ohio and Pennsylvania Democratic platforms, the latter being an exact copy of the former, mean and are intended to mean a high protective tariff. Under them as moderate, conservative, and short a step toward tariff reform as the Morrison bill was consistently and stubbornly opposed and defeated.

The leader who is understood to be the author of the Pennsylvania platform headed and was the brains of the opposition to that bill, yet he claims to favor only the "incidental protection of a revenue tariff." I have no denial to make of the sincerity of those who set up this claim, but deal with facts as I find them and as the record shows them; and the facts of history establish beyond the shadow of a doubt that the existing tariff, which produces $100,000,000 more than can be expended in a most extravagant administration of the Government, which was enacted to meet the expenses of a great war, has been and is sustained and its reduction persistently opposed by gentlemen who claim to be opposed to protection for protection's sake, and to favor only the incidental protection of a revenue tariff. In practical results, full-fledged, openly avowed high protectionists and the incidental protectionists are precisely the same. The latter pile up the duties, raise the average of the tariff, and produce all the results desired by the former.

It is no impeachment of the honesty of these gentlemen to say this, for nothing is more natural or inevitable, when the principle of protection is once admitted to be legitimate in constructing a tariff, than for each Congressional district in each State to claim for its own interests a share of this protection. In order to get it they must pool issues and combine; they must give to each its share in order to command the necessary strength for the bill; and when all are provided for, as they always are, the end attained is a tariff protecting every industry in the whole country regardless of revenue, while the great mass of the people are saddled with the burdens. This is the history of all tariff legislation when the element of protection is allowed to intervene. There is no exception to it; it has never failed in a single instance to be so.

The path of safety and of duty lies in expurgating our revenue system of the odious and un-American idea that the people may be taxed for purposes other than the support of their Government; in denying the right of any man's business to have taxes laid on the people for its maintenance and support; and in levying import duties solely with reference to the money to be placed in the public Treasury for the support of the Government. Upon a great question like this no concession can be made further than that the reduction shall be gradual, and that luxuries shall be discriminated against and the necessaries of life favored. Let the friends of honest taxation for Government purposes only stand unflinchingly by their colors and assert unyieldingly the right of the majority to rule. Their cause is that of 50,000,000 people, less 5 per cent. of the number, who are being enriched by taxation which oppresses the remaining 95 per cent. We have been defeated when we had a right to expect triumphant success, but appeal with abiding confidence to the great American people for vindication of the right. Parties may come and parties may go, but this question of honest tariff taxation for the public purposes of Government only is here to stay, and will remain until vindicated and settled and established and fixed as the rule and law of this Government. The issue is made up, and we go to the country upon it. Let the people speak out in their primaries and conventions and declare their will and assert their power for their own deliverance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the question. It is an important amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROWN. Let the amendment be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 19, beginning at line 6, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

For transporting the mails of the United States between any port of the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the Atlantic and ports in the Pacific, touching at any foreign port, a sum not exceeding $1 per mile on the trip each way of actual.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

For transporting the mails of the United States from any port of the United States to any foreign port a sum not exceeding $1 per mile; and between Atlantic ports of the United States and the Pacific ports of the United States, touching at any foreign port, a sum not exceeding $1 per mile on the trip each way of actual.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, only a word. It will be noticed that this amendment proposes to limit to $1 a mile the payment for the actual service rendered, as steamships can not render service to the United States Government on the return trip, for they do not then carry the mail of the United States.

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to say that I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. INGALLS. I am paired on this question with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. BLAIR. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] if he considers me still paired with his colleague [Mr. ANTHONY]? I voted upon this amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think my colleague is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR].

Mr. HARRIS. That being the case, I shall allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BECK. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is necessarily absent. I should vote "yea" if he were here, and he would vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired generally with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. As I am not sure how he would vote upon this amendment, I shall withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore refrain from voting.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. I should vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bayard,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Van Wyck,
Call,	Harris,	Morgan,	Vest.
Camden,	Jackson,	Pugh,
Cockrell,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Coke,	McPherson,	Vance,

NAYS—31.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lapham,	Plumb,
Allison,	Gibson,	Logan,	Riddleberger,
Brown,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Groome,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Conger,	Hawley,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,	Voorhees,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Mitchell,	Wilson.
Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,

ABSENT—28.

Anthony,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,
Beck,	Fair,	Jonas,	Pike,
Blair,	Farley,	Jones of Florida,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Garland,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	George,	Miller of Cal.,	Slater,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Morrill,	Walker,
Colquitt,	Harrison,	Palmer,	Williams.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no further amendment be proposed to section 19, section 20 is now open to amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Would it be in order for me now to offer as an amendment a section to come in between sections 19 and 20?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. After section 18 of the bill, and as a new section, it is proposed to insert:

SEC. —. That from and after the 1st day of January, 1885, vessels owned exclusively by citizens of the United States, or by corporations whose stockholders are all citizens of the United States, and not under any lien, incumbrance, or mortgage in favor of citizens or corporations of any foreign country, shall be admitted to registry under the laws of the United States in all respects upon the same terms and conditions as vessels built in the United States are admitted to such registry, upon the payment at the time of such registration of a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem on such vessels. And ships so imported and registered by American citizens may be employed in either the coastwise trade or in trade to foreign countries: Provided, That the right to import such vessels shall apply only to such vessels constructed in any foreign country as shall be built after the passage of this act.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I move to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama, in the fourth line, after the word "States," by striking out the rest of that line and line 5 down to and including the word "country," in line 6, in the following words:

And not under any lien, incumbrance, or mortgage in favor of citizens or corporations of any foreign country.

If the Senator from Alabama wishes to remove all possible shackles from American commerce, either under his own amendment or as in the bill proposed by the Senator from Maine, it certainly does not seem to me to be the way to do it to deprive the citizen of going abroad and securing cheap capital by way of mortgage upon his vessel in order that he may be able to do it. I shall follow this with other amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. MCPHERSON. One word more before the question is put to the Senate. The Senator from Alabama will observe that he restricts the ownership of the vessels to citizens of the United States. Every share of the stock under this bill must be owned by citizens of the United States; therefore the vessel, absolute and entire, with the exception of liens that may be placed upon the ship, must be owned by American citizens; but as to any liens they may desire to put upon a ship by reason of being able to obtain capital at low rates upon the other side, it seems to me to be exceedingly unwise, and certainly not in the direction of helping American shipping, to impose this restriction.

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose that a majority of the lawyers in the Senate would say that a ship that is encumbered with a lien in favor of foreign capitalists would not be an American ship in the sense of the existing law, or that a ship belonging to a corporation some of whose corporators were foreigners would not be an American ship within the meaning of the existing law. I desired to go as close to the existing law as I could get merely for the purpose of removing one restriction, and that was the prohibition of admitting to American registry foreign-built or foreign-owned ships. A ship that is mortgaged abroad is in a sense owned abroad. A ship belonging to a corporation that has foreign stockholders is in a sense a ship that belongs to foreign stockholders; and inasmuch as the idea seemed to prevail in the Senate (not my idea, but one that I concede is influential) that a ship should be wholly and purely of American ownership, I ventured to bring in the amendment in the form in which it is presented.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senate has arrived at the conclusion that the navigation laws which have been in existence nearly a hundred years ought to be repealed, this is a perfectly fair and reasonable amendment. This amendment provides that all foreign-built ships may be admitted to American registry and participate in the coastwise trade. That is the real question. The Senator from Alabama, differing from the Senator from Missouri, has provided, reasonably too, that they shall be subject to a duty and a fair duty, and to that extent the amendment is perfectly fair and proper. But Senators must remember that there is great strength in the age and stability of the navigation laws, and that the moment you remove them and transfer the question to one merely of tariff it is open all the time to the fluctuations of tariff discussion and tariff amendment. One other thing: it places a new duty upon a new article, and under the Constitution how can the United States Senate originate that? It must come from the other House.

Mr. MORGAN. The existing tariff law, which was enacted into a law by the concurrent action of the House of Representatives and the Senate, was never read in the House of Representatives. The bill became a law without one word of the text having been read in that body. It originated, as to all the tariff features of it, in the Senate. I supposed that after that precedent had been established by the vote of the Republican party of the United States we should never any more hear of the question being raised as to whether we might amend a bill which had any reference at all to foreign commerce, to duties upon foreign commerce, or to a relaxation of duties upon foreign commerce, in the Senate, by changing it measurably into a tariff bill.

The House bill, which the Senator from Maine has told us he intended to take up some time during the progress of this matter, contains some provisions which I consider are a modification of the existing tariff laws. For instance, a foreign-built ship of 4,000 tons burden, a steamship, according to the House bill is to be admitted into the United States of America free of duty. If we should enact the House bill we should admit to American registry and free of duty a foreign-built steamship of 4,000 tons burden. I think it would be perfectly competent when the House has sent us a measure providing that such a ship as that shall be admitted free of duty that we should say, "No; we would rather put it under a 20 per cent. ad valorem duty."

The amendment therefore which I propose, in so far as it may be considered as an amendment of the tariff laws, is justified by the action of the House. If the House bill were now before the Senate, and if I were moving my amendment as a substitute for that section, which I should certainly do if the House bill were before the Senate, it would not be guilty of any usurpation of authority on the part of the Senate to originate a revenue bill, but only would be amending a bill which admits an article free of duty by putting a tax upon it. So I think the constitutional objection is not valid.

I wish to say just a word more. We are introducing into this bill entirely a new feature, and that is a contract postal system. I thought that while we were extending our postal laws across the high seas under the contract system it would be perfectly right to enable any American citizen who wished to make a contract for carrying the mails to make a contract for a foreign-built ship just as much as he might make a contract for a foreign-built coach or a foreign-built wagon or a foreign-built locomotive for the purpose of carrying the mails of the United States. I can not see the difference in principle. There is nothing that stands in the way now of the American citizen making a contract for a foreign-built ship to carry the mails of the United States under this proposed bill except the fact that we can not admit such a ship to American registry, and any ship that carries the American mail under the American flag of course must have an American registry.

I thought we should remove that restriction now, inasmuch as it would do no harm. A foreign-built ship, as I observed awhile ago when I had the floor, can not do any harm to the American coastwise trade because it is foreign-built. It is not a question between England and America or between any foreign country and America as to the nationality of the ship when built, but it is only a question between the ship-builder and the people of the United States. I think that while we are extending to the ship-builders so much larger an area of trade, and while we are building up for them a new traffic in the transportation of mails under contract, they could very well afford, in a particular instance at least, to modify their objections to the relaxation of this prohibition, and that we should be permitted to bring in vessels from abroad to carry the American mails, so that all of our people may be admitted to a clear opportunity of contesting by bids for the privilege of carrying those mails under contract. Unless that is done, as I have observed before, and as several Senators have observed, with perfect justness too, the bill amounts to nothing else than an indirect attempt to subsidize American ship-builders and American ship-owners.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I understood the Senator from Alabama to say that it was his purpose to offer an amendment making the duty 10 or 15 per cent. ad valorem instead of $15 per ton.

Mr. MORGAN. I have changed it from a specific to an ad valorem duty and put it at what I conceive to be the fair average duties upon all material and workmanship contained in the ship.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Is that contained in the amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It is not in the printed amendment before me. I ask to have the amendment of the Senator from Alabama read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the Senate voted down the proposition to admit ships of foreign construction and of a certain size free of duty, that proposition being accompanied by another to admit all materials of which such ships were constructed free of duty.

The plan of the Senator from Alabama is intended to produce perhaps a greater equality before the law by placing upon a ship as an article of merchandise a rate of impost duty about 25 per cent. less than the average of the present tariff upon imported merchandise. I understand that under the tariff existing prior to last spring there was an average of about forty-two and a fraction percentage upon the imported merchandise to this country. The reductions, such as they were, made by the action of Congress at its last session were about 1.71 per cent., less than 2 per cent., upon the average of the tariff; so that now the American tariff may in general description be cited as a tariff of a little over 40 per cent. ad valorem upon the average of its imported merchandise.

The proposition of the Senator from Alabama is to introduce as an article of merchandise a ship at the ratio of 30 per cent. That certainly is favorable as being less by 10 per cent. or less by one-fourth of the 40 per cent. than the average. But as a practical fact, will the House of Representatives assent to a change in the revenue laws in this way by the Senate? I have been for many years a member of the Committee on Finance, and there over and over again the most obviously meritorious amendments have been proposed and adopted, and have received the approval of the Senate, changing the rates of duty upon imported merchandise, and in no case that I can now recall has our action been assented to by the other branch of Congress; and the reason given was that it was an invasion of their prerogative to originate bills touching the revenue, or, as they are sometimes termed, "money bills."

I do not believe therefore that it is worth while to deal with this question in this way. I gave my reasons at some length and at some fatigue, to the Senate as well as to myself, why I supported the proposition for free materials and free ships combined. I am not disposed to so vote on this tariff question of the admission of ships; at the same time I should be glad to see any arrangement that should modify the present hardships under which the builders and the owners of ships are compelled to carry abroad in the markets of the world the burdens of the home taxation when they no longer can enjoy the benefit and advantage of the protection of home laws.

The condition and the nature of vessel property is, as I said a day or two ago, wholly different from that of other property, the one reposing always under the protection and care of local laws, and shipping property for nineteen-twentieths of its existence being entirely beyond the reach either of its favor or its disadvantage. I am not prepared upon a bill of this kind to vote for this change in the revenue laws by the imposition of an ad valorem tariff.

I wish very much that the question of aiding the shipping by means of a rate paid per mile upon its postal service could have found its place upon a postal bill. I do not see why it should have been connected with a shipping bill. Its effect upon shipping is obvious. Nevertheless, it is a postal and a postal revenue question. While I am desirous of voting a liberal, which means a very much increased rate of pay for ocean mail service, I do not wish to see it in this shape and attached to a shipping bill. That, however, is touching upon another subject than the one to which the pending amendment relates.

I do not believe there is any use in the Senate passing a bill that shall change a rate of duty or establish a rate of duty. To-day the articles of commerce known as ships built abroad are prohibited from entering into the registry of this country. This amendment proposes to admit them subject to a duty ad valorem, and that rate is fixed. I believe that American ship-builders can, under the protective theory, perfectly well build ships in competition under the rate of 30 per cent. ad valorem proposed. Indeed, I believe that the difference of cost between ships built in the United States, whether of iron or steel, much less of wood, is much less than 30 per cent. more in this country than the rates upon the Clyde or other ship-building centers upon the other side of the Atlantic. Owing to the skill in labor-saving machinery, the superiority of metal and ingenuity, I do not believe there is a difference of more than 15 per cent. at the outside, and probably not more than 10 per cent., between the cost of ship-building in this country and in Europe. I believe that there are firms in this country who would most gladly accept any contract for the finest steamship that has been built in the last ten years on the European terms, plus 10 per cent. of the gross amount of that contract.

Believing that, I think that this 30 per cent. would be an ample protection. At the same time I believe there is no practical use in our voting in this bill to change the revenue laws, for we may be sure the principle will not be yielded by the other branch of Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. In preparing this amendment I had not any doubt that the shape in which the bill came from the House, as I observed awhile ago, was an entire justification for any attempt that the Senate might make to change the tariff upon the ships spoken of there, that is, ships of 4,000 tons, but I felt very greatly encouraged by the fact that the honorable Senator from Delaware, in voting upon the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, had declared the power of the Senate constitutionally to admit free of duty all the material that might enter into the construction of an American ship. I thought the constitutional question entirely disposed of by that vote, for certainly if we have a right to take material that is now under duty and bring it in free we have the right to change the duty on any material that now comes in free; so that I think the Senator has answered himself by his votes upon the same proposition.

However, the other House will have the bill to consider again, because we are voting amendments upon the bill, and it may vote for all of our amendments as it did upon the tariff bill. It may choose to adopt as a measure originating in the House whatever tariff features we put upon the bill here. I think the Senate will find no difficulty at all, if it should vote this amendment upon the bill, in getting the House to consider it as a measure constitutionally originating there, unless, indeed, the House has got its mind made up that it will not consider anything that looks in this direction.

I am very glad indeed to hear that the Senator from Delaware approves of the principle of the amendment and thinks that it is a reasonable one. It might be improved. I do not expect that we shall attain to perfection in any bill that we pass here now upon an entirely new question.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I was very well content to vote upon the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, provided he would strike out those words that I had the honor to move an amendment striking out; but if he had continued his original amendment at $15 per ton I suppose it would be considered according to this amendment gross tonnage.

But I only want to present to that Senator the fact as it appears from his amendment. Under the amendment as he originally offered it what would be the duty on a ship like the Oregon, of 8,000 tons registry, costing $200 per ton, as the Senator from Maine avers is the cost, so that the actual cost of that ship would be $1,600,000? Under the amendment of the Senator from Alabama imposing 30 per cent. ad valorem the duty upon the ship would be $480,000. Under his original amendment as offered it would be $120,000. In other words, he has simply multiplied the original proposition by four. I do not think that any amendment could be offered here which would tend more virtually and absolutely to prohibit a man from buying a foreign ship than the one the Senator from Alabama has now offered. Take a ship of 5,000 tons, of cheaper grade, used for a freight-ship. Under his original amendment $75,000 would be the duty paid upon that ship. Under his last amendment the duty would be $150,000. In other words, the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, as printed and laid upon our desks, gave some little chance for an American citizen to invest in a foreign ship. The amendment he now offers does not leave him anything; so that I consider it of little consequence whether the amendment shall be agreed to or not.

Mr. MORGAN. Americans under this 30 per cent. ad valorem duty will buy as many ships as they can afford to buy, as of any other goods or property, for we are paying now 42 per cent. and more tariff upon all we get from abroad, taking the average. More than that, here is a ship, the Oregon, that will live fifty years. Thirty per cent. ad valorem duty upon that is about two-thirds of 1 per cent. per annum, distributing the duty over the life of the ship, which, when you come to consider it, is to the ship-owner a very small tax. When you come to consider it, however, with reference to the ship-builder, it is an important protection to him, because it requires the ship-owner who buys the ship abroad to put up that amount of money in advance to give him a margin to work upon in competition with foreign producers; but it is a very small tax indeed when you come to justify it by the whole life of the ship, which is said to be qualified and built with a view to its living fifty years.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine whether at any time he proposes to call up the House bill, as he suggested, because this amendment certainly could be constitutionally offered to that. I would rather vote for it at a time when there was no doubt about it than to vote for it now, if I can do so.

Mr. FRYE. I do propose to call up the House bill, and I suggested to the Senator from Alabama that he withhold this amendment until that time. I shall propose to call up the House bill and strike out perhaps the last six or eight sections of the House bill, and insert in their place the Senate sections that we have adopted; but before that was done of course the Senator from Alabama would have a right to perfect the last section in the House bill and there offer his amendment.

Mr. BECK. That would avoid all question and save trouble.

Mr. MORGAN. I will manage the amendment on my part so as to remove any embarrassment. I believe it is a good amendment, and I do not wish to embarrass it by coming in at an awkward place in the bill. I offered it at this time merely because I wanted to vote for the next section of the bill, and I would prefer to vote for that section when American competitors for the postal service will have a right to buy foreign ships. That is the reason why I have introduced it now.

If the Senator from Kentucky desires that I should withdraw the amendment for the present, if the Senate will allow me to do it with a view to renewing it I will do so, although I do not see that it is any advantage to it, because when the Senator from Maine takes up the House bill he will move all that the Senate has agreed to as an amendment to the House bill, so that it would have the same effect in a parliamentary sense and the same effect in a constitutional sense that it would have if the amendment was offered to the House bill proper.

I will take any course that Senators think will disembarrass them of any opposition of a technical character to the amendment. If the Senator from Kentucky desires me to withdraw it now, and if the Senate will consent, I will do that.

Mr. BECK. I do not like to make a request of that kind, although I do not believe we have a right to place the amendment on the Senate bill, and I know we have a clear right to amend the House bill. I would rather have the amendment offered to the House bill so far as I am concerned, but I do not like to ask it.

Mr. MORGAN. I have considered really and substantially that the House bill was pending before the Senate after the notice given by the Senator from Maine. Perhaps I never would have offered this amendment if the bill had been an original measure in the Senate. I have no doubt about its application to the House bill, and if the Senate will consent I will withdraw the amendment in its present form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to withdraw it. There has been no amendment to it.

Mr. MORGAN. I will therefore ask leave to withdraw my amendment for the present and let the bill proceed, and I will offer it in due season.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama withdraws the amendment. If there be no amendments further to be proposed to section 19, section 20 is open to amendment.

Mr. BECK. I observe that section 19 provides for ocean mail contracts not less than four years. Ought there not to be some limitation, no longer than a given period, or would it not be well to fix a limitation of four years or six years, or some other number of years?

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to saying "not less than four nor more than six years," but I would not want a man to buy a ship under the influence of its carrying the mail and the money to be received from it, and next year perhaps be deprived of it.

Mr. BECK. I think four years would be very reasonable.

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to saying "not less than four nor more than six years."

Mr. BECK. I think some limitation like that should be fixed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine move an amendment?

Mr. FRYE. I will move that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 19, line 24, after the word "four," it is proposed to insert "nor more than six;" so as to read:

The ships with which such contracts shall be made shall be ships of American registry only, and contracts shall be for a term of not less than four nor more than six years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I move to amend section 19, line 10, by striking out the words "one dollar" and inserting "seventy-five cents;" so as to read:

A sum not exceeding 75 cents per mile, on the trip each way.

The average pay for inland postage is 57½ cents a mile. This, counting both ways, would be $2 a mile, and under the amendment I have offered it will be $1.50, which I think is sufficient.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I have said all along that I desired to vote a liberal pay for the postal and other service. I am inclined to think 75 cents is still quite high, surely high enough, because there must be a very great difference in the cost of a ship-owner in the inland or coastwise service from what there is on the ocean service. The Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] in his speech made this statement:

The committee, after the most careful consideration of this question, and examining various parties upon it, decided that $1 per mile for the round trip should be fixed as the limit beyond which it should not go. That is, that between that and nothing it should be left open to competition and bidding. If we look at the statistics of our own coastwise mail service we find that the United States Government is paying from three to two dollars per mile for mail service in some of our coastwise steamers for the entire round trip—much more than is proposed to be paid by this section.

I said yesterday that that analogy did not hold good. I do not propose to argue it except to take one case with which I am familiar. The Senator from Maine knows that I told him I would say nothing to-day about this bill; and I shall be very brief. In the contracts for carrying the mails along the Ohio River, for example from Louisville to Evansville, there is mail service in safe and suitable steamboats, required to be made every day and to call at twenty or thirty important points, for $15,000 a year. The steamboat may have no freight or passengers except between Louisville and Evansville, and still every day and every trip, in good or bad weather, high or low water, rain or shine, fog or clear, she must go to each one of those points and deliver the mails or be docked on her service; and all that is done for $15,000 a year. I have no doubt that the boat from Louisville to Evansville, Ind., carries five times the mail that any Brazilian mail steamship line would carry; and the Brazilian line would not have to make a single stop from New York to Brazil, whereas these steamboats have to carry the mail all the time and do it for $15,000 a year. Let me show the pay and the service done on the Ohio River between these two points, to illustrate what I was endeavoring to prove:

Bond required with bid, $10,000; check, $500.

Present pay, $2,000.

That is all I care to say. It is a fallacy to compare that character of service with ocean service between two distant terminal points.

Mr. FRYE. If the bill provided that the Postmaster-General should pay $1 a mile the round trip for carrying the mails, I would not object to this amendment saying that he shall pay 75 cents a mile for the round trip. But the bill does not so provide. It is only a limitation upon his power to pay and the power of the mail contractor to compel him to pay. He shall not pay more than $1 a mile under any circumstances; and I want to call the Senator's attention to section 20.

We repeal the section to which I referred yesterday, the compulsory-process section, but leave on the statute-book section 4203 of the Revised Statutes, which is another compulsory process almost in terms like the first one; and we do that because the Postmaster-General says: "Suppose there is but one contractor; he will not take it for a dollar a mile; or suppose it is to a portion of the world where I will not pay one dollar a mile"—and the suggestion was that there were quite a number of places where he would not pay a dollar a mile—"suppose these circumstances arise, then where shall I be left? I shall not have any provision for carrying my mail." So under his instruction in drafting this section I left that other compulsory provision stand; and now after this bill becomes a law the Postmaster-General still has the power, a United States minister, a United States consul or commercial agent has the power, to make an American vessel carry the mails simply on the provision that the compensation for doing it "shall not be less than the sea and the United States inland postages on the correspondence conveyed in such mails, nor greater than $1 a mile, as above provided." So then if your Postmaster-General thinks that a dollar a mile is too much between any one port and any other port, and is not able to make a contract, all he has to do then is to turn around and resort to the still remaining compulsory section, only there he shall not compel him to carry it for a cent a letter, but he shall not pay less than the whole postage, sea and inland, nor more than $1 a mile; and the latter part of that section provides that:

The provisions of this section shall apply, in the case of mails conveyed from the United States to foreign destinations, only in the event that the Postmaster-General shall find it inexpedient or impracticable to contract for their conveyance under the terms and limitations of this act.

He says that under that he is perfectly safe; nobody can exact any more than is reasonable and fair from him; and if the proposal made be not met by reasonable contract terms on the part of the mail contractor all he has to do is to turn around and say, "Well, you must carry my mail under my terms." It seems to me that leaves power enough with the Postmaster-General to regulate it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine what he understands by the terms employed in the seventeenth line, "shall not exceed the gross revenues of the Post-Office Department of the United States on mail-matter sent to and received from foreign countries?"

Mr. FRYE. I intended only to cover the whole receipts from foreign mail transportation. That is all.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Does the Senator consider that the language here employed limits it to that amount received by the United States from letters brought from foreign countries here?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir; and I submitted what it would be in my former speech, as reported to me by the Postmaster-General. I gave his figures.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I know what the Senator has submitted, but I have very grave doubts, under the language employed in this bill, whether it would be limited to any such sum.

Mr. FRYE. The language of this section expressly excludes the sums paid out "for transportation on foreign vessels," and it excludes expressly the "net amount paid foreign administrations for intermediary, territorial, and sea transit of such mails." It seems to me it is pretty explicit. At any rate it satisfied the Postmaster-General and the head of the Bureau of Foreign Mails.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no further amendment be proposed to section 19, section 20 is open to amendment. [A pause.] If no amendment be proposed to section 20, section 21 is open to amendment. [A pause.] If no amendment be proposed to section 21, section 22 is open to amendment. [A pause.] If no amendment be proposed to section 22, section 23 is open to amendment.

Mr. VEST. I offer now the following amendment, to come in as a new section after section 23:

That section 4592 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4592. Fees shall be paid shipping commissioners as follows: Not exceeding the sum of $1 for each member of a crew engaged (except apprentices). For each boy apprenticed to the merchant service, including the indenture, $2. Fees payable on discharging crew, for each member of a crew discharged, 25 cents. Each shipping commissioner shall cause a scale of the fees payable to be prepared, and to be conspicuously placed in the shipping office, and may refuse to proceed with any engagement or discharge unless the fees payable thereon are first paid."

That section 4501 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4501. The several circuit courts within the jurisdiction of which there is a port of entry, which is also a port of ocean navigation, shall appoint a commissioner for each port of entry, which is also a port of ocean navigation, and which in their judgment may require the same; such commissioner to be termed a shipping commissioner, and may, from time to time, remove from office any such commissioner whom the court may have reason to believe does not properly perform his duty, and shall then provide for the proper performance of his duties until another person is duly appointed in his place. Shipping commissioners shall annually, and oftener if required, render a full, exact, and itemized account of their receipts and expenditures to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall determine their compensation, and shall from time to time determine the number and compensation of the clerks appointed by such commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, subject to the limitations now fixed by law. The Secretary of the Treasury shall regulate the mode of conducting business in the shipping offices to be established by the shipping commissioners as hereinafter provided, and shall have full and complete control over the same, subject to the provisions herein contained."

Mr. CONGER. I would ask the Senator from Missouri if he has left any other duty with the court except the appointment?

Mr. VEST. That is all.

Mr. CONGER. It transfers all the rest to the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to that. I would suggest also that there should be an amendment in the first paragraph, which provides that the schedule of prices shall be placed in the office, so as to require it to be kept there. I would insert the word "kept," so as to make it a continuous requirement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves to amend, in line 8, after the word "be," by inserting "kept;" so as to read:

And to be kept conspicuously placed in the shipping office.

Mr. CONGER. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to the amendment. The only thing that occurs to me is whether the fees are not too greatly reduced. They are now nearly twice what is charged by the English shipping commissioner, but it must be remembered that the English shipping commissioner gets ten fees where the American shipping commissioner gets one. But I am not going to object to the amendment. If the Senator from Missouri has looked it over and thinks the fees fixed are ample, certainly I should like to have our vessels relieved as much as possible.

Mr. CONGER. I was about to add to what I said——

Mr. FRYE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he had yielded the floor.

Mr. CONGER. While this change transferring the control of this business and the settlement of the accounts of the shipping commissioners to the Treasury Department is I think in the right direction, I should be still better satisfied if the amendment provided that the Secretary of the Treasury should make the appointment as well as have the control of the fees after the commissioner is appointed. I think it would be more in keeping, I have always felt it would be more in keeping, with the business to have the continual watchfulness of the Treasury Department over the performance of the duties of this office. We see now that for years there has been great complaint in regard to it under the present system. I will not make the motion myself, but if the Senator from Missouri would amend his amendment in that way I would be very glad to vote for a provision which authorized the appointment of these commissioners by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. VEST. I myself should have no objection to that; but after conversation with a member of the House I concluded to leave the appointment with the circuit judges. I think it is best to leave it there for the present at any rate.

As to the amount of fees, the official proof shows that in 1874 the fees collected by the shipping commissioner at New York were $56,169, and his expenses for the same year $56,974.57; in 1875 his fees were $51,718.50, and he spent $51,440.29; in 1876 his fees were $29,802.25, and the expenses $30,691.95, bringing the Government in debt nearly $800; in 1877 his fees were $28,450.25, and the expenses $29,672.58, bringing the Government in debt again; the next year the fees rose to $34,356 and the expenses to $34,387; the next year the fees collected were $30,217,50; the next year the fees collected were $25,538.50; the next year the fees amounted to $23,027, and the next year $22,213.50, and the expenses were $22,531.50 for 1882, $24,279.93 for 1881, and $25,948.50 for 1880.

As a matter of course it is nonsensical to make any comments on this sort of thing.

Mr. CONGER. The only comment to be made is that the expenditures and the receipts have some parallelism. [Laughter.]

Mr. VEST. They do run together in the most astonishing way; but think of paying to a shipping commissioner $54,000 in a year, and never less than $22,000! That is for the port of New York. The only doubt I have in regard to this amendment is the way in which it operates as to the shipping commissioners at the smaller ports. I will state frankly—for I intend to be perfectly disingenuous about this matter—that if I had my way as to the legislation I would abolish the office altogether and put the duties in the collector's office, giving to the collector of the port of New York two or three clerks to perform the duty and allowing them a salary. The whole system is wrong, in my judgment, and ought to be abolished, but for the present I shall be satisfied if the amendment shall be adopted as I have offered it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Mr. President, I think everybody who knows anything about the doings of the shipping commissioners knows that the system is all wrong as it exists now. The reason why those abuses which the Senator from Missouri has spoken of have been allowed to exist is because the shipping commissioners are appointed by the circuit judges and their accounts are passed upon by those judges, who do not give that care and attention to it which they should. The shipping commissioner ought to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, amenable to the Secretary of the Treasury, under the control of that Department, and his accounts be rendered to the accounting officers of the Treasury and passed upon by them. Then you will have some control over these officers and can prevent the great abuses which are known to exist in the administration of the office. The proposition of the Senator from Missouri that the shipping commissioner might be an officer of the customs is nothing more nor less then putting it under the charge of the Secretary of the Treasury, for saying that such an officer as shipping commissioner shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury amounts to the same thing as if he were a customs officer. It brings him under the direct control of the Treasury Department, as he should be. There may be some occult reason why this amendment ought not to be adopted at this time, as the Senator from Maine seems to intimate, but I can see no reason myself why we should not make the change now, and have this officer appointed by the Treasury Department as he ought to be.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Mr. President, I move that the amendment be amended by giving the appointment to the Secretary of the Treasury. The system of shipping commissioners grew up some years ago because of the great abuses of what are called the sailors, boarding-house keepers. The shipping commission was started for the protection of the sailors. It has not worked as well as it was hoped it would prove when the law was passed. Nevertheless the committee on investigation did not think it wise to entirely dispense with it without providing some other means. The appointment was originally given to the judges of the circuit court, I suppose with the idea of taking the appointments out of politics; but the result has proved that the course was not wise and has proved that our courts are not proper authorities for exercising executive duties such as the appointment of officers of this kind. The control of business pertaining to our shipping, our light-house system, and all matters of that kind, is in the Treasury Department; they all belong there of right under our Government as it is now administered; and if the shipping commissioners throughout the country had been appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, which is an executive office and which holds all its subordinates to strict account, the abuses which have grown up under the present shipping commission, in my judgment, would never have occurred. And as we have now no proposition to dispense with the shipping commissioners, as we have perfected no plan for doing without them, it seems to me the wise course would be to modify the amendment of the Senator from Missouri in such form as to put the appointment in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is now left with the circuit court, and the amendment makes the officer amenable to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is to pass upon his accounts. It seems to me the appointment ought to be with the officer who is to pass upon the accounts, so that if the Secretary of the Treasury shall find that a shipping commissioner at any port is negligent in his duties, or that he is collecting exorbitant fees, or is in any way oppressing the sailors, he ought to have the power to immediately remove him and appoint another man.

It seems to me it is not a good practice to leave the appointing power with the court, which knows nothing about ship matters and can have no personal knowledge of the fitness of the person to be appointed and which is to maintain no control over the officer after he has been appointed. I believe it would be much better for the sailors themselves, much better for the service, and in the interest of economy and honest management to change the system to that extent and give the appointing power to the Secretary of the Treasury and then hold that Department responsible for all abuses. I have seen great abuses growing up under it; investigations have shown that there were great abuses; but nobody has thought of charging the judge with the crime or with the fault that has been committed. He has simply done his duty in appointing an officer, and the officer has been a law unto himself. We have seen that the shipping commissioner in New York has consumed in the expenses of his office the entire receipts, whatever they were; the Government has received little or nothing. Every year he has succeeded in dividing the receipts of the office among the employés in the office. In short, he has been an officer independent of the President, independent of the Cabinet or of any other officer whatsoever. He has collected these large sums of money and done with them precisely what he saw fit.

Now, I submit to the Senator from Missouri and the Senate that if we are to touch the matter at all, let us go to the bottom of it. Let us put this officer entirely under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, and in order to do that I think it is necessary that the Secretary of the Treasury should have the appointing power. Therefore I will move that the amendment be so amended that the appointing power shall be given to the Secretary of the Treasury instead of the court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves to amend the amendment as will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 13 of the amendment, after the first word "the," it is proposed to strike out "several circuit courts within the jurisdiction of which there is a port of entry, which is also a port of ocean navigation," and insert in lieu thereof "Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint a commissioner, &c.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to hear the whole clause read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole clause will be read as it would be if amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint a commissioner for each port of entry, which is also a port of ocean navigation, and which, in their judgment, may require the same; such commissioner to be termed a shipping commissioner, and may, from time to time, remove from office any such commissioner whom the court may have reason to believe does not properly perform his duty, and shall then provide for the proper performance of his duties until another person is duly appointed in his place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio desire to hear it further read?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. MILLER, of New York. In the second clause the words "Secretary of the Treasury" should be stricken out and "he" inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be modified to include that.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, this is a question which has not been considered by the Committee on Commerce, and I am not myself inclined at present in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York. I do not think that I shall give the reasons why I am not so inclined at present; I simply state the fact. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. That amendment, coupled with the amendments that were adopted three or four days ago and are now a part of this bill, will render the repeal of the whole shipping law necessary, and the enactment of a new shipping law in its place, if the system of commissioners is to be maintained, and I would rather that should be left for future legislation. The fees are reduced now in this bill one-half; they are reduced more than one-half in the bill as we have adopted it in those two clauses which relate to the reshipment of sailors. That takes off at least one-half of all the fees that a shipping commissioner to-day gets. Then the Senator from Missouri takes off one-half of the other half. Now, my judgment is that if you propose to have any kind of a shipping-commissioner law hereafter the whole thing must be revised, and I would rather it should be left to future legislation than to undertake to do it now.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. If I understand the argument of the Senator from Maine, it goes against the entire amendment of the Senator from Missouri, as well as the amendment to the amendment, for my amendment to the amendment will in no wise decrease the fees. It simply refers to the method of appointment. We have already, as the Senator has expressed it, reduced the receipts of the shipping commissioner, and the amendment of the Senator from Missouri proposes to reduce them still further to 25 per cent. of the present fees. I submit that we have no information before us which could lead us to suppose or believe that the shipping commission can be maintained throughout the country upon 25 per cent. of the present fees, and that is exactly what the amendment of the Senator from Missouri produces, if it has been correctly stated by the Senator from Maine.

My amendment relates entirely and solely to the method of appointment, and it seems to me that it must commend itself to the reason of every Senator that if a shipping commissioner is to be under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, is to account to him quarterly, or oftener if called upon, and give a full statement of his affairs, and if the number of his clerks and their pay is to be regulated by the Secretary of the Treasury, then in order that there may be any proper control the Secretary should have the power of appointment of the commissioner in the first instance. I do not know of another case in our Government in which we have transferred such powers to the circuit courts as the appointment of shipping commissioners. It is entirely outside of their duties, and outside of any knowledge which they may have in regard to the men or the affairs pertaining to our ships. As I said before, everything pertaining to our shipping is in the Treasury Department. The Bureaus of Navigation and of Steam Inspection, the Light-House Board, the Life-Saving Service, the registry of vessels, the admeasurement and collection of tonnage tax, everything pertaining to the subject is now under that Department.

I fail to understand the Senator from Maine when he states that my amendment in any way affects the receipts of the shipping commissioners. I can not see that it affects them at all.

Mr. FRYE. I did not say it did.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Then I can not understand why my amendment should be so destructive to the shipping-commissioner law. If there is any destruction it comes from the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator did not understand me. I do not think his amendment has the slightest effect on the shipping law. I alluded entirely to the amendments already adopted and to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri touching fees. Now, I shall be frank to say——

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I understood the Senator to say that he was in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, and that he was not in favor of my amendment to the amendment because it would destroy the shipping laws or require an entire remodeling of those laws.

Mr. FRYE. I did not say so. I said the amendments already adopted and the present amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri would require a change in the shipping law, and I frankly say that I am opposed to any shipping commissioner any way. I do not believe in putting a sailor under guardianship. I do not know of any reason why a sailor and a master of a vessel can not make contracts just as well as I and a master of a vessel can make a contract. I believe it is the interposition of an officer entirely unnecessary and does no good whatever, and I shall be glad if the reduction of the fees is going to destroy the office of shipping commissioner.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The Senator does not bring any argument against my amendment.

Mr. FRYE. I should not have taken the floor if I had not supposed the Senator was through.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The joint committee of the Forty-seventh Congress, of which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER], the Senator for Missouri [Mr. VEST], and myself were members, investigated the shipping question very extensively in the city of New York, examined a large number of seamen and different people, and while the committee were not satisfied with the workings of the shipping commission they did not come to the conclusion that it was wise to dispense with it. We found such evils existing with the sailor boarding-house keepers that we thought it unwise to entirely dispense with it, and it would be unwise in my judgment to dispense with it now in a summary way. I think that the Committee on Commerce is not ready to recommend that. I am very sure that we have given the subject no such consideration during the present Congress as to enable the committee itself to recommend the entire dispensing with the shipping commission. If the shipping commission is honestly administered, economically administered, and administered in the interest of the sailors, as it was intended it should be, I have no doubt for one that it would be of very great benefit to the sailors of the country, and I think the Senator from Michigan will bear me out in this. I think his investigations made years ago in regard to this question led him to believe that something of this kind was absolutely necessary for their protection.

There has undoubtedly grown up a great abuse in some of our ports, and I think the abuse has been simply because this officer was a law unto himself, was appointed by the circuit judge, and rendered substantially no account to any one; he expended the moneys received, and at the end of the year made a statement of what he had done with them. There was no officer who could say to him, "You may pay certain sums for clerk-hire; you may have a certain number of clerks and pay them certain salaries." He divided the money among the clerks just as he saw fit; he collected all he could; he was a law entirely unto himself. I believe the system of appointment is responsible substantially for the principal trouble in the whole case, and is what requires the necessity for a change.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Would it not be a good plan to abolish all the fees? Does not the trouble grow out of the fact that the officer is empowered to collect fees? For my part I should like to abolish all fees in relation to shipping and every custom-house fee known to the law as well as the fees of shipping commissioners. I do not believe in the collection of fees for anything.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. This bill goes very far in that direction, but the committee did not think it wise to abolish all fees. It has abolished all consular fees in connection with shipping; it has largely reduced the tonnage tax and abolished the hospital tax, and it has very largely reduced the shipping commissioners' fees; it proposes to reduce the fee for the inspection of steamships. But perhaps it may not be wise to remove all fees at once. Perhaps the burden that would be thrown on the Treasury would appear so large that the measure would fail. But certainly the bill goes a long way toward removing all fees, and I am not prepared to say that I disagree with the Senator from California on that proposition. I am not sure that it would not be best to abolish all fees; but perhaps we have gone as far in this bill in that direction as it is wise to do at the present time. Therefore, having reduced the fees certainly from 50 to 45 per cent., it may be wise to leave it where it is for the present and see what the result will be.

I am very clear, as I was at the time of the investigation of the joint committee, that the great trouble in the shipping commission was that the commissioner was appointed by the court and there was no authority maintained over him, and he had simply his own greed, his own desire to make profit to himself, as his entire law and rule of action.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, some twelve years ago the trouble in our large ports with the shipmen and sailors had become so great, the wrongs done sailors were so great, the practice of shipping them when they were in an unconscious state of inebriety was so notorious, and the entire inadequacy of any safeguards for the sailor was so apparent that not only shipping-men throughout the whole country, but men kindly disposed toward sailors took the subject up. I think the movement originated first in San Francisco, under the action of the Seamen's Friend Society of San Francisco, and it was agitated there for some time. Then the American Seamen's Friend Society, which has its headquarters in New York, took up the subject and appointed a committee to examine into the whole matter and make a report. That was done very carefully and very faithfully.

The report from San Francisco and from the American Seamen's Friend Society was published in almost all the New York papers simultaneously; and for weeks and for months there was a continuous demand in the larger ports of the United States for some law to protect sailors against the rapacity and the wrong-doing of sailor-landlords, who were in the main the shipping agents and who were notoriously in the habit, as was proved in the testimony read before Congress some twelve years ago, of taking sailors' advance wages, taking them in a state of intoxication, having their shipping papers signed by marks, and the sailors dumped on board vessels in the harbor and going out to sea on distant voyages without any knowledge at all on the part of the sailor himself that he had ever been shipped, or on what terms, or on what conditions; and that was followed by a tax levied on the sailor by the rapacity of the sailor-landlords as soon as he was discharged from the ship.

There is no doubt but that public sentiment all over the United States upon those exposures being made demanded the passage of some law that should give some protection and some safeguard to these hardy, generous, whole-souled, rollicking sailors, and some protection to the families of those who had families in the cities where they were shipped. Perhaps there was no subject that appealed so generally to the humane good people of the United States as this subject of the protection of sailors.

After some months of careful investigation in both Houses of Congress the agitation culminated in the passage of the shipping commissioners' bill. The result of it in the saving of expense to the shipping-men is established by the reports of the comparative expenses of shipping sailors on the same vessel in the year before the passage of this law and in the year after. The diminution in expense to the shippers by their own statement—and I have a list of some eighty or ninety, I think, furnished from the books of the firms owning the vessels—was shown to be from 15 to 73 per cent., varying all the way between these figures.

The law did work well. No sailor could be shipped when he was in a state of intoxication; no sailor could be shipped without his own consent; no sailor could be sent on board any vessel to go to the far-off regions of the earth or to those more near without knowing when his shipping papers were signed, where he was going, and on what ship, and how long the voyage would be. The morals of the sailors were protected; the comfort of the families of those who had families was secured.

The law worked well, and the only fault about it to-day that I know of, except those continual faults that are pointed out by sailor-landlords, who desire to again get possession of their victims, is the irregularity of this one commissioner among four or five in increasing the salaries of his clerks and appropriating the money received to his own uses. The law contemplated that the fees from time to time should be so regulated as only to pay a reasonable compensation to the shipping commissioner and for the expenses of his office and for the services of his clerks. There is no great violation of the spirit of the law in using all the money obtained from the charges and fees for shipping sailors, because it was contemplated that no more should be charged than was necessary to keep up the office. The fault in this case is that with the increase in the receipts of fees he increased the salaries of his clerks, and the payments for office expenses have likewise been increased.

I have no doubt that the shipping commissioner in New York, to whom reference has been made, from that day to this—for he is the only shipping commissioner who has been appointed there—has understood and has believed, and has acted upon that belief, that the fees coming into that office were to be appropriated for the uses of the office. I have no doubt that, believing that to be the fact, every year he has made a report of receipts and of expenditures, and the circuit court receiving that report under the law, with no complaint about irregularity, and finding that the amount of compensation allowed did not exceed the receipts, has approved the report from time to time until the fact has become so apparent that the fees have been used to pay larger salaries and larger rents than are consistent with a fair administration of the law that it has aroused public attention.

Now, sir, one of the reasons for the passage of this law—not the only one, but one of the main reasons—was the advance wages of the sailors. That was the treasure for which sailor-landlords were driving; that was the treasure which they sought to obtain and use to ship sailors and for which they committed so many of the enormities that made such a law necessary. In my opinion, with that clause in this bill which takes away the advance wages, the inducement of the sailor-landlords to get possession of the sailor, the object which they would have in taking possession of the sailor and procuring what he might have, will be largely removed; but that the sailor should ship in a sober condition, that he should know what contract he is making, that he should know the length of the voyage he is about to undertake, is as desirable now as it ever was, and the shipping commissioner is necessary to have the law and these necessities complied with.

In regard to the change of the appointing power to the Secretary of the Treasury, I would say that the same shipping commissioners' law provides that whenever it is not allowable to appoint a shipping commissioner the collector of customs, who is an officer under the Secretary of the Treasury, shall perform the duties of shipping commissioner, and in more than half the ports where these duties are performed they are performed by collectors of customs now. So that the transfer of the appointing power from the circuit court will not be any innovation of the principle of the appointing power under the law as it now stands.

Mr. SHERMAN. If this amendment is to be adopted there are certain minor amendments which will have to be made before it can be effective as an operative measure. For instance, this requires an annual report to be made to the Secretary of the Treasury. It ought to be a monthly report. The annual report would create delay in the settlement of these accounts, and it would be manifestly unjust to the officers employed as well as to all the people engaged in the business. I would suggest, therefore, that instead of the words "an annual report to the Secretary of the Treasury" it should be "a monthly report," so as to place this business on the same footing as the business of the collectors of customs. Then there should be in addition to the provision some mode of auditing these accounts, and I will offer an amendment to come in at the end.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILSON in the chair). There are two amendments now pending, and therefore a further amendment is not now in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps the Senator having the proposition in charge, the Senator from Missouri, will accept my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It may be read for information.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will move to strike out where the annual report is required and make it a monthly report, and add the following clause at the end of the section so as to provide for the examination of the accounts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment can be read for information, but it will not be in order now to offer it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Was not the amendment requiring annual reports adopted?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not yet.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I thought it was.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is part of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. I send my proposed amendment to the desk to be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2 of the amendment, line 24, it is proposed to strike out the words "annually, and oftener if required" and insert in lieu thereof "monthly," and at the end of the section to add:

And all expenditures for shipping commissioners shall be audited and adjusted in the Treasury Department in the mode and manner provided for expenditures in the collection of customs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment pending is that of the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. Consequently the amendment just read is not now in order. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. If in order, I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York can modify his amendment, but the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio does not apply to the first amendment proposed by the Senator from New York. The question is on the first amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York now offers an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 17 of the amendment it is proposed to strike out the word "their" and insert "his;" so as to read: "his judgment."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves to further amend.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 20, after the word "whom," it is proposed to strike out "the court" and insert "he."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Now the amendment of the Senator from New York as modified by the Senator from Ohio will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the amendment as amended:

And all expenditures by shipping commissioners shall be audited and adjusted in the Treasury Department in the mode and manner provided for expenditures in the collection of customs.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a part of the amendment, as to the reports, not yet acted on.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 24 it is proposed to strike out "annually and oftener, if required" and insert in lieu thereof "monthly."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] as amended.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri what reduction there is in the fees of the shipping commissioner. While the fees may be large for the port of New York, where there is a large tonnage, this may very materially affect the ports of Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, and San Francisco. As this applies to all shipping commissioners there may not be enough under this to allow them to run the office in some ports. I would suggest that if the fees at New York are too much, adopt a different scale according to the differing business of the different ports.

Mr. VEST. I have no official statement as to the amount of fees received in any of the ports except New York. I have understood—and I acquired that not in an official way—that the smallest amount paid under this amendment will be from twelve hundred to fifteen hundred dollars. That will be the smallest amount paid to any one of the shipping commissioners in any of the ports. If they have not many duties to perform they will not require a clerk.

Mr. SEWELL. What is the proposed reduction?

Mr. VEST. The reduction is just one-half on each of these fees for shipping a crew, for discharging a crew, and for the indenturing of an apprentice.

Mr. SEWELL. Will not the Senator from Missouri, in order to be on the safe side, make the reduction 25 per cent. instead of 50 per cent.?

Mr. VEST. I have stated very frankly before that I am in favor of abolishing the whole office.

Mr. SEWELL. I think you will accomplish it if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. VEST. That is what I want to do.

Mr. CONGER. With the change in the appointing power and the accountability of these officers to return their accounts and settle their accounts monthly, as the amendment provides for now; and with the control over the expenditures by the Treasury Department, it is not so material about reducing the fees. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that it might possibly be left without any reduction at all until it can be seen whether the officers get more than a reasonable allowance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri as amended.

Mr. SEWELL. Can we not have a division of the question?

Mr. SHERMAN. You can move to amend it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think the amendment is susceptible of division.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Secretary report the part of the amendment relative to fees?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That part of the amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Fees shall be paid shipping commissioners as follows: Not exceeding the sum of $1 for each member of a crew engaged (except apprentices). For each boy apprenticed to the merchant service, including the indenture, $2. Fees payable on discharging crew, for each member of a crew discharged, 25 cents.

Mr. SEWELL. I have not knowledge as to what the fees actually received have been heretofore, but the cutting down of the fees 50 per cent. at a small office may very materially affect the office.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Where there is not enough to pay a separate officer the collector of customs performs the duties.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It seems to me that the shipping fee of $1 for each member of a crew ought to be abundant. There has been great complaint on the part of sea captains that the fee of $2 was too large. For a crew of fifteen or thirty or forty men it entails a great expense, which is altogether out of proportion to the service rendered. It has been seen wherever an investigation has been had that the shipping commissioner in order to use up the funds coming into his hand has simply employed an unnecessary number of clerks. In the smaller ports where the fees collected are not more than $1,500 or $2,000, certainly one man can do all the work a shipping commissioner can be appointed for, and there will be no necessity of clerks at all. I believe there is no important port where crews are likely to be shipped where the fee of $1 for each member of a crew will not be entirely adequate. As we are relieving our merchant marine from its burdens, I think we can not do any one thing that will be more appreciated by the sea captains themselves than this reduction of shipping-commissioner's fees. I think it is entirely necessary.

Mr. VEST. I stated in answer to the Senator from New Jersey that the reduction was one-half. In the case of indentured apprentices the fee is $5, and under the amendment it would be $2, which is a reduction of rather more than one-half. There are very few of them and $5 is simply outrageous. The 25 cents for discharging a seaman is enough. That is the testimony before our committee. These commissioners have blanks and when the crew is discharged they hear the complaints made against the captain or master of the vessel and determine summarily, and the whole thing is over in a very few minutes. For a crew of twenty men the fee is ample for the work performed.

Mr. BECK. I understood the Senator from Missouri to say, and the Senator from Maine as well, that there was no special reason why the fees ought not to be abolished altogether. Now why not let us do that and stop all question about it. Is there any special reason for continuing this fee system?

Mr. VEST. I am in favor of abolishing the fees, but at the suggestion of a gentleman who served with me upon the committee I did not propose so radical a change as the abolishing of the fees. I will send to the desk an amendment which I did prepare for the purpose of offering it to take the sense of the Senate on that proposition for the entire abolition of the fees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the proposition will be read.

Mr. BECK. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

That all laws or parts of laws requiring the payment of any fee or remuneration to the shipping commissioners for the shipping of seamen be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That the duties of shipping commissioners as now prescribed by law in regard to the shipping or discharge of seamen or apprentices shall be performed by the collectors of the several ports of the United States, and the collectors shall appoint such number of clerks as the Secretary of the Treasury may think necessary to enable the collectors to discharge the additional duties imposed upon them by this act, and the clerks so appointed shall be paid such salaries as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not know enough about the amendment just read to offer it, but I know that there is but little chance to get rid of extortions and frauds unless they are cut up by the root.

Indeed, Mr. President, when abuses become intolerable the only remedy seems to be to abolish the system, if possible, and build up on a new basis. There are always objections to removals from office and reduction of compensation which prevent radical reforms. I have laid before the Committee on Commerce a bill prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury for the reduction of the customs districts from some one hundred and twenty-five to about seventy-five, which would cut off some twenty custom-houses at which no duties are collected, and about thirty-five that do not pay expenses and are needless. The new bill would save over half a million, perhaps $1,000,000, a year, yet it seems nothing can be done. I had a bill referred to the Finance Committee some months ago to reduce the number of employés and the cost of collecting the tax on distilled spirits, and yet while the abuses are flagrant it seems impossible to have action on it, though I feel sure the committee favor the bill.

The sixth district of North Carolina is a case in point. (See Executive Document No. 94, page 32, first session Forty-eighth Congress.) The estimated revenue for the current year in that district is shown to be $400,000. The expenses are as follows:

	Per annum.
One collector	$3,375
Two deputies, $1,600 each	3,200
Six deputies, $1,000 each	6,000
Eight deputies, $900 each	5,400
Six deputies, $1,200 each	7,200
Four deputies, $950 each	3,800
Two clerks, $800 each	1,600
One clerk, $900	900
One messenger, $300	300
Thirty-six gaugers, at, say, $5 per day for 365 days	65,700
Two hundred and seventeen storekeepers and gaugers, at $4 per day for 365 days	316,820
Eight storekeepers and gaugers, at $3 per day	8,760
Traveling expenses	5,700
Rent of office	650
	429,405

It will thus be seen if the pay of the storekeepers and gaugers is continued during the whole year, as they are apt to be in a Presidential year, that the expenses will exceed the collections over $29,000. The report of the Register of the Treasury shows that the expenses of the district for last year exceeded $190,000. I hope Senators will look over the executive document to which I refer and they will see how the money of the people goes, and how little they appreciate the extent of the abuses in the public service.

I will not offer an amendment, but I will vote for the lowest possible sum so as to try to get clear of some things of this kind.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Do I understand that the Senator from Missouri proposes to offer an amendment abolishing the fees?

Mr. FRYE. No, he does not offer it.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Then the question is on the original amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as amended.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I hope that will be adopted and that the other will be withheld. It is possible that when a proper bill shall come up the committee having full charge of the whole subject may be disposed to accept the proposed amendment of the Senator from Missouri; but I trust it will not pass now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to offer an additional section to come in after the one just adopted.

That section 4458 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4458. Before issuing any inspection certificate to any steamer the collector or other chief officer of customs for the port or district shall demand and receive from the owners thereof, as a compensation for the inspection and examinations made for the year, the following sums, in addition to the fees for issuing enrollments and licenses now allowed by law, according to the tonnage of the vessel: For each steam vessel of one hundred tons or under, $10; and for each and every ton in excess of one hundred tons, 5 cents."

Mr. MILLER, of California. Is that a reduction?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The amendment just offered, which met the approval of the Committee on Commerce, reduces the inspection fee of steam vessels below one hundred tons to $10 from $25 and an additional fee of 5 cents per ton above one hundred tons, which is the present law. The present law is $25 for all vessels less than one hundred tons burden, and 5 cents a ton additional for all vessels above. This amendment simply reduces the $25 to $10.

A vast number of small tugboats and steamers doing business on our bays and inland rivers, of from ten to twenty-five and fifty tons burden, have to pay every year $25 inspection fee. It is altogether too much, and the result has been that there is in the Treasury to-day to the credit of that fund a surplus of $639,245.93. The fees heretofore collected from this class of boats has led to this great surplus accumulating in the Treasury. The ten-dollar fee, which is provided for in the amendment, it is estimated will for the future just about pay the expenses of the service. It will not cost the Government anything and will reduce the fees to about the actual cost of the work.

Mr. ALLISON. I find that the Senator from New York has left out entirely the latter part of section 4458.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It was not the intention to leave that out. The intention was simply to affect the fees. That we had done, I supposed.

Mr. ALLISON. The latter part of section 4458 reads:

Each master, chief engineer, and first-class pilot, licensed as herein provided, shall pay for every certificate, granted by any inspector or inspectors, the sum of $10; and every chief mate, engineer, and pilot of an inferior grade shall pay for every certificate so granted the sum of $5. Such fees shall be paid over to the chief officer of the customs in such manner and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. There was no intention to disturb that. Those people have to be examined and licensed, and therefore it is necessary to include that. I ask that the Senator send the Revised Statutes to the desk, and the Secretary can add to my amendment the rest of the section which the Senator has read.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I suggest that that fee be reduced one-half. Ten dollars is an extortionate fee for the certificate, and wholly disproportionate to any just compensation for making it out. It is an unnecessary tax upon that class of persons. The Government does not need it.

Mr. MORGAN. I rose for the purpose of making the same suggestion. I have known this to operate sometimes very harshly indeed on a little ferry-boat on the Alabama River, originally a flatboat. An enterprising Irishman got a little engine to put on board his boat, not more than sufficient to run an ordinary fan-wheel, having very low power, and they brought him within the inspection laws of the United States and made him pay the annual duty. I think it is a very great hardship. It ought to be reduced to $5, certainly.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I do not care to argue that question, for I have not given it sufficient examination to be able to accept the proposition.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move to amend it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from New York has not yet been reduced to writing so that it can be read from the desk.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I can only say that the licensing of these pilots for service on large inland rivers is a very important matter. They have to be carefully examined every year before they are licensed, and I very much doubt whether it would be wise to so cheapen the whole thing that anybody could get a license for two and a half dollars or five dollars, or whatever the amount may be that it is proposed to be reduced to. There is no person in the world who has greater responsibilities cast upon him than the pilot or captain of some of our large inland steamers, running on our inland waters, or in the harbor of New York and about Philadelphia, where it is a very common thing for large steamers, great ferry-boats, to have several thousand people on board at a time. I have not given the question consideration enough to be willing to accept the modification. Of course if the Senate think it wise to do it, I can not object, but I do not believe it to be wise.

Mr. CONGER. The section which is referred to here as proposed to be amended has been amended, and the license fee has been reduced so that it is perfectly satisfactory to the captains, mates, pilots, and all. The amendment should be of the section as it stands amended by subsequent law. I do not remember the year when the amendment was made. It is not in the Revised Statutes, but in the session laws. It has been changed within two years, I think, and there is no complaint now anywhere about the license fee.

Mr. MILLER, of California. If it has been amended and reduced you do not want to re-enact the old section.

Mr. CONGER. No; but the new section has the same wording as the Revised Statutes in regard to inspection. I think this might be passed over a moment until we find the amended section in the session laws.

Mr. FRYE. I suggest to the Senator from New York that to avoid this new question which has arisen a slight change in his amendment is all that is necessary. Instead of having it read that section 4458 of the Revised Statutes shall be amended so as to read as follows, simply make a new section 24, or whatever the proper number is, in this language:

Before issuing any inspection certificate to any steamer, the collector or other officer of customs for the port or district shall demand and receive from the owners thereof as a compensation for the inspection, &c.

That will get rid of this new question.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I accept that suggestion and offer the amendment in the form of an original section, without regard to any amendment of the Revised Statutes. I will offer it in that shape.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York if he knows what effect this amendment will have upon the revenue derived from this source to the Treasury of the United States. It is important that we should know if we are going to reduce this fund and bring greater expense on the Treasury than now exists, so that there will not be sufficient to meet the expenses. We ought to know it before we reduce these fees to that extent. The reductions that have taken place have been under information and advice from the Treasury Department and from the branch having charge of these matters. This amendment is not of such a character. We know nothing of the effect of this from the Department so far as the committee are concerned.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. In the remarks I made in submitting this amendment to the Senate I explained the whole matter as far as I could. If the chairman of the committee was not here I will repeat what I said.

There is at present a surplus in the Treasury belonging to this fund of $639,245.93. The supervising inspector-general, General Dumont, has written me in regard to this. The original bill which I introduced on this subject reduced the fee to $5 instead of $10, and he writes me a letter stating that if that should be enacted, after the present surplus shall have been used up then the fee of $5 per vessel would result in the expense of the service being borne one-half by the steamboat interest and the other half by the general fund. The committee therefore fixed the fee at $10 instead of $5; and as the business increases undoubtedly a fee of $10 will be sufficient to entirely pay the cost of the service. There will be no charge upon the Treasury of the United States probably; at all events, if there is any it will be very small.

Mr. CONGER. I have found the amendment of the section and I will read it. April 5, 1882, this amendment was enacted:

That section 4458 of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended by striking out of the paragraph beginning in the eighth line thereof the following words, that is to say, "Each master, chief engineer, and first-class pilot licensed as herein provided shall pay for every certificate granted by any inspector or inspectors the sum of $10, and every chief mate, engineer, and pilot of an inferior grade shall pay for every certificate so granted the sum of $5," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Each master, engineer, pilot, and mate licensed as herein provided shall pay for every certificate granted by any inspector or inspectors the sum of 50 cents."

Mr. MILLER, of California. That is about right.

Mr. CONGER. It is cut down to that, and there is no further complaint about it, as I have said. It is asked what the amount of reduction would be by adopting this provision of $10 for the inspection of the vessel. That would be a reduction of $15 upon every vessel inspected. As it is now the fee for the inspection of vessels of one hundred tons and less is $25 and 5 cents for every ton additional. If this amendment be adopted $10 will be the limit of expense for every vessel under one hundred tons, and commencing with that $10, 5 cents per ton for those above. That would make a reduction of $15 on the inspection of every vessel.

Mr. FRYE. I ask to amend the amendment a little further by adding at the end of it what I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York modifies his amendment, the Chair understands, to read as will now be stated.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Yes, sir.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section:

SEC. —. Before issuing any inspection certificate to any steamer, the collector or other chief officer of customs for the port or district shall demand and receive from the owners thereof, as a compensation for the inspection and examinations made for the year, the following sums, in addition to the fees for issuing enrollments and licenses now allowed by law, according to the tonnage of the vessel: For each steam-vessel of one hundred tons or under, $10; and for each and every ton in excess of one hundred tons, 5 cents, in lieu of the fees now provided by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands this section is to come in before section 24 as it stands in the present bill, or section 20 as originally printed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I move to amend section 18 by inserting in the first line of the section, after the word "ship-owner," the words "incurred without his personal consent or privity."

Mr. HOAR. How will it read then?

The CHIEF CLERK. "That the individual liability of a ship-owner, incurred without his personal consent or privity, shall be limited to the proportion of any or all debts and liabilities that his individual share of the vessel bears to the whole."

Mr. MILLER, of New York. That is a remarkable change. As I understood the sentiment of the committee, it was really to make the ownership in all sea-going vessels a limited-liability company in which every individual was liable for only his share. That was notice to the whole world that nothing but the ship was holden. Now, you are going to bring in a clause which would lead to interminable litigation, for some of the owners of the ship will be engaged in the management, they will know in regard to the affairs, and they will be held personally liable for everything, while other owners not immediately connected with the management will escape. The burden will all fall on one or two men, if there is any burden.

It seems to me that in order to encourage the investment of capital in ship-owning we have to do substantially this: we have to make each ship company a limited-liability company, and that is notice to everybody. If that is understood to be our law everybody who trusts a ship does it with a full knowledge that there is nothing back of it save the ship itself. Therefore no injustice will be done to any one. But if the amendment of the Senator from Maine prevails there will be two classes of owners in ships: one class, who will have control of the management, will be responsible for everything; and the other class will then take the position of silent partner and will not be responsible.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let us carry out the proposition of the Senator from New York to its logical conclusion. Suppose, for instance, two ships on the ocean or in the port of New York sail about the harbor or elsewhere. One of them collides with the other, is entirely at fault, and both ships are sunk. How are injured owners of the ship that has been sunk by reason of the fault of the other, which is also sunk by the same collision, to get redress? Where are they to seek redress? I ask the Senator from New York that question.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I beg the Senator's pardon; my attention was distracted and I did not hear his question.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will state it again. Where two ships collide and one ship is at fault and both are sunk in the collision, I wish to know where redress is to be sought? Suppose the ship not at fault is worth six times as much as the other, where is the redress?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. There will be no redress beyond the value of the ship.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The ship is sunk; what is her value then?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. She would get the marine insurance, I suppose.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Suppose she is not insured?

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me this is a much more important matter than the Senator from New York thinks. If somebody has been at fault in the management of a ship, there ought to be a liability certainly to the full extent of the man's property. There ought to be a liability criminal as well, and there ought to be a liability personal to fully the value of the ship lost. If this bill is in a condition where there is no liability for torts or wrongs committed by the managers and controllers of a vessel, I think it is an important consideration. For the ordinary hazards of the sea, for the ordinary accidents of life, the owners of a ship may not be held responsible; but if accidents and torts have been brought about by their wrongful action, they ought clearly to be responsible. It seems to me that if the bill does not provide for that it ought to be amended.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. For any wrong committed, any negligence, or anything of that kind, the parties would of course be held liable under the law. This does not affect that in my judgment.

Mr. CONGER. This provision in the bill follows the usual law of all the European nations, that in the case of damage to a vessel the party without wrong of his own shall be liable only for the value of the vessel and the freight.

Mr. SHERMAN. Suppose a tort?

Mr. CONGER. This provision does not apply to that.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me while I read a sentence from the Revised Statutes?

SEC. 4283. The liability of the owner of any vessel, for any embezzlement, loss, or destruction, by any person, of any property, goods, or merchandise, shipped or put on board of such vessel, or for any loss, damage, or injury by collision, or for any act, matter, or thing, lost, damage, or forfeiture, done, occasioned, or incurred, without the privity or knowledge of such owner or owners, shall in no case exceed the amount or value of the interest of such owner in such vessel, and her freight then pending.

The liability is not to the value of the vessel, but it is the value of the interest of such owner.

Mr. CONGER. The owner's interest is the interest in the value of the vessel before the damage was committed. That has been so construed by the courts universally. It is the interest in the vessel just prior to the time when the collision took place.

Mr. HOAR. Now, if the Senator will pardon me, this section is "that the individual liability of a ship-owner shall be limited to the proportion of any or all debts and liabilities"—not the particular debt, but all existing debts or liabilities—"that his individual share of the vessel bears to the whole." Is not that an almost impossible burden to put upon the claimant to prove the individual interest? Is he to have the duty of ascertaining how many debts there are and what proportion this man's interest bears? Is there any such rule as that?

Mr. CONGER. Would it not be unjust to the owner if he should be mulcted over and over again, beyond the value of his interest?

Mr. HOAR. Then abolish individual ownership altogether.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please suspend. The Chair thinks it his duty to remind the Senate that by unanimous consent debate was to terminate at 5 o'clock on this bill and amendments. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. VEST. I just want to say a word. I agreed to this amendment as it came from the committee, and I am for the amendment as modified now, and I do not see any objection to it. It simply changes the amendment of the committee so that if the owner of a vessel is cognizant himself or is an actor in the transaction out of which the damage arises, then he is made liable. That is the whole of it.

Mr. FRYE. Following out the spirit of the other provisions of the statute.

Mr. VEST. The intent is to protect the ship-owner when the captain is in control of the ship thousands of miles away. We did not suppose he should give bonds to the extent of a million of dollars, but only to the amount of his proportionate interest or ownership in the vessel, and of course as he is there individually and knows where the damage is committed and is a party to it he ought to be held to the full amount of the damages.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Why is not the provision in the Revised Statutes as it stands now sufficient?

Mr. VEST. It does not apply to contracts at all, only to torts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 40, noes not counted.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that all debate is cut off at 5 o'clock by the agreement of yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore That was the unanimous understanding.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent that debate on amendments which may be offered to this bill may proceed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. FRYE. We shall not get through with this bill to-night if that is done. There is no other amendment that I know of of any sort of importance except the Senator's amendment, which will come in under the House bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not wish to discuss anything about this bill any further.

Mr. FRYE. Then I do not want the Senator to ask it unless it becomes absolutely necessary.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think the agreement covers the bill and amendments. ["Vote!" "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no further amendment be proposed to section 23, as the bill now stands, amendments to section 24 are now in order. If no amendment be proposed to section 24 the bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Would it be in order now for me to ask that we go back and take a vote upon section 19, on which I wish to call the yeas and nays? Would it be in order for me to state the reasons? ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I shall object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator from New Jersey is entitled to move to strike out section 19.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. But he can not give any reasons.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Do I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to object to reasons being given?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I want to vote.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I insist on the motion, and ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FRYE. Has not that motion once been voted upon, to strike out that section?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed at the desk that it has not been.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It was withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair made that inquiry of the Secretary, and learns that no vote has been taken on the motion to strike out. The Senator from New Jersey now moves to strike out section 19.

The section was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to strike out section 19. On this question the yeas and nays are called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is necessarily absent. I would vote "yea" and I believe he would vote "nay." His colleague votes "nay."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER]. If he were here, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLAIR. My colleague [Mr. PIKE] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont occupying the chair has a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND]. As the Chair does not know how the Senator from Arkansas would vote, the Chair will not vote.

The result was announced—yeas 7, nays 44; as follows:

YEAS—7.

Cockrell,	Kenna,	McPherson,	Vest.
Harris,	Lamar,	Van Wyck,

NAYS—44.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Lapham,	Palmer,
Allison,	Dolph,	Logan,	Platt,
Blair,	Frye,	McMillan,	Plumb,
Brown,	Gibson,	Mahone,	Pugh,
Butler,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Riddleberger,
Call,	Groome,	Maxey,	Sawyer,
Camden,	Hampton,	Miller of Cal.,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sherman,
Coke,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Voorhees,
Conger,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Williams,
Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Morrill,	Wilson.

ABSENT—25.

Anthony,	Fair,	Jackson,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	Farley,	Jonas,	Slater,
Beck,	Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Vance,
Bowen,	George,	Pendleton,	Walker.
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Pike,
Colquitt,	Harrison,	Ransom,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Sabin,

So the motion was not agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. If there be no objection, the question will be taken on all the amendments together.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. FRYE. I move to take from the table the bill (H. R. 2228) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine, and encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2228. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The question was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. FRYE. The first nine sections of this bill are identical with the first nine sections of the Senate bill. They have been read twice in the hearing of the Senate. I ask that the reading of those nine sections be dispensed with, and that the sections be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the reading of the first nine sections of this bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair does not understand how by parliamentary usage the sections of a bill can be agreed to except on the third reading and passage.

Mr. FRYE. They will be then. Now, section 10 of the House bill is identical with section 10 of the Senate bill, except that in line 2, on motion of the Senator from Missouri, the following words were inserted after the word "pay:"

Before leaving the port at which such seaman may be engaged.

I move to insert, therefore, in line 2, after the word "pay," the words:

Before leaving the port at which such seaman may be engaged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that the difference occurs after the word "wages," in line 2.

Mr. FRYE. It would be better to have it after the word "pay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the reading of section 10 of this bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Maine now moves to amend section 10.

Mr. VEST. That should come in after the word "wages."

Mr. FRYE. Very well. I have no objection.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 10, after the word "wages," it is proposed to insert:

Before leaving the port at which such seaman may be engaged—

So as to read:

SEC. 10. That it shall be, and is hereby, made unlawful in any case to pay any seaman wages before leaving the port at which such seaman may be engaged in advance of the time when he has actually earned the same, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Section 11 of the House bill is identical with section 11 of the Senate bill. I ask that the reading of that may be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the reading of section 11 of this bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I think there is an error about that. I inquire of the Senator whether the word "tobacco" does not occur in line 7 of the Senate bill after the word "of"?

Mr. FRYE. It does, and it should be inserted here. I move to insert in the seventh line of section 11 of the House bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reading of the eleventh section being dispensed with? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRYE. In line 7 of the House bill, section 11, after the word "of," I move to insert the words "tobacco and;" so as to read:

Also a full supply of tobacco and blankets.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls attention to the circumstance that the last four lines of section 11 of the House bill are not in the Senate bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Let them be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those lines will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The provisions of this section shall not apply to vessels navigating the great lakes or the waters connecting the same, or the river Saint Lawrence, and the Gulf of Mexico, or any vessels of the United States engaged in the coastwise trade.

Mr. FRYE. I see no objection; on the contrary, I see many reasons why those four lines should remain in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will begin at section 12.

Mr. FRYE. Section 12 only differs from the twelfth section of the Senate bill in the last four lines after the word "act:"

But not to exceed in the aggregate in any fiscal year the amount of fees collected at each consulate for such services during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883.

I move to strike out those four lines, being all in the section after the word "act" in line 14.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the reading of section 12 be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator moves to amend the section.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 12 it is proposed to strike out all after the word "act," in line 14, as follows:

But not to exceed in the aggregate in any fiscal year the amount of fees collected at each consulate for such services during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Section 13 is identical in the House bill with the Senate bill. I move to dispense with the reading of that section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the reading of section 13 be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Section 14 will be read.

Mr. FRYE. Now, if the President please, a new section of the Senate bill is provided for section 14. I move to strike out all the House bill from and including section 14 to the end, and substitute for the same the Senate bill as amended from and including section 14 of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the reading of the residue of the House bill from section 14 forward, inclusive, be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Maine now moves to strike out from section 14 to the end of the House bill, inclusive, and insert——

Mr. FRYE. The Senate bill from and including section 14 as adopted.

Mr. VEST. I should like to have a yea-and-nay vote on section 20 of the House bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Reserve that until the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator from Missouri may ask a division of the motion to strike out.

Mr. VEST. That is what I propose to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will put the question first on striking out these sections.

Mr. FRYE. My motion is to strike out and insert, and I suppose that any Senator has the right to perfect the portion proposed to be stricken out before the vote is taken. The Senator from Alabama has an amendment he desires to offer before the vote is taken on striking out, and the Senator from Massachusetts has an amendment he proposes to offer, and the Senator from Missouri proposes to have a vote on section 20.

Mr. MORGAN. Is this bill in committee or in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS. This bill is in Committee of the Whole, and will be open to amendment after the reading, and when reported to the Senate it will be open to amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Maine being a motion to strike out and insert, it is in order under the rules to perfect the part proposed to be stricken out before taking the question on the motion to strike out and insert. But the Chair understands that the Senator from Missouri wishes to retain section 20 of the House bill.

Mr. DAWES. Is what he proposes to insert in order as an amendment to the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that if he will allow all these sections to be stricken out it will be perfectly in order for him to take one of the sections and offer it as an amendment. That would be the simplest mode of proceeding.

Mr. HARRIS. The motion of the Senator from Maine is to amend by striking out section 14 and all the subsequent sections of the House bill, and inserting section 14 and all the subsequent sections of the Senate bill. If agreed to it is one single amendment, and when reported to the Senate the question will be on concurring or non-concurring in that one single amendment. The Senator from Missouri, as it seems to me, may move now, if he chooses, to committee, to so divide the question, as the Chair has already indicated, as to reserve the vote upon the particular section named by him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri can move to perfect the text proposed to be stricken out by striking out all the sections except the section indicated by him.

Mr. VEST. I make that motion, and ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. It would be much more simple for the Senator from Missouri to move section 20 as an amendment to the Senate amendment which is about to be inserted. Then a single vote will decide it. If the Senator will move section 20 as an amendment to the part proposed to be inserted, if it is carried it will be in the bill; if it is defeated it is lost. That is the simplest way of getting at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri now to move to perfect the text proposed to be stricken out by striking out all that part of the text except section 20. The question is on that motion.

Mr. FRYE. Section 20 is the free-ship clause.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves to perfect the part proposed to be stricken out by striking out all of it except section 20; and on that question he asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PLUMB. Let the question be stated. I for one do not understand it.

Mr. MORRILL. Let section 20 be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the question. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] moves to amend the bill by striking out from section 14 to the end of the bill, inclusive, and inserting certain words, which are from section 14 to the end of the Senate bill which has been under consideration. Pending that, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] moves to perfect the text proposed to be stricken out by striking out all of it excepting section 20. If that motion is agreed to, the question will then be on striking out section 20 and inserting the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. VEST. I withdraw that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion being withdrawn? The Chair hears none. The question now is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine to strike out from section 14 inclusive of the House bill and inserting from section 14 inclusive of the Senate bill.

The matter proposed to be inserted was read, as follows:

SEC. 14. That from and after the passage of this act no duties upon the tonnage of vessels of the United States shall be levied or collected, and all acts and parts of acts imposing duties upon the tonnage of ships or vessels of the United States shall from and after the passage of this act be repealed; and whenever it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that no tonnage dues are imposed on or exacted from vessels of the United States by any foreign nation, either directly or indirectly, as light-money or otherwise, the Secretary shall thereupon cease to collect all tonnage dues that are imposed by any existing law upon the vessels of such nation which may enter any port of the United States: Provided, That no treaty between the United States and any foreign nation shall be in any way impaired or violated by such action on the part of the Government of the United States.

SEC. 15. Sections 4585, 4586, and 4587 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the assessment and collection of a hospital tax for seamen, are hereby repealed, and the expense of maintaining the Marine-Hospital Service shall hereafter be borne by the United States.

SEC. 16. All articles of foreign production needed, and actually withdrawn from bonded warehouses, for supplies of vessels engaged in the foreign trade, including the trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States, may be so withdrawn free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

SEC. 17. When a vessel is built in the United States for foreign account, wholly or partly of foreign materials on which import duties have been paid, there shall be allowed on such vessel, when exported, a drawback equal in amount to the duty paid on such materials, to be ascertained under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Ten per cent. of the amount of such drawback so allowed shall, however, be retained for the use of the United States by the collector paying the same.

SEC. 18. That the individual liability of a ship-owner incurred without his personal consent or privity shall be limited to the proportion of any or all debts and liabilities that his individual share of the vessel bears to the whole; and the aggregate liabilities of all the owners of a vessel on account of the same shall not exceed the value of such vessels and freight pending: Provided, That this provision shall not affect the liability of any owner incurred previous to the passage of this act, nor prevent any claimant from joining all the owners in one action; nor shall the same apply to wages due to persons employed by said ship-owners.

SEC. 19. That a master of a vessel in the foreign trade may engage a seaman at any port in the United States, in the manner provided by law, to serve on a voyage to any port, or for the round trip from and to the port of departure, or for a definite time, whatever the destination. The master of a vessel making regular and stated trips between the United States and a foreign country may engage a seaman for one or more round trips, or for a definite time, or on the return of said vessel to the United States may reship such seaman for another voyage in the same vessel, in the manner provided by law, without the payment of additional fees to any officer for such reshipment or re-engagement.

SEC. 20. That every master of a vessel in the foreign trade may engage any seaman at any port out of the United States, in the manner provided by law, to serve for one or more round trips from and to the port of departure, or for a definite time, whatever the destination; and the master of a vessel clearing from a port of the United States with one or more seamen engaged in a foreign port as herein provided shall not be required to reship in a port of the United States the seamen so engaged, or to give bond, as required by section 4576 of the Revised Statutes, to produce said seamen before a boarding officer on the return of said vessel to the United States.

SEC. 21. That the word "port" as used in sections 4178 and 4334 of the Revised Statutes, in reference to painting the name and port of every registered or licensed vessel on the stern of such vessel, shall be construed to mean either the port where the vessel is registered or enrolled, or the place in the same district where the vessel was built or where one or more of the owners reside.

SEC. 22. That until the provisions of section 1, chapter 376 of the laws of 1882, shall be made applicable to passengers coming into the United States by land carriage, said provisions shall not apply to passengers coming by vessels employed exclusively in the trade between the ports of the United States and the ports of the Dominion of Canada or the ports of Mexico.

SEC. 23. That section 3976 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, repealed; and that section 4009 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows, to wit:

"SEC. 4009. For transporting the mails of the United States between any port of the United States and any foreign port, or between ports of the Atlantic and ports in the Pacific, touching at any foreign port, a sum not exceeding $1 per mile, on the trip each way, of actual nautical miles traveled between terminal points, for each trip actually made; but such service shall be performed only under contract entered into by the Postmaster-General, after legal advertisement, with the lowest responsible bidder; and the aggregate amount to be expended for such service shall not exceed the gross revenues of the Post-Office Department of the United States on mail-matter sent to and received from foreign countries during the fiscal year next preceding the year in which such contracts are made, less the amount paid for transportation on foreign vessels, and the net amount paid foreign administrations for intermediary, territorial, and sea transit of such mails. The ships with which such contracts shall be made shall be ships of American registry only, and contracts shall be for a term of not less than four nor more than six years; and the general laws regulating the transportation of inland mails shall be applicable to such contracts, except as herein provided. And all vessels engaged in such contracts shall in time of war be subject to purchase or charter by the United States at reasonable rates; and all foreign vessels or sailing vessels carrying the mails of the United States may be allowed a sum not exceeding the sea-postage now allowed by law."

SEC. 24. That section 4203 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended by the addition thereto of the following:

"Provided, That this compensation shall not be less than the sea and the United States inland postages on the correspondence conveyed in such mails, nor greater than $1 a mile as above provided. The provisions of this section shall apply in the case of mails conveyed from the United States to foreign destinations only in the event that the Postmaster-General shall find it inexpedient or impracticable to contract for their conveyance under the terms and limitations of this act."

SEC. 25. That section 2966 of the Revised Statutes be amended by striking out the words "propelled in whole or in part by steam;" so that said section as amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 2966. When merchandise shall be imported into any port of the United States from any foreign country in vessels, and it shall appear by the bills of lading that the merchandise so imported is to be delivered immediately after the entry of the vessel, the collector of such port may take possession of such merchandise and deposit the same in bonded warehouse; and when it does not appear by the bills of lading that the merchandise so imported is to be immediately delivered, the collector of the customs may take possession of the same and deposit it in bonded warehouse, at the request of the owner, master, or consignee of the vessel, on three days' notice to such collector after the entry of the vessel."

SEC. 26. That section 2872 of the Revised Statutes be amended by adding thereto the following:

"When the license to unload between the setting and rising of the sun is granted to a sailing-vessel under this section, a fixed, uniform, and reasonable compensation may be allowed to the inspector or inspectors for service between the setting and rising of the sun, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, to be received by the collector from the master, owner, or consignee of the vessel, and to be paid by him to the inspector or inspectors."

SEC. 27. Whenever any fine, penalty, forfeiture, exaction, or charge arising under the laws relating to vessels or seamen has been paid to any collector of customs or consular officer, and application has been made within one year from such payment for the refunding or remission of the same, the Secretary of the Treasury, if on investigation he finds that such fine, penalty, forfeiture, exaction, or charge was illegally, improperly, or excessively imposed, shall have the power, either before or after the same has been covered into the Treasury, to refund so much of such fine, penalty, forfeiture, exaction, or charge as he may think proper, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 28. That section 4592 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4592. Fees shall be paid shipping commissioners as follows: Not exceeding the sum of $1 for each member of a crew engaged (except apprentices). For each boy apprenticed to the merchant service, including the indenture, $2. Fees payable on discharging crew, for each member of a crew discharged, 25 cents. Each shipping commissioner shall cause a scale of the fees payable to be prepared, and to be kept conspicuously placed in the shipping-office, and may refuse to proceed with any engagement or discharge unless the fees payable thereon are first paid."

SEC. 29. That section 4501 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4501. He shall appoint a commissioner for each port of entry, which is also a port of ocean navigation, and which, in his judgment, may require the same; such commissioner to be termed a shipping commissioner, and may, from time to time, remove from office any such commissioner whom he may have reason to believe does not properly perform his duty, and shall then provide for the proper performance of his duties until another person is duly appointed in his place. Shipping commissioners shall monthly render a full, exact, and itemized account of their receipts and expenditures to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall determine their compensation and shall from time to time determine the number and compensation of the clerks appointed by such commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, subject to the limitations now fixed by law. The Secretary of the Treasury shall regulate the mode of conducting business in the shipping offices to be established by the shipping commissioners as hereinafter provided, and shall have full and complete control over the same, subject to the provisions herein contained; and all expenditures by shipping commissioners shall be audited and adjusted in the Treasury Department, in the mode and manner provided for expenditures in the collection of customs."

SEC. 30. Before issuing any inspection certificate to any steamer, the collector or other chief officer of customs for the port or district shall demand and receive from the owners thereof, as a compensation for the inspection and examinations made for the year, the following sums, in addition to the fees for issuing enrollments and licenses now allowed by law, according to the tonnage of the vessel: For each steam vessel of one hundred tons or under, $10; and for each and every ton in excess of one hundred tons, 5 cents, in lieu of the fees now provided by law.

SEC. 31. All laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed; and this act shall take effect and be in force on and after July 1, 1884.

Mr. DAWES. I offer an additional section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes to amend the part to be inserted by adding what will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That all materials of foreign production, including old yellow metal, fit only for remanufacture, to be manufactured in this country into articles needed for and used in the construction, equipment, repairs, or supplies of American vessels, employed, or to be employed, exclusively in the foreign trade, including the trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States, may be withdrawn from bonded warehouses free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and if the duty shall have been already paid on such material so used, the same shall be refunded and repaid to the owner or owners of such vessels so using them, or to their legal representatives.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let me understand the amendment. Is it the purpose of the Senator from Maine to admit all materials free of duty?

Mr. FRYE. This amendment admits the merest raw material possible to be manufactured here into articles for a ship. It is different entirely from the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. This is the old section reported at the last Congress and passed by the Senate.

Mr. MCPHERSON. But with no provision admitting a ship free of duty?

Mr. FRYE. No.

Mr. DAWES. Only the raw material.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let the amendment be reported again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that that amendment lie on the table. I shall feel bound to discuss it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. DAWES called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. MORGAN. I now move the amendment which I offered to the Senate bill. It would come in properly between sections 15 and 16.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

That from and after the 1st day of January, 1885, vessels owned exclusively by citizens of the United States, or by corporations whose stockholders are all citizens of the United States, and not under any lien, incumbrance, or mortgage in favor of citizens or corporations of any foreign country, shall be admitted to registry under the laws of the United States in all respects upon the same terms and conditions as vessels built in the United States are admitted to such registry, upon the payment at the time of such registration of a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem on such vessels. And ships so imported and registered by American citizens may be employed in either the coastwise trade or in trade to foreign countries: Provided, That the right to import such vessels shall apply only to such vessels constructed in any foreign country as shall be built after the passage of this act.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECK (when his name was called). I withhold my vote until I see how the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] votes. I am paired with his colleague [Mr. HALE]. I decline to vote, not knowing how he would vote.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. Otherwise I should vote "yea." Not knowing how he would vote on this amendment, I withhold my vote.

Mr. VOORHEES (when Mr. GARLAND'S name was called). The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] is absent from the Chamber on account of sickness. He is paired, I believe, with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BECK. When my name was called I announced that I was paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and that I should withhold my vote, not knowing how he would vote; but as his colleague voted "nay" I presume he would vote "nay." I should have voted "yea" if at liberty to vote.

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is absent. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. My colleague would vote "nay" if present, and the Senator from Delaware would vote "yea."

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is absent and paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR] on all questions.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Brown,	Gibson,	Kenna,	Pendleton,
Call,	Groome,	Lamar,	Pugh,
Camden,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Maxey,	Vest.
Coke,	Jackson,	Morgan,

NAYS—34.

Aldrich,	Farley,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,
Allison,	Frye,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Bayard,	Gorman,	Miller of Cal.,	Sewell,
Blair,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sherman,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Voorhees,
Conger,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Williams,
Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Palmer,	Wilson.
Dawes,	Logan,	Platt,
Dolph,	McMillan,	Plumb,

ABSENT—23.

Anthony,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Sabin,
Beck,	Fair,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Butler,	George,	Lapham,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Pike,	Walker.
Colquitt,	Harrison,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be taken on all the amendments together if there be no objection. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. Before the title is permitted to stand I move to amend the title by adding the words "and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment to the title will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of Senate bill 1448, being the shipping bill.

Mr. FRYE. Now I move that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the pending bill, the Senate shipping bill, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I waive the motion I intended to make and yield to the Senator from Maine, who has a motion to make in connection with the subject before the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the President of the Senate appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate ask a conference with the House of Representatives upon the amendments proposed to House bill 2228.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me that is premature——

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine if that is not an unusual proceeding.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me that a motion of that kind is premature until the House acts on the Senate amendments. I have never, I think, observed such a motion made before.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HARRIS. It is that it is not in order to ask for a committee of conference until the House has had an opportunity to consider the amendments that the Senate has made. When the House has considered and disagreed, if it shall disagree, then it will be in order for the Senator from Maine to move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference; but until then it is certainly a most unusual proceeding, and I think in violation of every parliamentary usage if not of every parliamentary law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the motion of the Senator from Maine, as stated by the Chair, is in order. The question whether it is premature or unusual is not a question for the Chair to decide. The Chair thinks that the precedents under parliamentary practice warrant the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BECK. This is not a tariff bill. That was done last year when the House was not allowed to have the tariff bill as passed by the Senate read. I supposed they would be allowed to have our amendments to the shipping bill read. Outside of the tariff bill I did not know that such was to be the rule.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose it would be entirely in order to pass a Senate bill and send down with it a request for a committee of conference before the House had considered it at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has overruled the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. BECK. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair having overruled the point of order, the Senator from Kentucky appeals from the decision of the Chair, and on that question he asks for the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Chair to state the point of order. I have not heard the point of order stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the question. The bill having passed with amendments of the Senate agreed to, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has moved that the Senate ask a conference with the House of Representatives upon the amendments proposed by it to the bill of the House. The Chair stated the question. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] made the point of order that the motion of the Senator from Maine was not in order. The Chair has overruled the point of order upon the ground that it is within the principles and usages of parliamentary law, although the instances are rare, for either House to ask a conference with the other upon any subject that either House desires to consult with the other about. From that decision the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has appealed, and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair. Is there any precedent in the history of this body for demanding a committee of conference before the other House has had an opportunity to pass upon the amendments of the Senate and either concur in them or reject them?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not remember any precedents in this body. The Chair is informed at the desk that there is a precedent. The Chair has not looked up the precedents of this body, but the Chair thought it was clear, within the principles of parliamentary law as laid down in the books of parliamentary procedure, that such a motion was in order.

Mr. FRYE. Will the President of the Senate allow me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is debatable. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. I have known it to be done in the House within my own experience at least twenty times. It is a very usual proceeding the last ten or fifteen days of a session when you want to save time. Allow me to say that to-day there is no rule as between the two Houses touching committees of conference. There are no joint rules whatever. You are relegated entirely to what is ordinarily understood to be parliamentary law.

Mr. HOAR. Will my friend allow me to have read a portion of Jefferson's Manual?

Mr. FRYE. I have it right before me.

Mr. HOAR. Page 309 of our compilation.

Mr. FRYE. I have it right before me. I want to say something before that is read. The Senate proposed joint rules to the House, and the Senate committee of which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] is a member proposed this joint rule:

> When a bill, joint or concurrent resolution has passed one House and been amended in the other, it shall be in order for the amending House to at once insist on its amendment or amendments, and ask a conference thereon with the other House.

At once; and the settled and well-settled parliamentary rule is that at the first disagreement between the two Houses on any question a conference may be asked; and it has been asked in the English Parliament when there has been no disagreement.

Mr. BECK. That may be done in the English Parliament. It never was done in this body I think. How does the Senate insist on its amendments? Who does it insist with?

Mr. FRYE. The House sent the bill here with a "free-ship" clause in it. The Senate has stricken that out. The moment that is done there is shown a disagreement between the two Houses, and in Jefferson's Manual (we are relegated to that law now, there being no joint rules) it is said:

> It is on the occasion of amendments between the Houses that conferences are usually asked; but they may be asked in all cases of difference of opinion between the two Houses on matters depending between them. The request of a conference, however, must always be by the House which is possessed of the papers.

On page 307 a conference had been asked after the first reading of a bill, which is a singular instance.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to ask him what evidence he has that there are differences of opinion between the two Houses?

Mr. FRYE. Recorded.

Mr. HARRIS. By no means, I beg pardon of the Senator from Maine. From the fact that we have put amendments on their bill, the merit of those amendments may recommend them to the judgment of the House, and they may approve and adopt each and every one of them.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator must remember that we have stricken out of the bill five or six sections, and that on one of those sections the House made a very important record by yeas and nays. There certainly is a disagreement there.

Mr. HARRIS. I was not inclined myself to appeal from the decision of the Chair upon the question of order that I raised, and I believe I shall appeal now to the Senator from Kentucky to withdraw his appeal from that decision; but I shall appeal with a great deal more earnestness than I was inclined to press the question of order to the Senator from Maine to let this bill take the usual course; let it go to the House of Representatives; let them have an opportunity of concurring in the amendments of the Senate; let it come back to us with their concurrence or their non-concurrence, and then, in accordance with the usual parliamentary customs, we can insist upon our amendments and ask for a conference.

I am not sure that it is quite respectful for us to anticipate and assume that the House will non-concur in the deliberate judgment of the Senate in respect to these amendments. We do assume it if we adopt the motion of the Senator from Maine. We notify the House in advance that we assume that they non-concur; that they do differ with the Senate in respect to those amendments; and we anticipate their actions by, in advance, asking for a committee of conference.

I hope the Senator from Maine will not press his motion, but let the bill go to the House and let the House have an opportunity of acting upon it in the ordinary way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky asked the Chair if there are any precedents. The Chair stated that the Chair did not remember any. The Chair through the kindness of one of the clerks finds in the Senate Journal of the 1st of March, 1879, the sundry civil appropriation bill, so called, being under consideration, it being a House bill, was gone through with and a number of amendments were agreed to by the Senate. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read a third time, and then—

> Resolved, That it pass.
> Ordered, That the Secretary request the concurrence of the House of Representatives in the amendments.
> And,
> On motion of Mr. ANTHONY,
> Ordered, That the Senate also ask a conference on its amendments to the foregoing bill.
> Ordered, That the conferees be appointed by the presiding officer.

And they were appointed.

Mr. COCKRELL. There was no question made over it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On page 308 of the Senate Manual—and the same thing is found everywhere in books on parliamentary law, as the Chair believes—Jefferson in his Manual declares:

> A conference may be asked, before the House asking it has come to a resolution of disagreement, insisting or adhering.

Mr. SHERMAN. This question is so important and so new, as the agreement about debate does not extend to it and the bill has passed so far as we are concerned, I think we ought not to establish a precedent of this kind on such an important bill as to ask a conference on amendments that have not even been read in the other House. I am very much in favor of the bill and I have no doubt the House will take it up and act upon it promptly; at least I hope so; and if not, at a later day we may take up this question and ask for a conference. We can ask them for a conference at any stage. I hope the friends of the bill will not insist to-night at this hour on establishing a precedent that may be very dangerous in sending a bill to the other House and asking a committee of conference, sending amendments to a committee of conference that have never been even read in the House. It is a dangerous system of legislation, and I for one wish to vote against the motion.

My impression is that the resolution for a conference is subject to a single objection which would put it over until to-morrow; but as the presiding officer of this body has informally stated to me he thinks it is not a privileged question, I do not wish to raise the question because I do not wish to differ with him in opinion about it; but I hope it will be passed over at least until to-morrow, when the same motion can be made as now.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the Senate had better adjourn. I move to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I give way to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. He wishes to make a formal motion.

Mr. HOAR. I yielded to the Senator from Maine——

Mr. COCKRELL. This is the pending matter and must be disposed of.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Maine can renew it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine if he will allow his motion to stand over until to-morrow, or if he will withdraw it and renew it to-morrow?

Mr. FRYE. Certainly; so reasonable a request as that I shall not refuse.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to move to proceed to the consideration of the Utah bill; and I give notice that I will yield to-morrow for this matter to be disposed of.

Mr. FRYE. I understand the bill has passed. The only thing reserved is the question of a conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill can not go to the House until this question is disposed of.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Maine to withdraw the motion.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Ohio takes grounds against this and asks me to withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] yield to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]?

Mr. HOAR. I desire to remind the Senator from Maine that before he rose to make this motion, which takes up time, I was recognized by the Chair with a view of moving to take up the Utah bill.

Mr. FRYE. Was not the conference under consideration, this very question, so that——

Mr. HOAR. No; I yielded to the Senator. He asked me to yield, saying he wished to make another motion, which I did. Now I ask him to secure to me the right to make my motion to-night. If he will withdraw his motion and allow me to make my motion about the Utah bill, I shall yield to him to renew his motion to-morrow.

Mr. FRYE. I will do that.

Mr. DAWES. If my colleague intends to press the consideration of the Utah bill to-morrow, I desire to state that I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HOAR. I do not; but my colleague's motion to proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill, like a motion to adjourn or go into executive session, takes precedence. I move to proceed to the consideration of the Utah bill.

Mr. BECK. I hope it is not understood that my appeal is withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the question perfectly.

Mr. BECK. It is not withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please be in order.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, if I may be——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No motion is in order to take up any other business until the question of order raised by the Senator from Kentucky on an appeal from the decision of the Chair is disposed of.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] first addressed the Chair.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope I may be allowed to make a suggestion that I think will tend to solve this trouble. I am a friend of the shipping bill in the shape it passed the Senate, and I so voted all the way through. I believe the ruling of the Chair is correct. At the same time the Senator from Maine can accomplish his object in regard to a conference without forcing that issue upon the Senate at this time. While I believe the ruling of the Chair is correct and a committee of conference may be asked for at any time, yet it seems to me that the object the Senator from Maine has in view may be attained at any time. The House may concur in these amendments; we do not know; or they may not; and when they do not, then the Senator from Maine can ask for the conference which he is asking for now. It seems to me that it would not be asking too much to let this matter go over until we see whether the two Houses agree or not. I believe the Chair has ruled correctly, and I shall vote that way.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to reply?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. I have been asked by a great many Senators to let this go over. I believe in dealing frankly with the United States Senate. If this bill goes over without a request for a conference, the point of order is made to it promptly; no bill can possibly pass the Senate that some member of the House will not be opposed——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that any allusion to the proceedings of the House of Representatives is not in order.

Mr. FRYE. Then I will suppose a case. A point of order may be made against it in another place. If the point of order should be made against it in another place, that might carry it to the Committee of the Whole, and if it did carry it to the Committee of the Whole it would be buried so that it would not be reached in the next four——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must interrupt the Senator from Maine. The Chair thinks that that does not bring his observation within the rule.

Mr. FRYE. I am obliged to the Chair for allowing me to go so far as I did.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has the floor.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to state why I took the appeal, though I am not a parliamentarian and never was; and I am rather thankful I am not from the way things are looked at by different parliamentarians. The House has never seen the amendments of the Senate; it has never disagreed to them. We have passed things they have never read; and until the House bill which originated there, a bill affecting the revenue, which alone they have the right to originate, goes back to them and they see what we have done, we ought not to ask for a committee of conference or deprive the House of the right which the Senator from Maine fears they will exercise. After the House have seen what our amendments are, if they fail to agree to the amendments proposed by the Senate there is a disagreement between the two Houses on the amendments adopted by the Senate, and not till then does the disagreement arise. That is my opinion. I have no doubt from the extract read by the Chair that unanimous consent has been given more than once to allow an application for a committee of conference perhaps in the closing days of a session.

Mr. RANSOM. The date shows it was the 1st of March.

Mr. BECK. It was the 1st of March, and Congress adjourned on the 3d. Extraordinary exigencies may have arisen to induce unanimous consent to be given to allow an extraordinary motion to be made.

Mr. CONGER. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky if the bill goes to the House and it is not returned here, whether a committee of conference can be asked unless the bill is present, unless the bill is in the Senate; and if not, of course we never could have this motion made until the bill was returned here.

Mr. BECK. The House holding the papers has a right to ask for a conference; but suppose the House agrees to our amendments, what is the use of a committtee of conference?

Mr. FRYE. I will let this matter go over until to-morrow morning. I am entirely clear about the course which I proposed in every respect, but I will let it go over until to-morrow morning and then consider what shall be done. I may ask instead of a committee of conference unanimous consent for a yea-and-nay vote on the bill to-morrow morning.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill is already passed.

Mr. FRYE. I know, but I can ask it by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course you can by unanimous consent——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please address the Chair.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Missouri to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not on this question. We have heard quite enough of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri does not yield. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] for a formal matter connected with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri yields, and the motion to adjourn is withdrawn.

Mr. HAWLEY. I merely ask that an order be entered for printing the shipping bill as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks that an order be entered to print the shipping bill as amended. Is there objection? ["No objection."] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

UNIVERSITY OF MEDICINE.

Mr. CALL. I wish to state that I asked the courtesy of the Senate to submit some remarks on Senate bill 1044 at the conclusion of the morning hour to-day, but in deference to the wishes of the Senator from Maine who desired to get the shipping bill through the Senate I gave way. I renew that notice for to-morrow morning at the close of the routine morning business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I renew my motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 8, 1884.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. DOUGLAS F. FORREST, D. D., Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate joint resolution No. 82, in relation to ceremonies to be authorized upon the completion of the Washington Monument.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the shaft of the Washington Monument is approaching completion, and it is proper that it should be dedicated with appropriate ceremonies, calculated to perpetuate the fame of the illustrious man who was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen:" Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That a commission, to consist of five Senators appointed by the President of the Senate, eight Representatives, appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, three members of the Washington Monument Society, and the United States engineer in charge of the work, be, and the same is hereby, created, with full powers to make arrangements for—

First. The dedication of the monument to the name and memory of George Washington, by the President of the United States, with appropriate ceremonies.

Second. A procession from the monument to the Capitol, escorted by regular and volunteer corps, the Washington Monument Society, representatives of cities, States, and organizations which have contributed blocks of stone, and such bodies of citizens as may desire to appear.

Third. An oration in the Hall of the House of Representatives, on the 22d day of February, A. D. 1885, by the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, who delivered the oration at the laying of the corner-stone of the monument in 1848, with music by the Marine Band.

Fourth. Salutes of one hundred guns from the navy-yard, the artillery headquarters, and such men-of-war as can be anchored in the Potomac.

And such sum of money as may be necessary to defray the expenses incurred under the above provisions, not exceeding $2,500, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. DORSHEIMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HORACE H. BURBANK.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 6932) for the relief of Horace H. Burbank; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 581) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Leavenworth, Kans.

Mr. HENLEY. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SINGLETON. I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of the special order, the Congressional Library bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the order of the House in reference to that bill be read. I believe it excepts appropriation bills, and I desire to state that the Committee on Appropriations are ready to proceed with their bills.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order of the House made on the 17th of March last.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 1139, an act authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library, and that the same be made the special order in the House after the morning hour for Thursday, April 3, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, but not to interfere with revenue and appropriation bills and reports and consideration of bills from the Committee on Public Lands and prior orders of the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill referred to by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] is not a special order until after the morning hour, and can not be called up as such until then. The regular order has been called for, which is the call of committees for reports.

ETHAN A. SAWYERS.

Mr. WOLFORD. The bill (H. R. 3797) for the relief of Ethan A. Sawyers was reported yesterday adversely from the Committee on War Claims and laid on the table. I ask that the bill be placed on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

NATIONAL BANKS.

The SPEAKER proceeded to call the committees for reports.

Mr. BUCKNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6673) to enable national banking associations to increase their capital stock and to change their names or locations; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. The call of committees having commenced, is it in order now to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the special order—bills for the erection of public buildings?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that motion would not be in order now.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. The special order I have named takes precedence of the morning hour. The point of my inquiry was whether it would be in order to make that motion after the call of the committees has commenced?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it should have been done before the morning hour commenced. The privilege was not claimed at that time.

MISSOURI RIVER COMMISSION.

Mr. CLARDY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 6330) authorizing the appointment of a Missouri River Commission to superintend and carry into execution the plans for the improvement of the navigation of said river from its mouth to its headwaters; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

REVISION OF PATENT LAWS.

Mr. DARGAN, from the Committee on Patents, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6183) to provide for the revision, improvement, and amendment of the laws relating to patents for useful inventions; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SALARIES OF CAPITOL POLICE.

Mr. ERMENTROUT, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back the bill (H. R. 5881) fixing salaries of the Capitol police; when the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The call of committees was continued and concluded, no further reports being presented.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYSON. I call for the regular order, the unfinished business under consideration three weeks ago last Saturday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] calls up the unfinished business, which is the consideration of a bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ELLIS. I desire to give notice that if the House should refuse to consider the unfinished business or the special order I shall move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, my object being to call up for consideration the bill providing for the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition.

Mr. REED. I hope the gentleman will not undertake to bring that bill up as against the Library bill.

Mr. ELLIS. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, my object being to call up for consideration the bill I have indicated, and I desire to state——

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ELLIS. I desire to state that if anything is to be done in reference to this matter it must be done at once, as we are within seven months of the time fixed for the opening of the exposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] rose to a parliamentary inquiry, and will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to inquire whether the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] is in order.

The SPEAKER. It is in order, after the morning hour, to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to ask whether the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] has priority over the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] to take up unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under the rules of the House it is in order at any time after the expiration of the morning hour to move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. A majority of the House can of course determine whether it will do so or not.

Mr. HOLMAN. But, Mr. Speaker, is not the motion to proceed with the unfinished business entitled to priority?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I give notice that if the House should resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, I shall ask that the special order—bills for the construction of public buildings—be taken up.

Mr. SINGLETON. I desire to move, by way of substitute for the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana, that the House proceed to the consideration of the Library bill, which is a special order in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to direct the attention of the House to the fact that both of these special orders alluded to are subject to the priority of general appropriation bills, and that the Committee on Appropriations is ready to go on with the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, and after that with the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Public Lands Committee is also ready to go on with its business.

Mr. PAYSON. Is not the special order in reference to the Public Library bill subordinate to the business of the Public Lands Committee?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills or bills raising revenue is a privileged motion under the rules, and will have precedence over all special orders and special assignments heretofore made.

Mr. REED. The motion of the gentleman from Louisiana to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up the New Orleans exposition bill is not of that privileged character.

The SPEAKER. It is not, and the gentleman could not make a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering that bill. He simply made the motion generally to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and gave notice to the House of his purpose when it went into committee to call up the New Orleans exposition bill for consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. But if we go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has given notice that he will move to take up the appropriation bills instead.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations is willing to allow the gentleman from Louisiana to test the sense of the House as to the appropriation for the centennial exposition at New Orleans.

Mr. REED. I think we had better test the sense of the House as to the Library building first.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I think we should first consider the public-building bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. COX, of New York. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I only wish to say that if this appropriation for the Cotton Centennial Exposition at New Orleans is to be made it ought to be done at once, and for that reason I am willing to yield so the sense of the House may be tested on the question. But the Committee on Appropriations will insist, so far as it can, upon going on, immediately after that question has been disposed of, with the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill and the Army appropriation bill, both of which bills are ready and both in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And also the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. I wish to inquire what is the condition of the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] about the forfeiture of land grants.

Mr. PAYSON. Do you mean the condition of the bill or of the motion?

Mr. COX, of New York. The bill.

Mr. PAYSON. It is the unfinished, and debate is proceeding on it, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] being entitled to the floor.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is under discussion?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BLAND. Had we not better finish it before going to anything else?

Mr. PAYSON. I think so.

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope it will be finished, and I think the appropriation bills will keep for awhile.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was asking a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair when I was interrupted, and it is whether the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to proceed with the unfinished business, which is the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands providing for the forfeiture of the Oregon land grant, does not take precedence over all motions to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union except the motion to go in for the purpose of considering the general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does.

Mr. HOLMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois does take precedence?

The SPEAKER. It does; but still the question of consideration may be raised against it, and that is to be decided by the House.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask for a vote on my motion.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman raise the question of consideration against the unfinished business?

Mr. ELLIS. I do.

Mr. SINGLETON. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania waives his right to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of appropriation bills, then I call up for consideration at this time the special order, which is the Library building bill.

The SPEAKER. The first question is, Will the House proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business called up by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What is it?

Mr. ELLIS. I have raised the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 181) to declare forfeited certain land grants to aid in the construction of a railroad in Oregon, and to enforce the same by judicial proceedings.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will not that bill retain its proper place though we should not consider it now?

The SPEAKER. It will come up as unfinished business of course in its proper place.

Mr. BLAND. It is called up now.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman has already called it up for consideration. The question now is on the motion to proceed with the consideration of the unfinished business, being the forfeiture of the Oregon land grant.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 82.

Mr. BUDD. Yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. The public importance of this question induces me to demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, 26 members only voting in favor thereof.

So the motion to proceed with the unfinished business was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose a motion is now in order to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider a general appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are two appropriation bills pending in the committee, and I make that motion, that we now proceed with the public business.

Mr. ELLIS. I give notice that I shall raise the question of consideration with a view to taking up the bill to which I have already referred.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration is raised by the motion itself. The way to determine it is to vote the motion down.

Mr. SINGLETON. I raise the question of consideration at this time as to the priority of the special order.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done at this time by voting against the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the Speaker state the exact condition of the question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. ELLIS. I desire to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. That is involved in the motion itself. Those who are opposed to it can vote against the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ELLIS. Can I raise the question of consideration in the committee if the House determines to go into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. Not if the House determines to go into Committee of the Whole for that particular purpose. The committee would be controlled by the action of the House.

Mr. ELLIS. Then I ask the House to vote it down.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 71.

Mr. ELLIS. I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. No quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. ELLIS and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 98.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the interest of the public business I ask the yeas and nays on this motion.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not in the interest of the public business to demand the yeas and nays on such motions.

Mr. HOLMAN. I say it is, in preference to the consideration of bills for private greed.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, 17 members only voting in favor thereof.

So the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills was not agreed to.

Mr. SINGLETON. I now move that the House proceed to the consideration of the special order being the Library bill.

Mr. ELLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, my purpose being to ask the House to consider the bill which I have designated; but I desire to say to the House that I am heartily in favor of the Library bill——

Mr. REED. Then let us take it up for consideration.

Mr. ELLIS. And I shall support it with my whole heart. But I wish to say that if Congress intends to do anything in the matter of this exposition it must be done immediately.

Mr. REED. Let me ask if a motion for the special order does not take precedence here?

The SPEAKER. It does over a motion to go into Committee of the Whole, generally.

Mr. REED. That is the motion the gentleman from Louisiana made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the special order to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 1139, an act authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library, and that the same be made the special order in the House after the morning hour for Thursday, April 3, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, but not to interfere with revenue and appropriation bills and reports and consideration of bills from the Committee on Public Lands and prior orders of the House.

Mr. SINGLETON. Now I call up for consideration the bill for the erection of the Library which was made a special order more than a month ago.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I desire to antagonize that motion with the special order for the consideration of bills for the erection of public buildings.

Mr. RANDALL. Against what motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana raises the question of consideration against the special order, being the Library bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. But does not the motion of the gentleman from Indiana take precedence?

The SPEAKER. It does not; the order setting apart to-day for the consideration of the Library bill excepts only general appropriation bills——

Mr. RANDALL. "General" I do not think is included.

The SPEAKER. Yes; general appropriation bills.

Mr. CASSIDY. General appropriation bills and prior orders.

The SPEAKER. It excepts general appropriation bills and all prior orders of the House.

Mr. McCOID. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCOID. If a majority of the House want to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering public buildings, why not recognize the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to make that motion which would bring the House to a direct vote upon the question whether or not we should go into Committee of the Whole for that purpose?

The SPEAKER. The Chair might be disposed to do that if it were not for the rules of the House.

Mr. McCOID. I do not understand that any rule of the House interferes.

The SPEAKER. It does because the order under which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] proposes to proceed is expressly subject to all prior orders, and the order for the consideration of the Library bill is a prior order.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think there is any anxiety to get at the bills for public buildings.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] raises the question of consideration against the motion made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] to proceed with the special order.

Mr. ELLIS. So do I.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I wish to inquire whether under the special order for the consideration of bills for public buildings, which is subject to prior special orders, a question of consideration can be raised against the special order called up by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] has already raised the question of consideration, and the Chair has so stated it. The question is: Will the House now proceed to the consideration of the special order?

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that the "noes" had it, and that the House refused to consider the special order.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. REED. I call for a division on the question as to the consideration of the special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the call for a division is made too late.

Mr. REED. There was a misunderstanding.

The SPEAKER. The result has been announced.

Mr. REED. I called for a division as soon as I could. There was a misunderstanding, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. That may have been; but the Chair stated the question very distinctly.

Mr. REED. I called for a division as soon as I could get on my feet.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] claims there was a misunderstanding. The Chair stated the question very distinctly, took the vote, hesitated for a moment before announcing the result, and then made the announcement.

Mr. McMILLIN. And the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] took the floor and made another motion.

Mr. REED. I rose as soon as I heard the announcement. I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the call for a division is made too late.

Mr. SINGLETON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to consider the special order.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But the gentleman from Mississippi did not vote on the prevailing side.

The SPEAKER. There was no record of the vote, and the Chair is not supposed to know how the gentleman from Mississippi voted. Under such circumstances any member can make the motion.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I was recognized by the Chair and was proceeding to make the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the gentleman's motion.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. The point I desire to make is, that I can not be taken off my feet by a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] moves to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to consider the special order. The gentleman can now enter that motion, and the Chair will first put the question on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER].

Mr. SINGLETON. I am sure the friends of the Library bill did not understand the question as put to the House.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX, of New York. Would it be in order now for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] to renew his motion calling up the unfinished business, namely, the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands?

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending before the House, the motion made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER].

Mr. HOLMAN. But the question is as to the priority of the motions. My colleague [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills for public buildings. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] moves to take up the unfinished business reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The House has already refused to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 96.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SINGLETON. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the House has refused to consider the Library bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the Chair that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] should have an opportunity to test the sense of the House in regard to proceeding with the consideration of the bill he has indicated.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] is a privileged motion under the rules of the House. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to consider the special order which he called up.

Mr. ELLIS. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. ELLIS, there were—ayes 94, noes 46.

Mr. RICE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 12 members voting therefor.

So (further count not being called for) the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. ELLIS. I move now that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, my purpose being to ask the Committee of the Whole to consider the bill I have indicated, the bill (H. R. 5856) to provide for the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. ELLIS, the Speaker stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 34.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 147, noes 22.

ADMISSION OF INSANE INMATES TO SOLDIERS' HOME.

Before the result of the vote by tellers was announced,

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from Lieutenant-General Sheridan, president of the Board of Commissioners of the Soldiers' Home, recommending legislation authorizing the admission of insane inmates to the Soldiers' Home; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLERICAL FORCE, PENSION BUREAU.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting supplementary provisional estimate for an appropriation of $272,620 for additional clerical force in the Bureau of the Commissioner of Pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, in anticipation of the probable enactment of pension laws necessitating additional clerical labor; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2334) to release the American Baptist Home Mission Society from the conditions of the sale of the marine hospital building and grounds at Natchez, Miss.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER then announced the result of the vote as above stated on the motion of Mr. ELLIS that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DORSHEIMER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills upon the Calendar. General appropriation bills and revenue bills are first in order.

The first bill in order was the bill (H. R. 6770) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

Mr. ELLIS. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made to the consideration of this bill, the committee will rise and report the objection to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DORSHEIMER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had reached the bill (H. R. 6770) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, and objection had been made to its consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the objection made in Committee of the Whole is not sustained by the House, then I suppose when the House again resolves itself into Committee of the Whole it will proceed with the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. That bill is now ready.

Mr. COX, of New York. Then I hope we will take it up.

The SPEAKER. The question is: Will the House direct the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to proceed to consider the bill to which objection was made?

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 47, noes 88.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. COBB. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being only 12 in the affirmative—not one-fifth of the last vote.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not insist upon that point.

So (no further count being called for) the House refused to direct the Committee of the Whole House to proceed with the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. ELLIS. I desire before the Committee of the Whole resumes its session to ask unanimous consent of the House that the committee shall proceed with the consideration of the bill I have indicated.

Mr. KASSON. That is right.

Mr. ELLIS. I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. RANDALL. It is in the interest of public business.

Mr. HOLMAN. The consular and diplomatic appropriation bill is first in order, and the House has laid that aside for private business.

Mr. ELLIS. I denounce the idea that the bill I have indicated is private business.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, Mr. DORSHEIMER in the chair.

The next bill in order was the bill (H. R. 6861) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

Mr. ELLIS. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the Committee of the Whole will rise and report the objection to the House.

The Committee of the Whole accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DORSHEIMER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having reached the bill (H. R. 6861) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, objection was made to its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House direct the Committee of the Whole to proceed with the consideration of the Army appropriation bill?

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 30, noes 94.

Mr. BAGLEY. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ELLIS and Mr. BAGLEY were appointed.

Mr. BELFORD. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BELFORD. I represent a State in the council of this nation; I have a right to hear what is going on; but I can not hear even the announcement by the Speaker of the question upon which members are called to vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is whether the House will direct the Committee of the Whole to proceed with the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. BELFORD. I say that the Speaker ought to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to preserve order in the House so that members may understand what is going on.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 8; noes 88.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has voted. The tellers will continue the count, and gentlemen will please vote, so that the House may not find itself without a quorum.

The tellers resumed the count, and reported that there were—ayes 22, noes 143.

So the House refused to direct the Committee of the Whole to proceed with the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. ELLIS. I again appeal to gentlemen to allow the unmistakable will of the House to have its way, and that the House give unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole may proceed with the consideration of the bill which I have been endeavoring to reach.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] asks unanimous consent of the House that an order may be made directing the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up for consideration the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say that inasmuch as the House has refused to consider the two general appropriation bills on the Calendar I see no public object to be gained by further opposing the consideration of the bill which the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] desires to have considered, as against any other private measure on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the order is made.

The Committee of the Whole again resumed its session, Mr. DORSHEIMER in the chair.

WORLD'S INDUSTRIAL AND COTTON CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

The CHAIRMAN. The House has directed the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6856) to provide for the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition.

Whereas by the act of Congress entitled "An act to encourage the holding of a world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition in the year 1884," approved February 10, 1883, in the city of New Orleans, under the joint auspices of the United States, the National Cotton Planter's Association of America, and the said city of New Orleans, a world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition is to be held, universal in character, comprehending all arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine; and

Whereas by said act Congress declares that such exposition should be national and international in its character; and

Whereas under said act a board of management has been duly constituted and incorporated under the laws of the State of Louisiana, the members of which have been appointed by the President of the United States, upon recommendations made in the manner set forth in said act, and therefore are a duly qualified and commissioned United States board of management, clothed with full and adequate powers to perform any and all acts essential to the proper and necessary management of the affairs of the said World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition in the manner and form prescribed by said act, and duly authorized by the sanction of the Government of the United States to raise the capital necessary to carry into effect the provisions of said act of February 10, 1883; and

Whereas the President of the United States, in compliance with the terms and requirements of said act, has extended, in the name of the United States, a respectful and cordial invitation to the governments of other nations to be represented and take part in the said international exposition; and

Whereas many of the governments so invited have accepted such invitations, and are making preparations to embrace the courtesy so extended to them, thereby rendering proper arrangements for the coming ceremonies on the part of the United States a matter of honor and good faith; and

Whereas the preparations designed by the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, and in part executed by the board of management, are in accordance with the spirit of the act of Congress relating thereto, and are on a scale creditable to the Government and the people of the United States; and

Whereas all of the inducements which were involved and embodied in the request that Congress should grant the necessary aid to secure the success of the

Centennial Exposition of Philadelphia are re-enforced by the progress and development of many States and Territories that were unable to avail of the beneficent policy inaugurated by the Government at Philadelphia, but are now desirous of an equal opportunity to display their agricultural, commercial, and industrial resources to the world; and

Whereas the stockholders of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition have furnished to aid in the completion of the said enterprise $500,000, and have determined to increase the same to $1,000,000 by a vote of a majority of said stockholders, and are now engaged in obtaining the same, and the said city of New Orleans has, in its corporate capacity, contributed the sum of $100,000 to secure the success of this national and international undertaking; and it is but just and equable that the Government whose people are to be universally affected and benefited by the said contributions and donations of these said citizens should lend its aid and credit to the said enterprise in a specific form calculated to enhance its dignity and capacity to accomplish the objects in view, to wit, the development and prosperity of the United States, and also because the results of the centennial celebration of 1876 have illustrated the wisdom of such national action: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum $1,000,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the public Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a loan to the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, to be used and employed by the board of management thereof to augment and enhance the success of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition in such manner as said board of management may determine: Provided, That the said sum shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States on the drafts of the president and treasurer of the board of management of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, one-third of the amount immediately after the passage of this act and the remainder in four monthly payments thereafter: Provided further, That no greater amount shall be expended upon buildings, grounds, and preparations than the aggregate sum that may be secured by subscription to the capital stock by donations and the amount of the loan provided herein: And provided further, That in the distribution of the amounts that may remain in the treasury of the board of management after the payments of the current expenses of administration the amount of the appropriation hereinbefore made shall be paid in full into the Treasury of the United States before any dividend or percentage of profits shall be paid to the holders of said stock: Provided further, That the Government of the United States shall not, under any circumstances, be liable for any debt or obligation for the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, or its board of management, or any sum whatever in addition to the foregoing amount that may be appropriated by this act; and that adequate space for such exhibits as the Government of the United States may see proper to make at said exposition shall be furnished free of all charge: Provided further, That no sum shall be paid to the treasurer of the said exposition until after he and the president of the same shall have executed a bond, with good and solvent security, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the sum of $300,000, to sufficiently secure the safe-keeping and the faithful disbursement of the sum hereby appropriated, and for the faithful observance of this act with regard to the limitation of expenditures as fixed herein, and for the repayment to the Government of the United States of the surplus of proceeds of said exposition remaining after payment of the current expenses of administration, said repayment in no case to exceed the loan herein appropriated and provided for.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to make a speech on this bill; I am not physically able to do so. But I shall endeavor to give as clear an explanation of it as I can.

I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that I sincerely regretted to be under the necessity of antagonizing public business or the Library bill. I desire to see the public business proceed; and, furthermore, I desire to see a Library building appropriated for which shall be an honor and a credit to this Government.

But the bill now under consideration, in my judgment, can not wait. It is now within seven months of the opening of the doors of that exposition. It is contemplated by the board of management that if the Government shall follow the precedent set in 1876 when it gave to Philadelphia to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the nation——

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, I desire to say that Congress refused positively to give one cent to the exposition of 1876.

Mr. ELLIS. The Government made a loan.

Mr. KELLEY. But the gentleman said "gave." And that loan was only made upon the receipt of absolute security for the repayment of every cent so loaned, as our friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] can attest; for he made the clause a double-clinch. The Government of the United States was repaid every cent that it advanced. Hence I can not sit here and allow it to be said that anything was "given" by the Government of the United States toward that exposition. Philadelphia and Pennsylvania gave what was given.

Mr. ELLIS. I will accept the gentleman's modification, and say that in 1876 a loan was made by the Government of the United States to the city of Philadelphia. And this appropriation is a loan, only it is better secured as far as legislation can secure it, than the act which gave the loan to the Philadelphia exposition.

Mr. KELLEY. I wish to be understood. I do not mean to antagonize the proposition to give assistance to this exposition. I want to give it within the same limits that were provided in 1876; that is, that the Government shall have adequate security for the ultimate repayment of the money advanced. That is my position.

Mr. ELLIS. In regard to that matter, Mr. Chairman, I will say that this bill originally was drawn in the exact language of the bill which made a loan to the Philadelphia exposition, but when the subcommittee and the general committee came to review the bill they added to it provisions which make it more stringently binding upon the management of this exposition to return the loan to the Government.

Mr. BLAND. I will ask the gentleman whether the provision of this bill is in the same language as the appropriation in the case of Philadelphia. In that instance the money was only recovered by the Government upon suit in the Supreme Court. In other words, the city of Philadelphia refused to pay the money back to the Government and suit was instituted for it. And I remember that the gentleman from Pennsylvania argued on this floor that the Springer amendment did not reserve repayment of the money.

Mr. KELLEY. An amicable action was entered to determine whether it was a loan or a gift.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman claimed that it was a gift.

Mr. KELLEY. And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] appeared before the court to argue that it was a loan. It was so decided, and the money was paid immediately.

Mr. BLAND. The money was paid when you were compelled to pay it by the courts. The gentleman from Pennsylvania claimed that it was a gift even after the suit had been commenced.

Mr. KELLEY. When it was decided that it was a loan we paid it

Mr. BLAND. Certainly. Hence I want this bill a little different, so that there may be no quibbling about the matter hereafter.

Mr. KELLEY. We held, until the court decided otherwise, that the Government had intended to be generous enough to make a gift for that great national exposition, as Philadelphia and Pennsylvania did.

Mr. BLAND. Oh, yes; the gentleman from Pennsylvania claimed that it was a gift.

Mr. ELLIS. I will state to my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] that the language of this bill is so plain and explicit there can be no doubt of the character of this appropriation. I invite the gentleman's attention to the first four lines:

That the sum of $1,000,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the public Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a loan to the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, to be used, &c.

Thus there can be no difference of opinion as to the character of the appropriation which is made here.

Again, in another portion of the bill——

Mr. BLOUNT. I see it is a loan and not in the nature of a gift.

Mr. ELLIS. Yes, sir; I was pointing out as well as I could how the Committee on Appropriations had guarded this appropriation, fixing it positively and absolutely in the nature of a loan, and then giving it a lien on all the receipts of the exposition except simply the current expenses of administration, which in no case can exceed the sum of $500,000 for these current expenses—giving the Government a lien on all receipts, and further giving a bond of $300,000, not, as in the case of the Philadelphia exposition, merely for the purpose of seeing to the safe-keeping and proper disbursement of the funds, but actually conditioned for the return of the loan itself. Therefore the Government is secured first by a lien on all the receipts of the exposition itself except the mere current expenses of administration during the exposition, and secondly by this bond of $300,000 conditioned for its return.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me say that a year or two ago it was determined to hold an exposition of the manufacture and culture of cotton in the United States, under the supervision of the National Cotton Planters' Association, and fixing the city and State where it was to be held. An act of Congress was passed which made it a national and international exposition, in which the President was to make the proclamation of the exposition, and in which he was to extend an invitation to all the nations of the earth to come and participate therein. So, the board of management having complied with all the terms of the act, proclamation having been made, invitation extended, this exposition has grown and grown in its preparation until to-day it promises to be a far more national exposition than that of Philadelphia in 1876, and far more international than that great exposition in Philadelphia in 1876, because even now more than twenty foreign nations have accepted the invitation of the President and are preparing to come from civilized England and France away to the Orient, from Persia and Japan and China and Turkey—are demanding space, and preparing to come and make New Orleans the epitome of the whole world. It is more national because, I believe, in the Philadelphia centennial only about twenty-four States were represented, whereas up to this date all the States are taking space and preparing to come to the exposition, and nearly all the Territories have applied for space. As my friend suggests, even the Indian Territory is moving; and the colored people are taking steps to show their advancement since emancipation. It promises to be national and international in its character.

Mr. BLOUNT. I want to ask as a matter of information looking to the security of the loan what that security will be? I mean to say the language of the bill is that in the distribution of the amount that may remain in the treasury of the board of management after the payment of the current expenses of administration the amount of appropriation hereinbefore made shall be paid in full into the Treasury of the United States before any dividend or percentage of profits shall be paid to the holders of said stock. Now, assuming there will be no dividends, what security will the Government have? The current expenses as a matter of course will have to be paid. There will be some land and some buildings.

Mr. ELLIS. Yes; the building and land on which the exposition is built, and all the receipts from the exposition.

Mr. BLOUNT. I know the expenses of the exposition must be paid, and I was simply asking for information what security there is for a loan.

Mr. ELLIS. The receipts of the exposition.

Mr. BLOUNT. But suppose the exposition simply pays expenses, then of course there is nothing to come from that source. What else is there? Is there any other thing than the land and buildings?

Mr. ELLIS. And the bond.

Mr. BLOUNT. It simply provides for correct payment in accordance with the terms of the bill to the amount of $300,000.

Mr. ELLIS. If my friend from Georgia will look he will see the condition of the bond is to sufficiently secure the safe-keeping and faithful disbursement of the sum hereby appropriated, and for the faithful observance of this act with regard to the limitation of expenditures as fixed herein, and for the repayment to the Government of the United States.

Mr. BLOUNT. Of what?

Mr. ELLIS. Of the surplus of proceeds of said exposition remaining after payment of the current expenses of administration.

Mr. BLOUNT. But suppose there is no surplus proceeds. That is what I wish to get at.

Mr. MONEY. Will the gentleman from Louisiana yield to me?

Mr. ELLIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONEY. There are already over $700,000 cash subscribed to this enterprise, and that sum is being increased day by day. In addition, all the receipts of the exposition, gate-money, and so on, which must be greater than the expenses.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will allow me, I will ask the gentleman from Mississippi if $700,000 as a matter of fact has been paid in?

Mr. MONEY. I am told by the general director that is true.

Mr. ELLIS. Nearly $750,000 and increasing all the time.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then there will be $750,000 paid in, and as much as will hereafter be paid in, and the grounds——

Mr. MONEY. And all the receipts.

Mr. BLOUNT. But the receipts must first go to meet the expenditures.

Mr. MONEY. But it is only reasonable to suppose that they will be in excess of the expenditures.

Mr. ELLIS. I will state to the gentleman from Georgia that there is a competent board of management, and it is believed that the receipts will be very large, that they will be over $3,000,000. There will be, therefore, as security to the Government all of the net receipts of the exposition; there will be the royalties, and it is assumed by competent exposition experts that the royalties always pay the expenses of the management. It is estimated on the basis of the Philadelphia exposition, the current expenses of which were over $1,000,000, that in this case they will not exceed $500,000, because in the case of Philadelphia there was an expensive board of management, while in this exposition in Louisiana members of this board and many of these officials are serving absolutely without salaries. The exposition expenses will, therefore, be reduced to a minimum in that respect.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask—for I have not examined the bill and I do not know its exact terms—if there is anything contained in it that makes the buildings and grounds liable to forfeiture to the Government in case of failure to pay the expenses.

Mr. ELLIS. There is not.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then is there anything in the bill to secure the return to the Government of this money except on the assumption of the success of the exposition and the excess of receipts over the expenditures?

Mr. ELLIS. And the bond.

Mr. BLOUNT. But the bond, as I understand, is for another purpose, and I will read the provision of the bill in that respect:

Provided further, That no sum shall be paid to the treasurer of the said exposition until after he and the president of the same shall have executed a bond, with good and solvent security, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the sum of $300,000, to sufficiently secure the safe-keeping and the faithful disbursement of the sum hereby appropriated, and for the faithful observance of this act with regard to the limitation of expenditures as fixed herein, and for the repayment to the Government of the United States of the surplus of proceeds of said exposition remaining after payment of the current expenses of administration.

This bond is for the safe-keeping of the fund.

Now I ask my friend if the exposition fails to do more than pay expenses will the Government get anything back?

Mr. ELLIS. It will get the amount of the bond and the buildings by operation of law.

Mr. BLOUNT. Taking the terms and the amount of the bond, will my friend tell me under what provision of the bill or of the bond the Government will get paid?

Mr. ELLIS. By the last provision of the bill, providing—

And for the repayment to the Government of the United States of the surplus of proceeds of said exposition remaining after payment of the current expenses of administration.

Mr. BLOUNT. But suppose that the exposition is unsuccessful—that is what I want to get at—and that there was no surplus, what would then be the condition of the Government?

Mr. ELLIS. I can not answer that question. I can not say that anything but the buildings would remain subject to the lien of the Government. But it is hardly to be supposed that there would be such a failure as the gentleman contemplates in his question. For when the railroads of this country, I believe thirty-five of the great lines of railroads, have reduced their passage fare to one-half a cent in some instances, and in some to three-fourths of a cent per mile going and coming; when the exposition is held upon the banks of a stream where fifteen or twenty thousand miles of navigable waters flow, it is hardly possible to imagine that there could be a failure. And especially is this true when we remember that twenty great States of this Union and six Territories are making the most magnificent preparations to come and participate in it; and in many of the States and in the counties they are forming county and State organizations to take part in that exposition; and since there is a great popular appreciation of the necessity for this, and much public interest manifested in it, and since the people of the city of New Orleans have subscribed so largely, it is hardly to be supposed that it can be a failure.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is all very well, but I will say to my friend from Louisiana it is simply argumentative. Now I was simply asking him as to the plain terms of the bill. I would ask if there is any objection. But first, he says, though I do not find the provision, that the buildings and grounds would be liable——

Mr. ELLIS. No, not the grounds.

Mr. BLOUNT. I thought the grounds would also be liable.

Mr. ELLIS. No; the grounds, I will state to my friend from Georgia, belong to the city of New Orleans. It is one of the public parks of the city, which has been granted for the use of this exposition free of charge.

Mr. BLOUNT. The buildings would then have to be paid for out of the current expenses?

Mr. ELLIS. No; the current expenses are the mere expense of administration between the time that the gates open and close.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then the only security that the Government would have for indemnification in the event of the unsuccessful termination of the affair and its failure to pay expenses would be by removing from the ground the buildings?

Mr. ELLIS. It would have that right by the operation of law.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then that is the only actual security the Government has, and the mere conjecture that the exposition will pay?

Mr. ELLIS. And the bond.

Mr. BLOUNT. But the bond provides simply for the payment of the surplus of the proceeds.

Mr. ELLIS. After the expenses of current administration.

Mr. BLOUNT. So I understand it.

Mr. ELLIS. These, the gentleman will understand, are expenses which must be paid from day to day. The very nature of the expenditures provided for as administrative expenditures require them to be paid from day to day.

Mr. BLOUNT. But that, as I understand it, is an additional security providing there is a profit on the affair. Now what are the probable sources from which the Government can secure this fund? What is this guarantee?

Mr. ELLIS. It must depend upon the receipts. There are the gross receipts from which the current expenses of administration are to be deducted; and then the Government has this lien upon the surplus receipts, with the buildings, and upon the $300,000 bond, and the royalty.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the money shall be properly expended in accordance with the terms of the appropriation and there shall be no net profit after the payment of current expenses, then there will be no liability under this bond at all.

Mr. ELLIS. Certainly not. I have been so much interrupted that I scarcely know where to gather up the thread of my statement.

Mr. BLOUNT. Before the gentleman proceeds I will say that a gentleman beside me suggests there is no provision giving the Government a lien in reference to buildings. I suppose there will be no objection to an amendment that would be satisfactory on that point.

Mr. ELLIS. Of course we will not object to that. We want to secure the Government. We believe the Government is amply secured. But any amendment the committee see fit to impose to secure the Government I will accept with pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Louisiana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ELLIS. With pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. I have listened to the colloquy between the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] and on the precise point of that colloquy I wish to state my understanding. The buildings at Philadelphia, if I recollect aright, cost in round numbers about $5,000,000. This bill provides for a cheaper plan of buildings at New Orleans.

Mr. ELLIS. A great deal cheaper.

Mr. CANNON. In other words, there shall not go into buildings and preparations an amount exceeding the million dollars we loan and the amount of $750,000, which it is hoped will be swelled to a million, which private individuals shall subscribe; so that your exposition starts with an expenditure for buildings and preparations of not exceeding $2,000,000 at the outset.

Mr. ELLIS. One million seven hundred and fifty thousand.

Mr. CANNON. One million seven hundred and fifty thousand; being over $3,000,000 less than was expended on buildings at Philadelphia.

Mr. ELLIS. I have the comparative table, which I can send to my friend if he desires it.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that is one security that there is not going to be a great debt incurred at New Orleans which would eat up the receipts. Now, as I understand it this bill provides and the bond secures that that shall be the case. It further provides and the bond further secures that after the daily current expenses of carrying on this exposition are taken out of the receipts then the whole of the balance shall be devoted first to reimbursement of the Government before these private individuals who shall have subscribed from three-quarters of a million to a million get one cent of dividend.

Mr. ELLIS. That is it.

Mr. CANNON. The buildings belong to this corporation, as I understand it.

Mr. BLAND. I suggest that they are to be counted as part of the expenses.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; not at all. They are part of the assets of the corporation. The bill makes a lien on them and the bond secures exactly this.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield?

Mr. ELLIS. I yield. I want all this to be fully ventilated.

Mr. HOPKINS. I suggest that it should not be taken out of the time of the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. The bill makes this provision:

Provided further, That no greater amount shall be expended upon buildings, grounds, and preparations than the aggregate sum that may be secured by subscription to the capital stock, by donations, and the amount of the loan provided herein.

Mr. ELLIS. That is in order to keep down the debt; in order that there may be no debt.

Mr. BLOUNT. Hear me, if you please. The gentleman declares the Government will have a lien on the buildings to secure itself for the amount of this loan. But there is nothing in the language that requires any given amount of subscriptions to be placed in this building. It may be $10,000 or it may be $5,000, with the balance made up out of this Government appropriation or Government loan, as you see fit to call it; and therefore there would not be much security in that.

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman from Georgia I have to say that it appeared to the Committee on Appropriations that already there had been subscribed, and in very considerable part paid and still being paid, about three-quarters of a million of dollars, which is being expended now in the purchase of material that is going into the building or the grounds, and into improvements there. The committee, desiring to guard the interests of the Government and to prevent the recurrence of the condition of affairs that happened at Philadelphia, namely, the squandering of great amounts in expensive buildings, to guard against the expenditure, say, of four or five million dollars, provides in this bill that no more than the one million which we loan and the amount which had been subscribed and might be donated should go into these buildings; and then the bill, further to secure that no more than that amount should be expended, and that the whole assets of this corporation after the current expenses from day to day are paid shall be held sacred to pay this $1,000,000 to the Government, provides for a bond which is conditioned as the act states and the setting apart of the surplus after the payment of current expenses to indemnify the Government. So that if you read the language which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has read and then read the last proviso in regard to the bond and the conditions of the whole act, I think any man will see there is no question but what this money will be returned out of the property and proceeds of the exposition to reimburse the Government.

Mr. BLOUNT. How much money has been paid in subscriptions?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Louisiana would know better as to that than I do. We were informed in round numbers that three-quarters of a million had been subscribed. Major Burke, who was before us, and is vouched for as a reputable man, so informed us.

Mr. ELLIS. Over $650,000 has been paid. It is expected the State will make an appropriation of not less than $50,000, the governor favoring $100,000. They will raise in Louisiana alone the sum of $750,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me again?

Mr. ELLIS. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I presume the chief item of expense will be in the matter of buildings?

Mr. ELLIS. Certainly. What we want to do is to afford all the space demanded. Already the main building, which will be the largest building ever erected, is being now constructed. Large as it is, giving, I believe, 1,750,000 square feet of exhibition room, yet over 2,000,000 feet of exhibition room has already been demanded, demanded by foreign governments and foreign inventors and by States and representatives from States. I believe that in the Philadelphia exhibition individual exhibitors asked for only 700,000 square feet of space. In this one individual exhibitors from Maine to California, from Michigan down to the Gulf, have already asked for 900,000 feet of exhibit room.

Mr. WAIT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. ELLIS. With great pleasure.

Mr. WAIT. Was this Cotton Planters' Association chartered by the State of Louisiana?

Mr. ELLIS. It was chartered under the laws of the State of Mississippi.

Mr. DUNN. But that is not this association.

Mr. ELLIS. No, that is not this one. This board of management is incorporated under the laws of the State of Louisiana.

Mr. WAIT. That is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. ELLIS. It was appointed by the President of the United States and incorporated under the laws of the State of Louisiana.

Mr. WAIT. It is a corporation created by the laws of your own State, and capable, by the power given to it by your own Legislature, of controlling this property and, if necessary, pledging it in some way for the repayment of this loan by the Government?

Mr. ELLIS. Unquestionably.

Mr. WAIT. I had heard that the only corporation created was the one incorporated by the State of Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. That one has nothing to do with the direction of this affair.

Mr. WAIT. That is what I wanted to know. I had heard it represented the other way, and I wanted the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] to explain it so that all could understand it.

Mr. ELLIS. I have the act of incorporation here and can read it.

Mr. WAIT. No; your statement is sufficient.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] yield to me for a minute or two?

Mr. ELLIS. I will do so.

Mr. KELLEY. I find it impossible to longer remain in the Hall and participate in the business of the House. Before I leave I desire to say that while I made a protest against the assertion that the Government had made a gift to the exposition of 1876, I am heartily in favor of the Government aiding this exposition without scrutinizing too closely the possibility of encountering a direct financial loss. An exhibition such as is proposed to be held at New Orleans, at which shall assemble the world in its best mechanical and commercial power, and in which convocation the American people shall be the active and predominant element, will pay the American people at a minimum estimate $100 for every dollar that may be lost, even if the Government shall never receive back one dollar it may loan it.

No single event in the history of our country other than a great national military movement or result has ever blessed the American people as did the exhibition of 1876 at Philadelphia. And in leaving the floor I cry, Godspeed to the cotton exhibition of America to be held at New Orleans! [Applause.]

Mr. ELLIS. I thank the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. KELLEY] for his speech. I was going on to say that at the family gathering in 1876 there were from fifteen to eighteen States which from causes needless to refer to here were unable to go to the common cradle of the nation. Those States since that time have made wonderful progress, and some of the new States of the West and some of the Territories which were unable to go to Philadelphia have made the most wonderful progress since that time.

The Republic of Mexico made scarcely any exhibit there, but to-day her liberalized government is making the most tremendous preparations to come to the exposition at New Orleans, having asked for over 200,000 feet of exhibition space and having appropriated $200,000 for that purpose. She will send a regiment of troops with a navy band, will rob her mines and send the most magnificent exhibition of ores and of her great material wealth that has ever been seen. So with Central America; so with British Honduras. The British Government has not even borne the notice of the invitation down to British Honduras, but they found it out, and of themselves have opened a correspondence with the management of the exhibition. To-day British Honduras is acting, and so are all the States of Central America and South America.

I want to say that we have no ships, no merchant marine to bear the flag and the evidences of the greatness of this country to those nations. But we have founded an exhibition down in that semi-tropical land, to be held at a time when every one will wish to visit it, where those people will come, and where they can be impressed as they never were before with the magnificence, the power, and the opulence of this great country of ours. Not only can they be impresssed with what we have and what we make, but with what we are.

And this occasion will give to Americans themselves an insight into the material greatness of a land far richer than India, whose monopolized commerce has made England what she is, and whose commerce every voice of interest demands that we should leave no stone unturned to monopolize for ourselves.

Moreover, it will put the seal on the perfect reconciliation of the nation. Every State coming there, every Territory represented, not a star missing from the flag, all the people of all the sections mingling there together, will bring our people face to face with each other and set the seal on our renewed Union.

Therefore I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the House vote this loan, inasmuch as it will enable the board of management to carry out their purpose of holding a great international exposition, will enable them to more than double the capacity of the exposition, enable them to add new and interesting departments which with their present means they can not do, and to make an exposition worthy of the greatness and grandeur of this country.

I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill. I believe that the State I in part represent on this floor is in sympathy with this legislation. I have received telegrams from some of the leading men of my State, including the old "war governor," Samuel J. Kirkwood, urging this measure upon my attention; and I was gratified to see that he who had armed and sent into the South during the civil war nearly 80,000 men is now urging me to seek on this floor such legislation as will enable the citizens of that State to go South with the evidences of their industry and with the plumage of peace.

That is in keeping with my own feelings. I believe, Mr. Chairman, we need an antidote for legislation; that we need an antidote for conventions; that we need an antidote for political conflicts. And we have no safer antidote that these great commercial gatherings where the people can exchange their industries and compare notes as to their advancement in that regard.

I am heartily in sympathy with such action as will bring every part of this country into juxtaposition—hand to hand, heart to heart, and in closer bond of sympathy. [Applause.] In my own State, Mr. Chairman, we have by the action of our Legislature appointed commissioners to co-operate in this great work. One of those commissioners, now in this city urging favorable action on this bill, tells me that we shall have at this exhibition a richer representation of the industries of Iowa than we had at the great Centennial in 1876. More than 10,000 of our industrious people will visit New Orleans during this exposition. Our railroads have put down rates lower than ever before, in order to afford facilities for our people. We shall have represented there our educational industries, our horticultural industries, our agricultural industries, and our great mineral industries, and, more than all, we shall show in the city of New Orleans that Iowa is a manufacturing State as well as a great agricultural State. [Applause.] We want greater room at that exhibition than we can have unless aid be furnished beyond what the people there are able to expend. Iowa is knocking at the doors of Congress to-day; and I am but voicing her feeling when I ask that the Government shall loan from its vast surplus in the Treasury enough to put this great exposition grandly, solidly, and successfully upon its feet. [Applause.]

Mr. ELLIS. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, one of the first votes which I gave after becoming a member of this House was for the appropriation of $1,500,000 to aid in the celebration of our National Centennial at Philadelphia. When I gave that vote I had grave doubts as to the propriety of such legislation, but subsequent reflection upon the subject has resulted in the conviction that my vote on that occasion was an eminently proper one, and that the measure for which it was cast resulted in the end in greater good than any one of similar character that has become a law since that time.

Many gentlemen insisted then that our proposed action in loaning the credit of the Government to the furtherance of the enterprising custom was without constitutional authority, and that Congress had no power to use either the public money or public credit except for the maintenance and support of the Government, and I hear the same argument against the measure now before the committee. I shall not undertake now to discuss this question. That has already been done by several gentlemen more learned in the intricacies of constitutional law than I am, and others will doubtless follow me upon the same subject. I may say, however, that no such constitutional objections have been presented to the passage of this bill as calls upon me, in my judgment, to overlook the great practical results that are expected to be accomplished by its enactment into a law.

I will say further, however, that ordinarily I am opposed to all legislation of this character, not so much because I think it is forbidden by the Constitution as for the reason that I think the policy of it is a bad one, and is calculated to encourage too frequent appeals to the Federal Government for aid in the furtherance of enterprises not wholly of a national character. If I believed that this measure was being urged for the purpose of promoting any private undertaking or for a mere local benefit I would not support it, but believing as I do that it is one eminently calculated to advance the interests of the whole country I feel it my duty to assist in its passage.

This exposition is not only intended to bring prominently forward the manufacturing, mechanical, and agricultural interests of every section, but to call special attention to the greatest and most valuable of all our agricultural products, and which contributes more to our national wealth than any other single commodity which enters into our commerce.

Our exportations for last year amounted to about $650,000,000, two hundred and thirty millions of which, in round numbers, or more than one-third of the whole amount, was of cotton and cotton goods. We raised the last year nearly seven millions of bales of cotton, worth in its raw state more than $350,000,000. On this single article there is annually collected under the operations of our tariff laws and paid into the Federal Treasury more than $12,000,000, and altogether, in one way and another, it contributes at least $900,000,000 every year to our public wealth.

Gentlemen who oppose this measure seem forgetful of the fact that Congress has time and again voted special appropriations of money, not credit, for the development of particular interests, and that many of them have as often voted for these appropriations. We have made appropriations annually for many years past for the purposes of fish-culture, rare plants, trees, &c., as also for the introduction of tea and other plants from other countries into this one. Why, then, should we hesitate to aid in an effort to increase the culture and develop the real value of this the richest agricultural product of our whole country?

The cultivation of cotton, while it extends in some measure over eleven of the Southern States, is being abandoned on the higher tablelands and being every year concentrated more and more in the region bordering upon the lowlands of the Mississippi Valley and along the tributaries which flow into that great stream from the east and the west all the way from the mouth of the Ohio to the seacoast of the South. But in this region there are 9,000,000 of acres of land and perhaps more lying within the finest cotton region in the world which can not be cultivated because of its annual overflow from the different streams which flow through it. If these fertile acres were protected from the flood they would soon be cultivated in cotton, and our annual product of that staple instead of being between six and seven million bales per annum would soon amount to twice that number.

Let the world once know the value of these lands and capital will soon be invested in their reclamation and culture. Representatives from all the civilized nations of the world will be at New Orleans, the great American market for the product of this region, and will carry back to their own country accounts of its wealth and extent. Nobody can foretell the vast results that may flow from this cotton exposition; not to Louisiana alone, nor the cotton States, but to the entire country; for everything which promotes directly the prosperity of any section carries in the end its benefits to all. I live in a city which is reckoned, I believe, fourth among the great cotton markets of the world, but I do not expect this measure to benefit Memphis more than it will Boston, New York, or any other great commercial city of the country.

I intended to have said some things which have been so well and eloquently said by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], but he has rendered it unnecessary for me to do so, and the little time yielded me by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] having expired, I must close.

Mr. ELLIS. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. SUMNER].

Mr. SUMNER, of California. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. How much time was yielded to the gentleman from California?

Mr. ELLIS. Two minutes.

Mr. SUMNER, of California. Time enough and to spare. Mr. Chairman, an apparently ineffectual effort has been made recently to raise a fund sufficient to construct buildings adequate for a world's fair exhibition in the metropolis of the Pacific coast. In view of the probable failure of this attempt to provide for an international exhibition in our State, many of my constituents have written to me urging me to support and advocate the passage of an appropriation for the object named in this bill.

I am informed that at this tangent point in our country our people engaged in various manufacturing and other industries will combine to send several trains filled with articles showing our advance and superiority in many departments of industry and production. At New Orleans California can with convenience meet her sister Commonwealths in generous comparison and rivalry. And who can tell how many will thus be induced to visit and to settle in our midst? So it is urged that this exhibition would prove to be of special interest and benefit to California, to say nothing of the information and entertainment given directly to thousands who will never be so fortunate as to see our favored borders.

As I am clear in my opinion that this is a constitutional proposition, I do not hesitate, but cheerfully and eagerly improve this two-minute opportunity to commend the bill.

Mr. ELLIS rose.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Louisiana how much time is given for debate. [Cries of "Vote!"] I should like to have five minutes myself.

Mr. ELLIS. The gentleman can have it with pleasure. I promised to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] for five minutes.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state briefly the reasons why I can not support this measure. I can find no warrant whatever for it in the Constitution. If we are to vote this large amount of money for the exposition of the cotton interest, we may be called on with greater reason to vote a larger sum for an exposition of the hay interest, which is a large interest and far more national from the fact it is produced in every part of the country. There is nothing which can be urged in favor of this gift which can not be urged with greater force in favor of a corn exposition, or a wheat exposition, or an iron exposition, or an ore exposition, or indeed for an exposition of any interest in the country which may see fit to come here and ask us to take money out of the Treasury for such a purpose.

Our Government is founded on the theory it is limited and that its limitations are stated in the Constitution of the United States. There is no reason which may be urged in favor of this loan which can not be urged with greater force in favor of an exposition for any interest of equal amount and as national in its importance as this. The truth is we may as well roll up our Constitution and acknowledge before the world we have departed from it and propose no longer to make it our guide, that is if we shall proceed in granting money in this sort of way out of the Treasury of the United States.

I hope, therefore, this amount of money will not be granted. If it is to be granted, let it be granted in its proper name. Let it be granted as a reconciliation fund to the people of the Southern States. I deny there is any——

Mr. DUNN. We do not charge anything.

Mr. POTTER. If it is necessary to grant million after million in violation of our Constitution for the purpose of reconciliation, let that be understood. Let us understand our policy, and not disguise it under such a subterfuge as this.

Cotton, of course, is a large product in the United States, but if you are to hold an exposition of the manufactures of cotton New Orleans is not the place for it. It would be far better in Massachusetts or in some place in New England.

Mr. DUNN. Or New York?

Mr. POTTER. Yes, or New York. But, disguise it as you will, this is merely to take money out of the Treasury of the United States without constitutional warrant and under subterfuge and false pretense.

Mr. ELLIS. I move the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope we may have debate go on.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope reasonable debate will be allowed.

Mr. ELLIS's motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DORSHEIMER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6856) to provide for the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 3967) for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle, and to provide means for the suppression and extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals, and asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. MILLER, of New York, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. WILLIAMS as conferees on its part.

It further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendment to the bill (H. R. 1015) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. SEWELL, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL as conferees on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (S. 241) to repeal section 8 of an act entitled "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," approved June 15, 1880;

A bill (S. 258) donating a part of the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, Ark., to the city of Fort Smith, for the use and benefit of the free public schools thereof, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 269) for the relief of M. P. Jones;

A bill (S. 621) for the relief of William L. White;

A bill (S. 677) for the relief of the estates of James Vance and William Vance; and

A bill (S. 975) for the relief of Z. J. Boyles, administrator of the estate of Marcus Radich, deceased.

LOSS OF CLOTHING BY ENLISTED MEN.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the commander of the post at Fort Steele, Dakota Territory, with report of proceedings of board of survey of the loss of clothing by enlisted men, resulting from a recent fire, and recommending gratuitous issues of clothing in place of that destroyed; which was referred to the Committtee on Military Affairs.

PENSION AGENTS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to resolutions of the House, copies of order, correspondence, &c., relating to irregular practices on the part of attorneys before the Pension Office; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WORLD'S INDUSTRIAL AND COTTON CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. ELLIS. I move that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the further consideration of the bill making an appropriation to provide for the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition; and pending that motion I move that all general debate be limited to one hour, forty minutes to be controlled by the opponents of the bill and twenty minutes by those in favor of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman from Louisiana will allow me I would suggest to him that he make it two hours in place of one, inasmuch as this is quite an important measure.

Mr. ELLIS. I have no disposition to choke off anybody who wishes to debate this question, and I will accept the modification of the gentleman from Indiana to make it two hours—one-half to be consumed by those in favor of, and one-half in opposition to the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as a large part of the time already consumed in the debate has been occupied by those in favor of the bill, that division of time would be hardly fair.

Mr. ELLIS. I am giving the gentleman one-half of the time in opposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are members of the Committee on Appropriations who desire to be heard on this bill, and the usual practice has been to allow individual members of the committee an opportunity for a fair hearing. I concede that the body of the committee concurred, or that this bill comes here with the consent of a majority of the committee; but the minority may desire to express its views upon the question, and I suggest, therefore, in view of the fact that it is yet early in the day, that the gentleman from Louisiana might safely fix the time at two hours and a half, and allow those in opposition to occupy in addition to one hour as much of the remaining half-hour as has been consumed already in favor of the bill.

Mr. ELLIS. I think two hours is enough.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana now moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill the title of which has been stated; and pending that, he moves that general debate upon the bill be limited to two hours, to be equally divided between the advocates and opponents of the bill.

Mr. ELLIS. I will control the time in favor of the bill, and allow the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to control the time in opposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must object to that arrangement. I do not think it is at all fair or usual that the minority of the Committee on Appropriations should be deprived of an opportunity of being heard upon a measure of this kind. The gentleman from Louisiana proposes to take for the majority of the committee the entire time allowed for debate, a thing I have never known here before.

Mr. ELLIS. I want to be perfectly fair in this respect, and I am sure I desire that the gentleman from Indiana shall have an opportunity of being heard.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let the time be equally divided between the two sides of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed that the time was to be divided equally between those in favor and those against the proposition.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time that the gentleman from Indiana to my knowledge ever wanted to consume the time of the House needlessly; and that being the case, I will indulge him and make the time two hours and a half, one hour and a half to be consumed by those in opposition to the bill and one hour in favor of it. I am sure that will be a fair division of the time.

Mr. RANDALL. That will take your bill over to-day, and you had better finish it during the day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana. The gentleman now moves that general debate be limited to two hours and a half; one hour and a half of which is to be controlled by the opponents of the bill, and one hour by those in support of it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to ask if an amendment is now in order?

The SPEAKER. Not to the bill; that is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLANCHARD. An amendment to the motion to limit the debate?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move, then, to amend the motion by providing that the debate be limited to one hour, one-half of which is to be consumed by those who are opposed to, and one-half by those in favor of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am sure the gentleman in charge of this bill desires to be perfectly fair in the discussion of it. Now the larger part of the time already consumed has been consumed in advocacy of the bill. That being the case, to rise and move now to limit the debate to an hour, and that time to be equally divided between the friends and opponents of the bill, must strike any one as an unfair proposition. We are here for debate and discussion, to deliberate upon the bill, and I know the gentleman from Louisiana will not consent to the amendment of his colleague, but will insist upon his motion to limit the debate to two and one-half hours, which seems to be a fair and equitable division of the time.

Mr. ELLIS. Would two hours suit the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to that; but when the Centennial bill was here my recollection is that we debated it for several days.

Mr. HARDEMAN. Would it be in order to move a further amendment by deducting from the time allowed in opposition to the bill the time consumed by gentlemen in making objections to taking it up?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I wish to move an amendment to the amendment, that the debate be limited to thirty minutes, to be apportioned equally between those who favor and those who oppose the bill. If the Speaker will permit me to say, it is senseless to talk about discussing this measure with the view of changing any member's vote. We can vote as intelligently at the expiration of half an hour or at the present time as we could after a discussion of two hours more upon it. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Would my colleague prefer to cut off debate entirely upon an appropriation of $1,000,000? Does he object to debate?

Mr. CANNON. It is subject to the five-minute debate afterward.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 104, noes 28.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the adoption of the amendment as amended.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask consent that the time in opposition to the bill be assigned to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the Committee on Appropriations that at least the minority of the committee shall have a moment of the time to be devoted to a bill appropriating a million of dollars.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen can arrange that between themselves. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The original motion as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to limit general debate to thirty minutes was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DORSHEIMER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House, in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6856) to provide for the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition. By order of the House general debate on the bill is limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it was not the part of fairness to limit the debate on this bill to so brief a time as thirty minutes after an hour had been allowed in behalf of the provisions of the bill. I am surprised at the haste of my colleague [Mr. BROWNE] to appropriate this money. My colleague assumes it is impossible anything should be said that would in any degree affect the determination to appropriate this million dollars out of the public Treasury. I have not ordinarily found my colleague so averse to debate; I have generally found him willing to agree that fair and reasonable discussion should be allowed. I think thirty minutes is not reasonable time in which to discuss such a measure. I think the precedent sought to be established by this bill, if it must be, should be done at least after full consideration. I do not believe that this measure will meet the approval of that portion of the American people who still believe that there are some limitations upon the power of Congress.

I concede, sir, that if the powers of the Congress of the United States are as absolute and unlimited as those of the British Parliament, then the funds in the public Treasury are at your disposal, and you may appropriate at your will; then Congress, without any information from its constituents, and without consulting them, may apply the fruits of their labor, gathered into the Treasury, just as the impulse of the hour may suggest. But I deny the power of Congress, under the just limitations of the Constitution, to appropriate this money to an object and purpose having no relation to Government. I challenge any gentleman to present a Constitutional warrant for the appropriation of this million dollars from the public Treasury by way of loan or otherwise to this or any other corporation not connected with the administration of Government. While I rejoice that our people, in all sections of the Union, are making grand expositions of their industries, and of the fruits of their labor and skill, and that the people of the South propose at New Orleans, the great commercial center of the Southwest, to make a grand exposition of the fruits of the labor of the South, and of the whole Union, and of the world; while I consider this to be eminently proper, and calculated to encourage enterprise and industry, I deny that you have the Constitutional power to loan this money to this corporation, reputable and enterprising as it may be, or to any other, for I deny your power to tax the people except for the legitimate purposes of Government.

When some eight years ago it was proposed to loan a corresponding sum of money to the body of gentlemen then engaged in preparing a suitable celebration of the centennial anniversary of this Republic, a celebration of the completion of its first hundred years, it was then said on this floor over and over again that that appropriation could never be appealed to as a precedent, at least until the close of another century. It was said the people of Pennsylvania had appropriated a million and a half of money toward that purpose, the city of Philadelphia had appropriated a million to that object, the people of every section of this country had made large subscriptions to give splendor to the grand event and for the purpose of presenting in the most satisfactory form to the world the results of the first century of a free Government—the first in the history of mankind—in the development of the industries and in exhibiting the progress of a free people in a single century.

But it was said with emphasis, "This never can be a precedent for aiding a private corporation seeking to display the fruits of skill and industry of any section of the Union, as no other occasion could reach the national greatness of that event." Gentlemen who are so eager to pass this bill, even without debate, must bear in mind that up to that appropriation of a million dollars in the first instance, with half a million more afterward added, to the encouragement of that great national event, the celebration of our first centennial—that up to that time such an appropriation of the public money had never passed Congress.

It was then urged by gentlemen still in this House that not only was the object of that appropriation eminently national beyond any event that could possibly occur in the progress of our history, at least until another hundred years had elapsed, but that the exposition to be made in 1876 and the occasion of it and the event to be celebrated was of equal interest to every American citizen and to the friends of freedom throughout the world, and it was urged with great earnestness and plausibility that those conditions could not occur again until the year 1976 had been reached; and then Philadelphia, the cradle of American liberty, on the one hand, and the events of one hundred years more of free and prosperous government (if Providence should happily so ordain) on the other, would furnish again high justification of appropriations from the public wealth, but not till then. I admit, sir, I feared that precedent, and doubted the power of Congress to make that appropriation, but I did not anticipate that at so early a moment and for an ordinary occasion that precedent would be appealed to for lavish appropriations from the public Treasury. But now, within eight years, on the strength of that appropriation, you propose to take from the public Treasury a million dollars to encourage an exhibition of one branch of your great industries.

Mr. ELLIS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This exhibition is universal in its character and is made so by its charter.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not misapprehend the terms made use of in this bill. I concede the importance of the main purpose in view. I concede the importance of the cotton industry, and that around this will be grouped the fruits of the labor and skill of the whole country and of the world, if you please. But this country and every section of it has its own great industries and products, local as well as national interests. Everywhere industry has developed production of cotton and corn, hay, and all the cereals to gigantic proportions, and every great city of the Union supports expositions of the products of industry and skill and of the various fruits of the earth. But where are you to stop? Have gentlemen considered that in the appropriation for the Philadelphia centennial celebration there was apparently a stopping point? That was to commemorate a great national event.

Here is an exhibition national as to geographical limits in its purpose, but not involving in any special degree any great national interest not common to all parts of the Union, but still general as is proposed in the exhibition of the industries of our people.

The city of New Orleans is an important commercial center, but, sir, you have a great many great and prosperous cities, and their number and importance is increasing year by year. When you have made an appropriation of a million of dollars this year to aid an exposition of industry at New Orleans, what gentleman will be able to raise a voice against the appropriation of a million next year to San Francisco, or Denver, or Chicago, or Cincinnati, or Louisville, or Saint Louis, or New York, or Boston, or Baltimore, or Savannah, or Charleston, or Indianapolis, or Cleveland, or any other great city of this country; and what argument can you urge against such an appropriation?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Has the United States Government invited foreign countries to make exhibits at this exposition?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes; that is done in connection with every exposition if desired.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask the gentleman further has the Government power to do that? I ask the gentleman to answer that question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no occasion to answer it. That is a matter in regard to which constitutional power would not have to be considered. The courtesies due from one people to another are not controlled by constitutional limitations.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If the gentleman will not answer my question——

Mr. HOLMAN. I do answer it just by repeating that courtesy between nations and between people are not things controlled or affected by constitutional provisions.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If the Government has power to invite foreign nations to offer exhibits, has it not power to prepare a building to exhibit them in?

Mr. HOLMAN. Ah, then, I understand; my friend does not deny the proposition that there is no warrant in the Constitution for the appropriation of this money; but he says, if I understand him correctly, that there already has been an infraction of the Constitution by the invitation given to foreign nations.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask you if the Government had power to extend the invitation?

Mr. BEACH. By action on the part of Congress.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Did not Congress authorize it?

Mr. BEACH. The gentleman will find his answer in the remarks of Senator GARLAND in the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is no point to the question of my friend from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT]. Comity between nations is a thing not affected by constitutional limitation. Those comities and courteous relations rise above the consideration of the Constitution; they underlie the common qualities of all governments and the relation of all peoples. But no gentleman meets the point which I make. Where do you find in the Constitution of the United States the power to loan this money? You will not find it even in that oft-appealed-to clause of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to levy taxes "to pay the debts, and provides for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." I hardly believe that the gentlemen who are so eager that this appropriation shall be made are willing to rest in this case the power of Congress, even through the "art of definition," on "the general-welfare" clause, for no local exposition, however great, can be of common and general interest to the people of the United States, and yet the money you propose to appropriate comes from the labor of all. No, sir; no gentleman will present a constitutional argument in favor of the appropriation of this money. The appropriation of it will open up a precedent which can not fail to be fatal to economy, and baneful and pernicious in the future. It will be a precedent for every plausible scheme that shall seek to reach your Treasury.

Is it for the Democratic party to begin a policy of expenditure that leaves no limit on the power of Congress? Is that party to encourage class legislation by this partial and local method of expenditure? Class legislation—legislation that, no matter what is intended, must in the very nature of things promote and advance the fortunes and interests of a comparatively small portion of our people at the expense of the labor of them all—is that Democratic doctrine? Is it for a Democratic House of Representatives not only to appropriate money out of the public Treasury without warrant from the Constitution but to do it by drawing from the industries of the many money which will and must in the very nature of things go to the special benefit of the few? And not the less special because favored and prosperous citizens of all sections of the country will participate in the benefits of this appropriation. The great body of the people who bear the burden can not; and the expenditure has no relations to Government, and yet you imposed the tax which gathered this money into your Treasury for the purposes of Government alone.

Sir, the men who filled this Hall even thirty years ago would not have stopped to debate such a proposition. They would have said at once that there is no authority for this appropriation. If you can appropriate this million of dollars out of your Treasury, either as a gift or as a loan, I do not care which, what can you not do? What limit is there to your power over the revenues which taxation draws into your Treasury?

If you have the constitutional power to loan this money to this corporation of enterprising gentlemen, you have the power to make a free gift of the money, and in my judgment that would be more creditable than this formality of a loan. No gentleman seriously expects the money to be returned. The great national and international exposition of eight years ago in Philadelphia, to which the attention of the whole world was turned, reimbursed your Treasury the money you advanced at the end of a suit which reached the Supreme Court of the United States, but the assets remaining out of which that reimbursement was made represented what remained of the millions freely donated to that great occasion.

In my judgment, from every point of view this is an unwise and indefensible measure. You legislate outside of the limits of your constitutional power; you establish a dangerous precedent fatal to economy and prudent government, and you will introduce into these public expositions organized by private corporations methods of extravagance and lavish expenditure injurious to the various interests they were intended to promote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ELLIS. I yield to my colleague [Mr. HUNT] for five minutes.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the committee provides the liberal aid of the Government in the shape of a loan of $1,000,000 for the World's Industrial and Cotton Exposition, to be held at the city of New Orleans in December, 1884.

The act of February 10, 1883, made provision for the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, to be held under the joint auspices of the United States, the Cotton Planters' Association of America, and the city in which the exposition might be located, and that cotton in all its conditions of culture and manufacture should be the chief exhibit. It was further enacted, that the exposition should be national and international in its character, so that not only the people of this country but those of the other parts of the world should be invited to participate.

In conformity with the provisions of the act the city of New Orleans was designated as the place for holding the exposition, and the President has made proclamation setting forth the time of the opening and the place at which the exposition will be held, and has sent, in the name of the United States, invitations to the governments of other nations to be represented and to take part in the great fair.

In view of the chief characteristic of the exposition as originally contemplated, it may not be inappropriate to make a few remarks in relation to the growth, manufacture, and commerce of cotton.

The culture of cotton is to be found in remote times. Before the Christian era India had begun to supply cottons to Persia, parts of Arabia, and all the eastern portions of Africa. The Phœnicians traded in these fabrics for centuries, and Egypt was acquainted with them. There is reason to think that the manufacture of cotton was also anciently known in Arabia.

It seems that long prior to the tenth century manufactures of a sort of indigenous cotton existed in Southern Italy, and perhaps in the Crimea; but there is authority for the statement that cotton was not manufactured in Europe until the tenth century, and then only by the Mohammedans in Spain. After the conquest of Constantinople the Turks introduced the culture of cotton into Macedonia, and in the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries cotton manufactures began to flourish in Spain, where the chief market was Barcelona. During the same period of time this manufacture was spread all over the southern shores of the Mediterranean. Travelers to Africa concur in the statement that cotton is indigenous there and is woven into garments.

Mankind was sunk lowest in ignorance and in all its deplorable consequences at the eleventh century, about the time of William the Conqueror, but from that era the light of knowledge began to reappear. A. D. 1110, on the revival of learning at Cambridge, paper made of cotton was commonly used in writing. In 1498, after the voyage of Vasco de Gama to the West Indies and around the Cape of Good Hope, the Portuguese made large importations of muslins and other cotton goods into Europe. But the earliest notice of cotton as an English article of trade is met with about the end of the fifteenth century, and it appears that cotton was naturally included in the commerce of the Mediterranean Sea.

Cotton-seed was planted as an experiment in Virginia in 1621. "Cotton wool" is named in the earliest books and pamphlets of Virginia. At first the culture grew northward rather than southward. A. D. 1733–'34 cotton was first planted in Georgia and the Carolinas, and in 1742 in Louisiana. In 1774 several bags were exported from Charleston, and in the year 1770 three bales were shipped from New York to Liverpool. At the period of the Declaration of Independence traces of cotton were to be found in Maryland, Delaware, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania.

In 1791 the cotton crop of the United States was only 2,000,000 pounds and as late as 1795 the few American factories then in existence still imported foreign cotton, the imports being, I find, 4,107,000 pounds. Cotton was now fast becoming one of the richest staples of the Southern States. It appears, however, that it was not until after the Revolution that the culture of cotton was conducted with a view to export. As late as 1784 an American ship which exported eight bags of cotton into Liverpool was seized on the ground that so much cotton could not be produced in the United States, and I find it stated as a matter of history that the first regular exportation of cotton from Charleston was in 1785, when one bag arrived at Liverpool, per Diana, to John and Isaac Teasdale & Co. In the same year twelve bags from Philadelphia and one from New York were received at that port. These events occurred, it may be said, one hundred years before the date now proposed for the national and international Cotton Exposition at New Orleans.

The green or short staple kind was that principally cultivated before the revolution. The black seed, or Sea Island cotton, was introduced into Georgia from the Bahamas about 1786, and the same year Mr. Madison predicted that the United States would become a great cotton-producing country.

For the five years following 1785 the receipts in Liverpool of American cotton amounted respectively to 6, 109, 389, 842, and 81 bags, estimated at 150 pounds each, or 1,440 bags, weighing in the aggregate 216,150 pounds. The necessities of the seven years' war had taught the people to raise the material for the greater part of their clothing, and laid the foundation for the culture, which has since reached such vast proportion. The crop of 1801 was 48,000,000 pounds, 21,000,000 of which were exported, and the year 1810 witnessed exports to the amount of 94,000,000 pounds. During the year of the war, 1813, owing to causes readily to be suggested, we exported only 19,400,000 pounds, the ruling price being 12 cents, but in England three times as much. In 1821 the crop of the United States was 180,000,000 (124,893,405 whereof were exported), and the crop of the year 1825 reached 258,000,000 pounds.

There were inventions in England of earlier date than the Revolution, but they had not at that period become sufficiently important to stimulate the production of cotton. The invention of the power-loom by Cartwright in 1774; of the mule "jenny" by Compton in 1775; the improvements by Arkwright and others in carding, drawing, and roving, were finally crowned by the adaptation in 1783 of the steam-engine, the unrivaled contrivance of Watt, to the spinning and carding of cotton in Manchester. In 1785 Bell invented cylinder printing, and the use of acid in bleaching was introduced at Glasgow in 1786. The year 1793 was made ever memorable in the cotton trade by the invention of the saw-gin by Eli Whitney, a citizen of the State of Massachusetts. Time fails me now to do more than mention a few others, useful inventors, whose practical genius and devotion have enabled them to advance in like connection manufacturing skill and industry. I refer simply to Hargreaves, Thomas Highs, Miller, Tenant, Radcliffe, Grouse, Burton, and Warsland.

The cultivation of cotton, while diminishing elsewhere, is constantly on the increase in the United States. For thirteen years before the war, 1849–'61, we produced 40,994,419 bales; the thirteen years after the war, 1866–'78, 45,627,847 bales, and this notwithstanding the change in the labor system. A table showing the cotton crop for fifty years in the United States is appended, marked "A." Our exports of raw cotton in the fiscal year 1883 were $247,328,721, and manufactures of cotton $12,951,145—making a total of $260,279,866. This was 32.36 per cent. of our total exports. The consumption of cotton in 1882, was: Great Britain, 3,712,000 bales; United States, 2,475,000 bales; continent of Europe, 8,116,000 bales. The United States exports to Great Britain in 1882 were 2,414,000 bales; United States exports to continent of Europe in 1882, 1,513,000 bales. The emancipation of slavery, taken in connection with surrounding causes, appears to have given fresh impetus to the culture of cotton.

The cotton goods of the United States are threads, yarns, and twines, sheetings, shirtings, and similar plain goods, twilled and fancy goods, osnaburgs, jeans, &c., ginghams, ducks, and bags. The manufacture of these in thirty great States of the Union, namely, Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, and Wisconsin, gives occupation to 230,223 looms, 10,921,147 spindles, and 181,628 persons, as shown, together with other important information, by the annexed table marked "B."

When it is considered how vast the area in the United States is throughout which cotton is grown; how many laborers, planters, and artisans depend on cotton; how great the manufactures of it have become; how large a proportion of national wealth is represented in the culture and manufacture of the staple; how magnificent are the domestic and foreign commerce in it, and what amount of comfort, strength, health, and consequent happiness is due to clothing made out of it in our time, it is natural and proper that a period should have been appointed by the act of 1883, under the auspices of Government, to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of cotton production, manufacture, and commerce.

It is equally natural that the place selected should be New Orleans, at the mouth of the Mississippi. This is the chief city of the South. It is the seat of a civilization fast becoming ancient, and peculiarly interesting from its history, its customs, its laws, the liberality, hospitality, and refinement of the population of the city, and the neighborhood of it to the republics of the southern part of the continent. It is mistress of a noble commerce. Steamers numbering many hundreds connect it by water ways with all the tributaries of the Mississippi, and a vast shipping, consisting of lines of steamships and of sailing vessels join it with the American coastwise trade and with foreign traffic. Giant compresses, triumphs of the latest mechanical skill and genius, are to be found in New Orleans, and by the aid of which, in pressing cotton, ships are laden with from 40 to 60 per cent. larger cargoes than could formerly be carried; and the bales are brought to be pressed, not only by steamboats down the river, but also thousands of miles by railroads crossing the swamps and the trembling prairies, skirting the sandy shores of the Gulf, and uniting the metropolis with the railway systems North, East, West, and South. The principal cotton market of the country, New Orleans is the resort of dealers from New England, New York, and the other States of America, and from England, France, Russia, Spain, Switzerland, Germany, Greece, Austria, the Netherlands, Belgium, and other foreign countries. Except the city of New York, no other place in the United States possesses as cosmopolitan a character.

It is one of the professed objects of the act of 1883 to include in the exposition all arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine, and enough has transpired to show that general attention has been attracted to this as well as to the other features of the great fair, and that an enlightened opinion throughout the country is strongly in favor of their development. The President of the United States has communicated to the House the report of the director-general. It appears there that the city of New Orleans has contributed not only $500,000, as originally required, for the location of the exposition, but has, in addition, donated the use of its principal park of two hundred and forty-seven acres of ground and added an appropriation of $100,000. It is well known that the State of Louisiana will add to this sum, and as the amounts provided have been found to be inadequate to meet demands for space from foreign countries and individual exhibitors, the board of management have called for an increase of their subscriptions to the amount of $1,000,000.

The main building is, with the exception of that of the world's fair held at London, the largest ever erected, being 1,370 feet long and 905 feet wide, and affording 1,000,000 square feet of floor space, with convenient apartments for police, fire department, public-comfort offices, meeting-rooms for various national organizations, and with a central music-hall capable of seating 11,000 persons, and a machinery hall 1,375 feet long and 250 feet wide. The applications for space from foreign countries and from the United States, even at this early date, some eight months before the opening of the exposition, call for about 900,000 feet of exhibiting space. Twenty-four States and Territories have announced themselves as contributors. France, Mexico, Guatemala, Spanish Honduras, Nicaragua, San Salvador, Costa Rica, British Honduras, Persia, China, Siam, Japan, Switzerland, and Liberia are, we are told, to be represented by governmental action and contribution, while individuals and commercial firms from Great Britain, the British Colonies, British India, Germany, Russia, Italy, Spain, Holland, Denmark, and Turkey are also to participate.

The horticultural hall will be a vast one. It is to have a length of 600 feet, 194 feet in the center, with glass roof and a glass door 90 feet in height. In it are to be collected the trees, plants, and fruits to be exhibited, and those especially of the Southern countries. Mexico will adorn the main center with royal palms, and there is anticipated a fruit display of 20,000 plants, nearly twice the size of any heretofore made. Next to the horticultural hall there are 200,000 feet of space for a garden which Mexico will occupy, and the republics of Central America will take up 250,000 feet of garden space adjoining, while an equal amount is to be embellished by Florida and California.

Not to mention other features of the exhibition, it will attract especial interest to have it known that extensive preparations have been made for a national educational display, under the indorsement of the national educational convention, composed of State and city superintendents, with the cordial co-operation of the Commissioner of Education. Local educational societies are already being organized throughout the State of Louisiana, and it is the design that the exhibition should secure for the cause of education more liberal provision in the future from all the States that ought to make it. In order to carry out the plans which have been adopted, and which have been now cursorily hinted at, and to extend the exposition in other departments, easily to be suggested; in order to obtain and group the exhibits of the several Departments of the United States Government and the collective exhibits of all the States and Territories; and in order to avail completely of the interest which the occasion has excited and the favorable circumstances surrounding it—in a word, to secure all the benefits to be had from an exhibition of the arts and sciences, agriculture, manufacture, and commerce, and make of the great fair a memorable national and international event, the management have come to Congress with a request for aid, and I consider their showing justly entitles them to it.

Constitutional commentaries in support of this great design are easy of access in the discussions which preceded the Congressional aid given to the centennial celebration at Philadelphia. The bill under consideration carefully follows the centennial bill, with the difference that aid in the shape of a loan to the extent of $1,000,000 is asked for in the present instance, while assistance in like form to the amount of $1,500,000 was afforded to the Centennial Exhibition. The exposition at New Orleans has the advantage of the precedents already established, and proceeds with the benefit of accumulated experience.

The preamble of the Constitution says that the instrument established by the people of the United States, among other objects, has these: to insure domestic tranquillity and promote the general welfare. It is to be observed that no reason can be given for discriminating against any object designated in the preamble. There is none, for instance, why every means should not be taken to insure domestic tranquillity as well as to establish justice, none why the general welfare should not be promoted as well as provision made for the common defense.

Article 1, section 8, says Congress "shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

The constitutional power thus lodged in Congress was necessarily adequate and complete, or else the feeble and decaying Confederation would never have been supplanted and the succeeding Government of the United States with proper powers erected in its stead. Commenting on this provision of the Constitution, Justice Story says:

In the history of mankind it has ordinarily been found that in the usual progress of things the necessities of a nation in every stage of its existence are at least equal to its resources. * * * It is impossible to foresee all the various changes in the posture, relations, and power of different nations which might affect the prosperity and safety of our own. We may have formidable foreign enemies; we may have internal commotions; we may suffer from physical as well as moral calamities, from plagues, famine, and earthquakes; from political convulsions and rivalries; from the gradual decline of particular sources of industry; and from the necessity of changing our own habits and pursuits in consequence of foreign improvements and competition and the variable nature of human wants and desires.

Now, then, if the power to lay and collect taxes, &c., be limited except as laid down in the Constitution, the terms of the instrument immediately following, and providing that the taxes referred to are "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare," are a qualification or restraint upon the taxing power itself. That is to say, the power to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States is not, in the common sense, a general distinct or substantial power, but is, on the contrary, confined to the objects specified. In other words, the power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises is given in order to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare. Justice Story proceeds to observe:

It is said if Congress may lay taxes for the common defense and general welfare, the money may be appropriated for those purposes, although not within the scope of the other enumerated powers. Certainly it may be so appropriated; for if Congress is authorized to lay taxes for such purposes it would be strange if when raised the money could not be applied to them. That would be to give a power to a certain end and then deny the end intended by the power.

In support of the same view and doctrine, I find in one of the earlier utterances of Mr. Calhoun, in the House of Representatives, February 4, 1817, quoted in the recent admirable address of the honorable Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] on the Blair educational bill, among other authorities, the following:

The first power delegated to Congress is comprised in these words: "To lay and collect taxes," &c. First the power is given to lay taxes, next the objects are enumerated to which the money accruing from the exercise of this power may be applied, namely, to pay the debts, provide for the defense, and promote the general welfare; and last the rule for laying the taxes is prescribed, to wit, that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform. If the framers had intended to limit the use of the money to the powers afterward enumerated and defined, nothing could have been more easy than to have expressed it plainly. I know it is the opinion of some that the words "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare," which I have just cited, were not intended to be referred to the power of laying taxes contained in the first part of the section, but that they are to be understood as distinct and independent powers granted in general terms, and are qualified by a more detailed enumeration of powers in the subsequent part of the Constitution.

If such were in fact the meaning intended, surely nothing can be conceived more bungling and awkward than the manner in which the framers have communicated their intention. If it were their intention to make a summary of the powers of Congress in general terms which were afterward to be particularly defined and enumerated, they should have told us so plainly and distinctly; and if the words "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare" were intended for this summary, they should have headed the list of our powers and it should have been stated that to effect the general objects the following specific powers were granted. I ask members to read the section with attention and it will, I conceive, plainly appear that such could not have been the intention. The whole section seems to me to be about taxes. It plainly commences and ends with them, and nothing could be more strained than to suppose that the intermediate words "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare" were to be taken as independent and distinct powers. Forced, however, as such a construction was, I might admit it and urge that the words do constitute a part of the enumerated powers. The Constitution gives to Congress the power to establish post-offices and post-roads. I know the interpretation usually given to these words confines our powers to that of designating only the post-roads; but it seems to me that the word "establish" comprehends something more. But suppose the Constitution to be silent, why should we be confined in the application of moneys to the enumerated powers? There is nothing in the reason of the thing that I can perceive why it should be so restricted; and the habitual and uniform practice of the Government coincides with my opinion. Our laws are full of instances of money appropriated without any reference to the enumerated powers. We granted by a unanimous vote, or nearly so, $50,000 to the distressed inhabitants of Caraccas and a very large sum at two different times to the Saint Domingo refugees. If we are restricted in the use of our money to the enumerated powers, on what principle can the purchase of Louisiana be justified? To pass over many other instances, the identical power which is now the subject of discussion has in several instances been exercised. To look no further back, at the last session a considerable sum was granted to complete the Cumberland road. In reply to this uniform course of legislation, I expect it will be said that our Constitution is founded on positive and written principles and not on precedents. I do not deny the position; but I have introduced these instances to prove the uniform sense of Congress and the country (for they have not been objected to) as to our powers; and surely they furnish better evidence of the true interpretation of the Constitution than the most refined and subtle arguments.

I am particular in referring to this opinion of Mr. Calhoun as an early one because it is brought to my notice that he saw fit afterward to modify his views. I take leave to say, however, just here that I believe him to have been correct originally and submit that this is evidently true.

To the same effect with the opinions of Story and Calhoun already quoted I add the following extract from a message of President Monroe to the House of Representatives March 4, 1822:

It is manifestly incidental to the great objects of the first branch of the grant which authorizes Congress to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; a power of vast extent not granted by the Confederation, the grant of which formed one of the principal inducements to the adoption of this Constitutuion. If both parts of the grant are taken together, as they must be, for the one follows immediately after the other in the same sentence, it seems to be impossible to give to the latter any other construction than that contended for. "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises." For what purpose? To pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States—an arrangement and phraseology which clearly show that the latter part of the clause was intended to enumerate the purposes to which the money thus raised might be appropriated.

* * * * * * *

Had it been intended that Congress should be restricted in the appropriation of the public money to such expenditures as were authorized by a rigid construction of the other specific grants, how easy it would have been to have provided for it by a declaration to that effect. The omission of such declaration is, therefore, an additional proof that it was not intended that the grant should be so construed.

* * * * * * *

Each government should look to the great and essential purposes for which it was instituted and confine itself to those purposes. A State government will rarely, if ever, apply money to national purposes without making it a charge to the nation.

* * * * * * *

It is believed that there is not a corporation in the United States which does not exercise great discretion in the application of the money raised by it to the purposes of its institutions. It would be strange if the Government of the United States, which was instituted for such important purposes and endowed with such extensive powers, should not be allowed at least equal discretion and authority. The evil to be particularly avoided is the violation of States' rights, showing that it seems to be reasonable and proper that the powers of Congress should be so construed as that the General Government in its intercourse with other nations and in our internal concerns should be able to adopt all such measures lying within the fair scope and intended to facilitate the direct objects of its powers as the public welfare may require and as sound and provident policy dictate.

The high sanction of his great name is given to the same constitutional interpretation by Chancellor Kent in the annexed extract from his Commentaries. Kent says:

That Congress possesses the power to appropriate money raised by taxation or otherwise, for other purposes, in their discretion, than those pointed out in the enumerated powers, is a question that has given rise to very able and acute discussions; and the affirmative side of the question has been sustained and successfully vindicated by the practice of the Government, and the weighty authority, among others, of Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Monroe, in celebrated documents under their official santion.

To conclude, in this connection I add the following, taken from the message of President John Quincy Adams, December 6, 1825, where he gives a like construction to this provision of the Constitution:

The great object of the institution of civil government is the improvement of the condition of those who are parties to the social compact. And no government, in whatever form constituted, can accomplish the lawful ends of its institution but in proportion as it improves the condition of those over whom it is established.

But moral, political, and intellectual improvement are duties assigned by the Author of our existence to social no less than to individual man. For the fulfillment of those duties governments are invested with power, and to the attainment of the end, the progressive improvement of the condition of the governed, the exercise of delegated powers is a duty as sacred and indispensible as the usurpation of powers not granted is criminal and odious.

If these powers and others enumerated in the Constitution may be effectually brought into action by laws promoting the improvement of agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, the cultivation and the improvement of the mechanic and the elegant arts, the advancement of literature, and the progress of the sciences, ornamental and profound, to refrain from exercising them for the benefit of the people themselves would be to hide in the earth the talent committed to our charge, would be treachery to the most sacred of trusts.

The power to promote the general welfare is clearly, therefore, under these authorities, to be exercised, and the limitation of the power is, that it is to be used for the common profit, but so as not to conflict with the rights of the States. In the use of it Congress has a clear discretion, but it is evidently a legal and constitutional one—a like discretion, I submit, with that which belongs to Congress in the exercise of all the enumerated powers with which it is endowed by the Constitution.

Argument in favor of the bill under consideration is easy to be strengthened with additional suggestions of constitutional principles. Under section 2, article 2, the President has the power, by and with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senators present, to make treaties. The act of February 1, 1883, for the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, as has been seen, requests the President to send, in the name of the United States, invitations to other governments to be represented, to take part in the exposition, and we are informed that the President has proceeded to do this. He has not only performed the acts of international comity contemplated, but the invitations extended by him have been accepted. The act of Congress referred to declares, moreover, that all articles which shall be imported for the sole purpose of exhibition at the exposition shall be admitted without the payment of duty or customs fees or charges. Now I ask what is an invitation? It is a call, a bidding, a solicitation to be present, and the giving of it implies that the parties invited will be received and entertained when they appear. It imposes an obligation on the party making the tender, and this must be fulfilled. Will it be said that the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, can make a treaty, and that the country is not bound when he asks by authority of Congress the presence of the representatives of foreign sovereignties at a great exhibition of art, learning, and science? Will it be pretended that when thus empowered by the National Legislature the President can not constitutionally carry out tenders of international comity, and that Congress is not obligated to vote the means, required as they are in the instance of the exposition proposed at New Orleans by their own act as well as by the best considerations of public policy and general good? I venture to say that these questions can only be answered one way.

The Constitution, like other systems, is superimposed upon the natural law and the accepted practice and customs of civilized States, and has been consistently administered in accordance with these. The bark Resolute was sent to England as a present, refitted at a cost of $40,000. On motion of James M. Mason, of Virginia, an appropriation was made to relieve sufferers from earthquake in Venezuela. A liberal appropriation was made to send food to Ireland, which Mr. Calhoun supported. Mr. Webster considered that the Government should purchase private stock in the Louisville Canal and hold and improve the work as a medium of commerce. Large appropriations were made for the representation of our industries at London, Paris, and Vienna. The good offices of this Government have been successfully tendered to the South American Republics for promotion of peace between them and Spain. Our diplomatic and consular officers were authorized by the Government and appropriations made to give the protection of the United States to the citizens of twelve different (five European and seven American) nations in France during the war between France and Germany in 1870. The sufferers from floods in the Mississippi Valley have been repeatedly relieved, as were those from the recent Ohio floods, and the President has lately sent to Congress a message distinctly recommending, on true and inevitable principles, an appropriation of $100,000 for the building of levees on the Mississippi River. Nor must I omit as peculiarly appropriate to the present discussion the aid voted to the centennial celebration at Philadelphia already referred to. The exposition then held is generally known and admitted to have been productive of incalculable good to the country at large. The magnitude and grandeur of the exhibition to take place at New Orleans will produce like results. The mere locality is only an incident. The nature and extent of the exhibition are what give it its character, and render it an undertaking for the common profit or general welfare.

The exposition, in addition to many other advantages, offers to the United States the best opportunity which has ever presented itself for drawing closer the ties between our own country and the South American republics. It will give to the people of those republics occasion for judging of the profits of more intimate commercial intercourse with ourselves, and for the cultivation of offices, of good neighborhood, and mutual international support. It will show them that their destiny is involved in our own, and point them the way to further progress.

South America produces only a fractional amount of the necessaries of life consumed by her people. They find employment in dealing in coffee, India-rubber, barks, cocoa, dye-woods, drugs, feathers, guano, hemp, hair, hides, isinglass, oils, skins, whalebone, &c., but are obliged to go abroad for the greater part of their food, clothing, coal, iron, furniture, and building material. As it is now, a great proportion of what the South Americans import is shipped to them by Europe from points from five hundred to five thousand miles farther away than are the ports of the United States. It will be a natural result of the exposition to change this singular order of things, to establish our demand for the productions of South America, and to show her people that a more convenient and better market for their wants can be had with us than that which is now sought abroad and is controlled by British and French capital.

There is no county in the United States, no town government, however limited, which would not be allowed to possess the discretion to hold a fair for its benefit if in the judgment of the local authorities it was deemed advantageous to do so. I submit, with little if any fear of successful contradiction, that the United States can not be denied a like necessary, proper, and enlightened liberty. The exposition, then, at New Orleans is to be in natural and proud commemoration of the commercial success and scientific achievements of one hundred years, but more especially in their relations to cotton as the chief exhibit, and will be held, with governmental sanction and co-operation, in conformity with the principles of the Constitution and the practice of civilized nations. The enterprise proceeds under favor of a liberal and generous disposition of the American people everywhere, to the Southern portion of the Republic. This is welcomed by all who love our common country, because it gives rich assurance in the end of the PERFECT UNION contemplated by the fathers in the beginning.

Mr. ELLIS. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks which have been made in favor of this bill. I am glad to hear that there is to be a sort of national "dress parade" at New Orleans in which probably all the States of the Union, together with foreign nations, are to make an exhibition of their products. As I understand, Louisiana and the other cotton States are to be there with their cotton; the Northwest is to be there with her cereal productions; Florida is to be there with her orange crops, and the ice-bound North with her peculiar products. But I am not aware that this Government is in partnership in the exhibition of these products. If the Treasury is to be used first for the protection of cattle so that no disease shall extend at large over the country and do them damage; if money is to be distributed through the Union according to illiteracy for the erection of school-houses so that this Government shall trespass upon the jurisdiction of the States in undertaking to superintend the education of the people; if the Treasury is to be made a common fund in this way, then it would be far better to charter a car, attach it to Barnum's show, and go with the Treasury around the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for general debate on this bill has expired.

Mr. ELLIS. I now ask that the bill be read by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $1,000,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the public Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a loan to the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, to be used and employed by the board of management thereof to augment and enhance the success of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition in such manner as said board of management may determine: Provided, That the said sum shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States on the drafts of the president and treasurer of the board of management of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, one-third of the amount immediately after the passage of this act and the remainder in four monthly payments thereafter: Provided further, That no greater amount shall be expended upon buildings, grounds, and preparations than the aggregate sum that may be secured by subscription to the capital stock by donations and the amount of the loan provided herein: And provided further, That in the distribution of the amounts that may remain in the treasury of the board of management after the payments of the current expenses of administration the amount of the appropriation hereinbefore made shall be paid in full into the Treasury of the United States before any dividend or percentage of profits shall be paid to the holders of said stock: Provided further, That the Government of the United States shall not, under any circumstances, be liable for any debt or obligation for the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, or its board of management, or any sum whatever in addition to the foregoing amount that may be appropriated by this act; and that adequate space for such exhibits as the Government of the United States may see proper to make at said exposition shall be furnished free of all charge: Provided further, That no sum shall be paid to the treasurer of the said exposition until after he and the president of the same shall have executed a bond, with good and solvent security, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the sum of $300,000, to sufficiently secure the safe-keeping and the faithful disbursement of the sum hereby appropriated, and for the faithful observance of this act with regard to the limitation of expenditures as fixed herein, and for the repayment to the Government of the United States of the surplus proceeds of said exposition remaining after payment of the current expenses of administration, said repayment in no case to exceed the loan herein appropriated and provided for.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I do not desire to discuss this measure even for a moment. But I wish to say that my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] wholly misapprehended my object in moving to limit debate on the bill. I did so simply in the interest of economy. I did not intend myself to vote for this measure, and did not suppose my colleague intended to do so. But I believed that nothing which he might have to say or which I might be able to say in opposition to the bill would change a single vote. And now, after my colleague has discussed the measure so ably for fifteen minutes, I imagine the House to occupy with reference to this question about the position which it did when the discussion began.

The gentleman is mistaken in supposing I hope to hurry this million dollars out of the Treasury of the United States. I shall vote against the measure, and would be glad if I had an opportunity to do so immediately.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move, in line 25, after the word "profits," to insert the words "or assets;" so it will read:

That in the distribution of the amounts that may remain in the treasury of the board of management after the payment of the current expenses of administration, the amount of the appropriation hereinbefore made shall be paid in full into the Treasury of the United States before any dividend or percentage of profits or assets shall be paid to the holders of said stock.

Mr. ELLIS. I accept that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will take no time then in giving my reasons for it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LORE. I move to amend the bill by striking out, in lines 38 and 39, the words "three hundred thousand dollars" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one million dollars;" by striking out in lines 43, 44, 45, and 46 these words, "surplus of proceeds of said exposition remaining after payment of the current expenses of administration, said repayment in no case to exceed the," and by adding to the end of section "without interest and within three years from the passage of this act."

Mr. Chairman, the act as it now stands provides for a bond of $300,000 simply conditioned to pay to the United States a surplus, if there be any, in repayment of the loan of $1,000,000. The amendment is that the bond shall be in $1,000,000, and that the condition shall be absolute repayment to the United States of the $1,000,000 thus loaned without interest, and within three years.

I do this for this reason: I recognized the propriety of the loan to the Centennial Exhibition; it was the centennial year and was designed as a celebration of our one hundredth national anniversary. This, however, is not for that purpose.

It is an exhibition, it is true; but it is an exhibition in the city of New Orleans, which may be followed by exhibitions in every other city of the Union. I hope this may be a success. Fortunately for the United States the exhibition at Philadelphia was a success, and after a suit at law we got back the loan.

Suppose this is not a success, will the loan be returned? Suppose it is a success and the loan is returned, what will be the result on the various expositions held in Boston, held in New York, held in Chicago, held in Saint Louis, and other cities of the Union. I am in favor of the loan, but I want it as other loans are made and secured as other loans are secured. I recognize the fact that in the South perhaps it would be somewhat difficult to procure that security; but, sir, if it be doubtful about the return of this loan, where should that risk rest? Not on the United States, but on the men and upon the corporation who have instituted and design to carry this exposition to favorable and profitable issue.

That is the reason why I am in favor of voting this money secured unconditionally to be returned to the United States. It is a bad precedent, unless we shall fence ourselves about to protect the Treasury of the United States in this manner, whatever may be the success of this, from other enterprises hereafter which may not be a success. Grant this, and you can not shut the door to any other city asking it under like conditions.

Mr. CANNON. I was a member of Congress when the act passed authorizing a loan by the United States to the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. Then the same objection was urged the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LORE] has made to-day. There were many gentlemen on the other side of the House who turned themselves into prophets like Jeremiah, prophesying evil. [Laughter].

Mr. HISCOCK. Did the gentleman support the bill then? I find his name recorded in the negative.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman is mistaken; but if it is true I did vote against it, I will say that I am now sorry I did not vote for it. [Laughter and applause.]

I am for this act if for no other reason than that at the last Congress we passed an act authorizing the President of the United States to issue his proclamation inviting all the nations of the earth to attend this exhibition. The President has so invited them, and after having done so, I am unwilling, after our guests have been invited, to make no provision for their entertainment.

I am for it for another reason. I am of opinion, under the terms of the bill guarded as it is there will be sufficient money received by the exposition to make return of this money to the Government.

But even if there is not sufficient received for that purpose I think we ought to pass the bill without hesitation, for the reason that we are committed to it in the first place, and for the second reason because it is to be a national exposition, not only of great interest to all of the States and Territories of this Union, but to the people of the whole world. I think we are honorably bound to make provision for it after having extended the invitation to them to participate.

Now, then, the proposition of the gentleman from Delaware is to make this an outright loan that is to be returned in any event to the Government, and the bond to be given to secure the return of the money to be executed by the president and the treasurer of this association. That is a proposition, I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, however much public spirit these two men might possess, that would defeat the bill. It is a proposition that would have defeated the objects of the bill passed in 1876 that was to aid the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. If adopted it will unquestionably render the proposed bill of no avail.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment. I do this, sir, for the purpose of saying to the committee that it seems to me the only object the gentleman from Delaware can possibly have in proposing such an amendment is to defeat this entire proposition, to kill the bill and break down the proposed exposition. Of course I do not say that understandingly, for I do not know what may be his mental intention, and I can not deal with a man's motives. But certainly the effect of this amendment of his, if it should be adopted, would be to defeat the objects of this bill.

Now, when the loan, as I understand it, was made to the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, it was for a million and a half of dollars, I believe. Is that correct?

Mr. BLANCHARD. That was the amount.

Mr. HORR. Then we required a bond of only $500,000. Now the bond is fixed here at $300,000 for a loan of $1,000,000, which I take it is about equivalent to what we did in the other case; and that bond is not to secure the repayment of the million of dollars, but as the bill itself will show, is for the purpose of securing the honest and efficient action of the people in charge of it, and a careful expenditure of the funds intrusted to them; and it is fully as large as the bonds which are usually required under our form of government for any such purpose.

But, sir, I am not astonished at finding the constitutional question raised here, especially by my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], because I know the Constitution always stands in his way whenever he is opposed to a bill. In this case he has asked us to give him some place, some article, some warrant, some word in the Constitution that authorizes this appropriation or warrants the expenditure of this money. I want to answer my friend from Indiana by asking him another question.

I want to ask him to tell us what clause in the Constitution, what article or section I will find therein contained which warranted the passage of the bill for the erection of a public building in New Albany, Ind.? [Laughter.] I have read it all through, and I have not been able to find a word about the public building at New Albany [renewed laughter], and yet my friend from Indiana was the third man that went between the tellers for that bill. That is always the way, Mr. Chairman, I have noticed when you are trying to do anything for the benefit of the nation that somebody is afraid the Constitution is going to be violated and raises that old cry. Now, for my part, I think the authority to make such an appropriation as this comes from the inherent power belonging to the nation to transact its business for the benefit of the people of this whole country; and I do not believe that it is restricted by narrow lines. It is for the purpose of building up the interests of this great Government and of this people. I have no doubt at all that this exposition will make money enough to pay back every dollar of the fund which it is proposed to loan them. But if it does not, and you may take which ever assumption you choose, that it will or will not pay expenses, let us not be higgling here about it; but let us do for these great industries what they deserve.

This exposition is going to be of more benefit to the country than you can count in dollars and cents. It is going to bring together all the nations of the world and all of the people of this Union; and I am glad, sir, they have selected New Orleans as the location. That country down there will be benefited by seeing people from all over the United States and all over the world and mixing with them. These great commercial interests are the only things that will ever entirely wipe away all sectional feelings throughout this country. There is no political sentiment involved in this question, and I do believe as a rule that this side of the House is going to vote for this measure expressly for the purpose of building up the interests of this great country. It is not for the benefit of any particular class or any particular section. It is national in its views, national in its effects.

I do hope, Mr. Chairman, that since the gentleman from Delaware says he is in favor of this great exposition and does not wish to do anything to clog its progress or hamper it, that he will withdraw his amendment, for it is virtually a declaration that this appropriation shall do nobody any good.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BEACH. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to offer a substantial amendment to the bill. What amendment is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Delaware. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BEACH. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] who was on the floor a few minutes ago said by the act of the last Congress the President was authorized to invite foreign guests to this exposition. It is a pity the gentleman had not explained the circumstances under which that invitation was to be extended.

Mr. CANNON. I do not care what they are. It is the fact I was speaking about.

Mr. BEACH. Exactly. I desire to call the attention of the committee to what occurred in the Senate when the bill which passed in the last Congress was up for discussion. Senator MORRILL raised this point:

I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to one part of the bill which provides that there shall be an invitation given to foreign nations by the President of the United States. The question arises whether we can give such an invitation without assuming some responsibility as to the expense.

Senator GARLAND replied:

I am perfectly willing to accept the suggestion. The clause as it is was put in for the reason that it would give it more of an international character to let the invitations come from the President of the United States.

And a little further on Senator GARLAND says:

The Senator will bear in mind that there is a provision that there shall be no expense on the part of the United States.

Now, when the bill which passed the last Congress, which was the wedge that prepared the way to the appropriation asked for in the bill now under discussion, was in this House the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] who had charge of the bill stated "that the bill made no appropriation and involved the Government in no liability of any character." The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] asked the question whether any appropriation would be required to be made hereafter, and to that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] replied:

There is a special provision that the United States Government shall be liable for no expense whatever.

I thought it proper to call the attention of the committee to what occurred in reference to the bill which was passed in the last Congress for the purpose of showing how easy it is to get vicious legislation ingrafted upon the statute-book and how the Government becomes committed to a policy which is improper and wrong through inconsiderate and hasty action.

Whenever there is a proposition or an intention to have a canal constructed they do not come here to Congress and ask for an appropriation for the construction of a canal. They usually come here and ask for a small appropriation for engineering expenses, for purposes of surveys. Then in the next Congress we find them coming here saying this is a great national enterprise, a matter to which the Government has given by action of Congress its consent; and then the appropriation is asked for.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this proposition. It can not receive my vote. It is a vote to take the people's money and give it to a private corporation in aid of a private enterprise. But I desire to call the attention of the committee to a proposition that I have made in the way of a proposed amendment to the Constitution which is intended to kill all appropriations of this character, and I will say if this proposition to amend the Constitution had been carried a quarter of a century ago it would have saved to this country millions of treasure and millions of acres of the public lands. I will send the proposed amendment to the Constitution to the Clerk's desk and ask that it may be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposed amendment to the Constitution will be read as a part of the gentleman's remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved, &c., That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be, and hereby is, proposed; which, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of said Constitution:

ARTICLE —.

Neither the credit, nor the money, nor the property of the United States shall be hereafter given or loaned to or in aid of any association, corporation, or private undertaking.

Mr. ELLIS. If that is offered as an amendment I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It was read as a part of the remarks of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ELLIS. I suggest that it be amended by adding the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. McCOID. I favor this bill and I am not deterred from supporting it by the constitutional question. It seems to me that gentlemen who question the power of Congress to legislate in this way could easily satisfy themselves by finding warrants in two or three of the granted powers delegated to Congress. The one which provides for the general welfare certainly has been construed broadly enough to cover this. The one upon the subject of foreign commerce, if you will regard this as a matter incident to commerce, out of which our commerce may grow, and relating to information on the subject, is sufficient to justify it. But I would justify it on the other ground that this is a nation, a sovereignty, clothed with powers for its good the same as the other sovereign nations of the world.

Why, sir, twenty foreign nations have accepted invitations to take part in this exposition; twenty foreign nations have appropriated money and are sending commissioners to this exposition. Is it possible that while twenty sovereign nations of the world are appropriating money to send commissioners to the United States this Government stands with hands and feet tied and can not give a dollar to the same great purpose? Is that the kind of a nation we have? I think gentlemen can not really believe that the Government has not the constitutional power requisite for this action.

As regards the benefits of this legislation, to me they grow continually as I consider it. A great many of our political questions are economic questions, are transportation questions, and are related to this very question. This exhibition will stimulate our industries in this country. It will give us an acquaintance with the resources of the country. These two considerations are important in almost every commercial question that comes before Congress and before the people of the country. For these reasons alone it is justifiable.

The United States contributes money and sends commissioners to foreign expositions and nobody finds any particular objection to that. What objection can there be to aiding this when the exposition is within our own boundary? I fear sometimes that gentlemen entertain objections to this exposition because of its location. I hope not. To my mind the location of this exposition is one of great importance. I look upon New Orleans as the great exporting point of this country. It lies at the foot of the great valley of the Mississippi, at the key of the great water-course of this country. It lies where commerce will naturally flow when we open up our commercial relations in such proportions as we should with Central America, South America, Mexico, Australia, and the islands of the Pacific Ocean and of the Southern seas.

I am one of those who believe that the day will come when there will be a commercial revolution in this country, when we will look to the West and to the South for a great deal of our foreign commerce, rather than look, like the statue on the Dome of our Capitol, forever to the East and depend upon European countries for markets in which to dispose of that which we may have to sell.

I believe in these expositions for another reason. I hope the time will come when, under the charge of the Agricultural Department, perhaps, we may have this country divided into districts, and annual exhibitions of the agricultural products and the mineral and industrial products of the country held in these districts. For instance, suppose that we have an eastern district, a middle district, a southern district, a western district, and a Pacific district, and that every five years, perhaps, we have a grand national exposition in each of those districts where the people of the different districts can unite and come together, as do the people of the counties of States, in an exposition of our products.

Mr. MONEY. Since the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH] has seen proper to introduce my name into this discussion, it is perhaps necessary that I should say something. It is very true, as he says, and the RECORD will show it, that I had charge of the bill last year authorizing the Government to extend invitations to foreign countries to take part in this exposition. It is true that I am responsible for it to that extent. It is further true that the second section of that bill provided that the Government should not be called upon for any expenditures arising by reason of this exposition. It is also true that I repeated the substance of that clause to the House and privately to gentlemen who objected to the bill. But I am not responsible at all for the measure which the House is now considering. I cannot be accused of any inconsistency in that matter. I have not been mentioned in connection with the enterprise since that day. Not a single individual or newspaper has connected my name with it.

While I freely confess that I did say what the gentleman states on the floor of this House, and further stated privately to members who objected to that bill that the provisions of the second section provided that the Government of the United States should not be called upon for any expenditures, yet that should not influence this House in the consideration of the measure now before it. I explained the provisions of that bill, and upon the face of it it was passed by the House.

A new set of circumstances has now arisen, and if it seems proper to this House that the Government should support this great enterprise by a loan to it of $1,000,000, I can not see any valid objection to it. And I am surprised that objection should come from the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH], who only a year ago stood upon this floor and asked this House to appropriate $10,000 for a centennial exhibition to be held at his little town of Newburg, in New York.

A MEMBER. For $50,000.

Mr. MONEY. Some one says that he asked for $50,000. He is not the man to now object to a measure of this sort, having himself been active in setting that precedent for our example.

This measure has grown to proportions never once imagined by the men who first introduced it into this House. I myself had no conception of the magnitude of this enterprise. I thought we would have an exhibition at New Orleans that perhaps would show the industrial resources of a dozen States or so. But I find that not only every State and every Territory of this Union, but twenty-nine foreign nations have made application for room in which to exhibit the products of their agriculture, commerce, and mechanical skill.

I am sure there is no lack of precedents for the action here proposed. If this Government could last year appropriate money to send her Fish Commissioner to the grand fish exhibition at London, she has full warrant under the Constitution to make an appropriation for an exhibition within her own borders. I heard then of no objection to the appropriation for the fishery exhibition in Europe. We made an exhibition there that was a credit to this Government. I understand that the United States took nearly all the first-class premiums and medals at that great exhibition.

We are now to have an exposition which will be like a revelation to such foreign governments as may choose to participate in it. Never perhaps in the whole history of this country has there been an occasion equal to this, when the Government of the United States may show to the nations of Europe her power, her immense resources, and, more than that, the united sentiment of her people.

I rejoice that this proposition is before the House, and I know it will entertain it in a spirit worthy of the cause. I have no doubt whatever of the success of this exhibition. I believe the Government will be reimbursed, as in the case of the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia. I am proud that I voted for that exhibition, and I shall vote for this and for anything of the same character that may be followed with the same important results.

I had not intended to say anything on this subject, and have been led to make these remarks only because of the reflection made upon me by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH]. I hope the House will see to it that the appropriation here proposed is not reduced.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the proposition now before the Committee of the Whole, it simply involves the requirement of security for the repayment to the Government of this loan of $1,000,000 and the question of our constitutional power in the premises. The amendment proposed is a hard exaction; it is an unprecedented exaction.

The people of that community and of that section of our Union have subscribed over $700,000 to this exposition; and they have given the Government preferment over all that they have subscribed and over all that they may hereafter contribute. Now to come here with this illiberal amendment, seeking to require that those who take part in promoting this great national enterprise shall not only be called upon, if necessary, to forfeit all their stock for the repayment of what the Government may advance, but also to forfeit, if need be, an additional amount of $1,000,000, is to do that which has not been done with reference to any other part of our country and which should not be inaugurated now.

This appropriation is not only justified by precedent but it is also in my opinion clearly within the purview of the Constitution and the province of Congress. That clause about which some gentlemen here stickle so much gives Congress power to raise revenue; and what does it say you may do with that revenue? It says you may pay the public debt and you may provide for the general welfare by appropriations of that revenue.

I am not one of those who hold the doctrine that we can lay taxation for any other purpose than revenue; but I hold that we have a large discretion in the appropriation of that revenue. There is a great difference between the power to legislate and to administer affairs and the power to appropriate. So long as we do not invade the legislative and administrative rights of the States we have immense discretion in regard to appropriations. By that general discretion alone we have pensioned the soldiers; by that alone we maintain the academies at West Point and Annapolis; by that we assisted the Philadelphia exposition; by that we maintain the Agricultural Bureau; and by that power constitutionally and patriotically administered we can give this well-guaranteed assistance to our country in this national enterprise.

If it were necessary I would favor not only a loan, but under so wise an administration of the public moneys I would favor gifts of these funds to aid great sections of the Union in order to enlighten our people, to advance commerce and to provide for the general welfare. The great error is in usurpations of legislative and of administrative functions, and in the method of laying taxes where the Constitution is violated, the States are invaded, and where no citizen can count the cost; appropriations are measured by the people, and if clearly for the public weal they are warranted by the Constitution. I trust the House will grant this appropriation, but that it will not seek to make an exception in this case, by the adoption of so unjust, so exceptional, and so proscriptive an amendment as that now proposed.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose this bill; on the contrary I intend to support it. But I wish to emphasize, if I can, one point. Only one gentleman or perhaps two belonging to the opposite party from my own have, so far as they have expressed themselves in this discussion, adopted what I consider a consistent attitude in regard to this measure. There is but one clause in the Constitution which authorizes the Congress of the United States to expend this million of dollars or to loan it. The clause which authorizes Congress to levy taxes to provide for the common defense and general welfare is the source from which Congress must derive its authority to loan this money or to expend it. There is not another word or letter in the instrument that will authorize this expenditure. Gentlemen are here asking for this appropriation; and I say, "You shall have it."

But when asked as to the source to which they trace the right of Congress to make this appropriation, some of them are silent, while others say, as did the gentleman last on the floor, that we have a large discretion in the expenditure of money after we have raised it, although we must raise it for revenue only; a strange construction to put upon the Constitution when it is confessedly an instrument giving to Congress limited powers.

The only gentlemen on the other side who, so far as I have heard, have taken a consistent position in the debate upon this bill are the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who said there is no authority in the Constitution for this appropriation, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER], who argued to the same effect. The eloquent chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. TUCKER] is as silent as the grave on this occasion, although when the great Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia was to be provided for he raised his voice in holy horror as a constitutional lawyer against an appropriation or a loan.

Other gentlemen on the same side sit quiet. What I find fault with is that when you ask for an appropriation for a great enterprise like this, which I deem a just and fair appropriation, you are silent as to the constitutional question; but when we ask that duties shall be laid for the purpose of providing for the general welfare and protecting the industries of this country—the industries of the North and the South, reaching every section of this whole land, you raise your voices and say, "There is no constitutional power."

Gentlemen, these are inconsistent attitudes for the Democratic party to assume. They can not be justified on any principle. When you come here asking for such an appropriation as this, you must admit that the power resides in Congress to go farther. How much farther? Why to take, under that eighth section of the first article, every step which will result in providing for the common defense and the general welfare. It is there that you get your power to appropriate eight or ten million dollars for educational purposes, if you pass that measure; and it was passed in the Senate by a vote of Democrats as well as Republicans on that ground. It is there you get your power to establish an agricultural bureau whereby you gather information and send it broadcast over this country, whereby you send out seed and everything calculated to educate the farmer. What is that but providing for the general welfare? And it is there that you get authority to levy such rates of taxes as will discriminate in favor of American industries and American manufactures. When you come forward and act with myself and others in supporting that policy, which is a sound one in its principles and its effects, I shall feel better justified in saying that I stand with you shoulder to shoulder in support of this exposition which is to become a great educator of the public mind and thus subserve the welfare of our common country.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I must dissent from the views advanced by several gentlemen touching the constitutional power of Congress to pass this bill. I do not think that in order to justify support of this measure it is necessary to resort to that clause of the Constitution which I have heard denominated the "blanket clause;" that is, the general-welfare clause. I am not one of those who think that that confers any power whatever. The powers are enumerated in the Constitution wherein Congress has the right to make appropriation of money. But, sir, that question is not involved here. This is not an appropriation proper. It is a loan. While it is an appropriation in form, it is nevertheless only a loan upon security for its return.

There is no constitutional power, in my judgment, to make an appropriation outside of the provisions of the Constitution; but I ask, has not Congress power to make loan of the money or property of the United States? Is not that a constant practice here? If Congress has not the power to make this loan on security for its return, then all your legislation lending tents to soldiers' reunions and disposing of other property are equally outside of the Constitution.

This loan will not do any harm for the reason there is a surplus in the Treasury. The only thing to do, in my judgment, is for Congress to see that proper security is taken for the repayment of the money loaned and its return to the Treasury. If that is done, this will do good and not harm.

Some discretion must be left to Congress to be exercised in reference to the property and money of the United States. This, mark you, is not an appropriation outside of the Constitution. It is a loan. It is competent for the Government to make deposit, and it does it with bankers all over the country wherever it thinks proper. That money is to be returned; and if this money is returned what harm will be done? If it is outside of the power of Congress to do this, then the action of Congress would be hampered in providing sufficient legislation.

Mr. ELLIS. I move the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed

the chair, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6856) to provide for the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. ELLIS. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and pending that motion I move all debate on the pending amendment be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. YORK. I have an amendment I desire to offer.

Mr. ELLIS. The gentleman will have ample opportunity to do so. I only move to close debate on the pending amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion to go into committee was also agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House debate on the pending amendment is limited to ten minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is hardly worth while, Mr. Chairman, for me to take up the time of this committee.

Mr. MORRISON. Then, why do you do it?

Mr. HISCOCK. But I have a word to say now in reference to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], who has just interrupted me. As I was about to say, it is hardly worth while for me to take up the time of the committee in calling attention to the constitutional question involved in the pending measure, for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has done the best he could to rally his party in support of the Constitution. So very much has been said heretofore in regard to violating the sacred charter by gentlemen both able and accomplished, but who are strangely silent to-day, that I deem it my duty to recall for the information of the House some of their utterances. In my judgment this bill should be committed to the Judiciary Committee to report the views of the members of that committee on the constitutional question.

In this connection I ask attention to what was said by the learned constitutional lawyer and accomplished chairman of that committee [Mr. TUCKER] on another occasion, when the bill for the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia was under consideration. He then used this remarkable language:

The gentleman who preceded me [Mr. FRYE] said that the Constitution and constitutional questions are an enigma to him. I am not surprised at it, looking at his mode of interpreting it. Any gentleman who will ever raise a constitutional question after this bill shall have passed upon the interpretation adopted to sustain its constitutionality will really be worthy of commiseration.

I say, sir, that the spirit of the centennial is obedience to the Constitution. And when gentlemen tell me that the Centennial Exhibition is to be a manifestation of the inventive power of the American mind, I answer that the greatest invention of American genius has been left out of view entirely. And what is that? The greatest invention of American genius is this: the absolute subordination of governmental power to the rigid, inflexible, and unbending rule of the Constitution. In no other country on the earth has this principle of one inflexible law supreme over all ordinary acts of legislation ever been inaugurated among men. And I say that the gentlemen around me will better keep the centennial anniversary by a spirit of honest adherence to the Constitution of the country than by all the material exhibition that can be aggregated in Philadelphia.

I did not mean to say anything that would even put my friend to an answer.

He was replying to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT].

I only wish to remind my Democratic friends that this Government has no mission except to execute its powers and perform its duties under and in subjection to the supreme will of the land, the Constitution of the country.

I commend to the gentlemen on the other side of the House who will vote for this bill, and who voted against the other, the following earnest appeal from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER]:

Talk about sentimental patriotism! I have as much of it as most people, but my sentimental patriotism would not allow me to trifle with the solemn obligation I took at the Speaker's desk when I was sworn in as a member of this House.

Now, sir, I put it on another ground—and I beg my Democratic friends around me to hear me, and I beg the gentlemen on the Republican side of this Chamber to hear me—I put it on the ground that the only limit to this growing corruption in the country is a limitation upon the power of the Government.

Still further he uses this language;

Mr. Chairman, I will not trespass upon the patience of the House further than to say this, that in every country there may be an ultimate analysis of all its great interests into two classes, the tax-consumer and the tax-payer. And as Lord Bacon once said about the wolf and the sheep, "The sheep are never too many for the wolf," so you will find the multiplication of jobs under your indefinite and unlimited claim of power will never be too great for the tax-consumer. The man who feeds at the Federal crib does not care how much taxation is wrung from the pockets of hard-working people at home so he is filled and he is fatténed.

I believe the mission of this Government at this time is economy, retrenchment, and reform. I know there is nothing in the world so hard as to make an available speech for economy against sentimental patriotism.

Again in the same argument he uses this language:

You have declared in a late resolution with great unanimity on the other side of the Chamber, and with some discussion on this, that subsidies to private corporations are a thing we are too pure to indulge in. But yet, sir, so soon as a private corporation comes here and asks a subsidy for its enterprise, because it calls itself a centennial corporation and talks spread-eagle and sentimental patriotism, we say, "Oh, it would be unpatriotic to refuse it." There is logic for you!

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] grew religious in his illustration and in the fervor of his opposition to the unconstitutionality of any such action as that then proposed in the case of the Centennial Exposition, as it must be of course in this for a like reason. He said:

When Saul, the King of Israel, was ordered by the God of Israel to destroy the whole of a particular nation and all their wealth and pride, in order there might be no plundering (for there were plunderers and jobbers in that day, too, I have no doubt), he determined to save the best of the cattle and the best of the flock, and to do honor to God, which was doing honor to theocratic patriotism, by making great sacrifices on the altars in the temple. When Samuel, the prophet, came and saw it, Saul boasted of what he had done for the glory of God and the honor of his country, and sought thus to propitiate his approval and avoid his rebuke. But Samuel met him with these solemn words: "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams!" To obey the Constitution of the country is better than immolations to sentimental patriotism; and Almighty God and our people will be better satisfied with obedience than with our splendid ceremonial. Can we justly put more burdens on this people?

I might, Mr. Chairman, produce like quotations from the remarks of other leading Democrats, but my limited time forbids. I have before me the record which was made upon the passage of the bill for the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, and as I have watched the vote of members passing between the tellers I think I have noticed a change of conviction since then upon this great constitutional question. I trust the record will show none on the part of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to have a minute more on this subject.

Mr. ELLIS. I will yield to my friend from New York a minute longer.

Mr. HISCOCK. I noticed in looking over that vote that the gentleman from Illinois is recorded against the passage of that bill. I have no doubt he also grounded his opposition to it upon a constitutional basis.

Mr. MORRISON. Do you find anything like that in the RECORD?

Mr. HISCOCK. What other objection could he have had to it, if he votes for this? Is it possible? I trust not. Gentlemen are more liberal in construing the Constitution in supporting this bill, more liberal in making appropriations for this New Orleans project than for a like purpose in the North. I do not believe gentlemen will be found who will stretch their consciences more or lose sight of that sacred instrument, have their vision the more obscured, because this money is to be expended at New Orleans rather than at Philadelphia or some other Northern point?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call back the attention of the committee from the wanderings of gentlemen to the practical point at issue here. That point is whether this committee will compel this board of management to give $1,000,000 security for the reimbursement of this loan to the Government.

Now I ask the committee to remember in the first place that when Congress loaned to Philadelphia in 1876 $1,500,000, a half million more than the loan asked for in this bill, the amount of security fixed for that loan was only a half million of dollars; and in no manner was the bond so stringent in its provisions as the provisions of this bill have been drawn. Philadelphia, in point of population, is about four times the city of New Orleans. In point of wealth she is ten times that of the city of New Orleans.

I ask members of the committee to remember that individuals of the city of New Orleans have put their hands into their pockets and have subscribed in the neighborhood of $600,000 for this purpose. Is it done for their city or for their State? No, sir, but for you of the North, for you of the West, for you of the far East, for everybody in this land, and for the benefit of the entire American Union—not only for its domestic commerce, but also its foreign commerce, for the sake of giving the people of this great Union a lesson which will be full of benefit and full of blessings to them. It is for the purpose of bringing our people together and instructing each other as to the resources, the material resources and wealth of all the balance of the country. It is for the purpose of bringing the far nations of the East, whose commerce we hope one day to control, to see what we can make, to see what we have, to see what our productions are, to mingle with us, and to find out what kind of people we are. In one word, it is to get a glance at the greatness and prosperity of this country.

And, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this is national and international, I do not see why we should deal differently with the city of New Orleans and with the board of management connected with this exposition than we dealt with Philadelphia in 1876. I do not see why in this case we should ask these gentlemen to assume the sole and entire risk connected with the success of an enterprise which is national in its benefits. I do not see why this should be done, especially, Mr. Chairman, when the Government's interest is already guarded as fully and as completely as human legislation can guard it; when it is already entitled under the provisions of this bill to a lien, after the current expenses have been paid, upon all of the assets of the exposition.

Therefore I ask the committee to vote down this amendment. I ask them not to place upon this board of management this hampering restriction and subject them to the hardships which it would necessarily entail upon them. I hope it will not be the pleasure of this committee to enact into a law an amendment which would place upon them the entire risk involved in the success of this great undertaking when no such proposition was embodied in the loan made to the city of Philadelphia. It is not just to them to do so.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Delaware, which the Clerk will report.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 26, noes 82.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. YORK. I hope the gentleman will not make that motion now. I gave notice that I was to offer an amendment.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not desire to cut off my friend from North Carolina from offering his amendment.

Mr. YORK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

"And be it further provided, That $500,000 be appropriated for the benefit of the North Carolina State fair, to be held at Raleigh this year; to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the draft of the president of the State Agricultural Society of said State."

Mr. ELLIS. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. YORK. If the money in the Treasury is to be loaned out I desire my State to have a proportionate part of it. I think clearly the bill is unconstitutional. But if we are going to stretch the Constitution so that we can loan the public money out, I desire to see the State of North Carolina have its full share.

Mr. ELLIS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina will suspend. Does the gentleman from Louisiana make the point of order now?

Mr. ELLIS. Yes, sir. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. YORK. I do not see why the amendment is not germane. If New Orleans is to have a loan of a million dollars, why should not North Carolina have a loan of $500,000? I believe the amendment is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to offer an amendment, and I request the attention of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS]. After the word "act," in line 14, I propose to insert these words:

Upon being satisfied $500,000 has been contributed and paid in for the purposes of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition.

Mr. ELLIS. I will accept that.

Mr. HISCOCK. I propose also, after the word "hereafter," in the following line, to insert these words:

Upon being satisfied that $1,000,000 has been contributed by the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not accept that.

Mr. HISCOCK. It seems to me that that should be accepted also. As I understand by this bill and by the whereases in it, this corporation to which we loan the money has already contributed half a million dollars, and I understand we are voting for this bill upon the distinct pledge asserted in the preamble that they are to contribute half a million more. Now, if it is the intention of that company to carry out this pledge—and if such is not the intention this should be stricken from the preamble—why not make it a condition to the making of the two second payments that the whole sum of one million is paid in? If another $500,000 is promised by this company, why not make it a condition that it be all paid into the Treasury?

Mr. ELLIS. I stated in the explanation I endeavored to make of the bill that the city of New Orleans and private gentlemen had subscribed and had paid in in the neighborhood of $700,000, and that the State was expected to contribute, it may be $50,000, it may be $100,000. The governor will recommend, I think, $100,000. The Legislature meets next Monday.

Now, I see no reason for compelling these gentlemen to increase their contributions to a million of dollars. They are prepared with what they have to make a creditable local exhibition, and they propose with the aid of the Government to double it, and more than double it in point of space and in point of interest. This has been rendered necessary by the national and international character which has been given to it by the act of Congress and by the invitations of the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw the amendment and offer it again, that I may add a few words. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the language of the preamble.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has intimated to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] that his time has expired. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] has been recognized.

Mr. HISCOCK. I beg pardon of the Chair. I thought I had the floor by again offering my amendment.

Mr. CLARDY. It was not my intention to participate in the discussion of this bill. But not being able to vote in accordance with the requests of gentlemen in my district for whose opinions I entertain great respect and whose esteem I value, I embrace this opportunity to assign some of the reasons which control my action. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that the Congress of the United States has the powers of the British Parliament. I do not believe, as some gentlemen seem to believe, that we are unrestrained by a written Constitution. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] has placed upon the provision of the Constitution which is looked to by some gentlemen as the source of our authority to pass the bill under consideration the only construction that it is susceptible of. He very correctly construes the general-welfare clause, as it is called, not as creating a substantive grant of power, but as indicating the object of the power "to lay and collect taxes," &c. This is the construction placed upon the words "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare" by Justice Story and Mr. Sedgwick.

Even if it should be held that these general words were not intended to point out the purpose of the preceding words in the same clause, still under the doctrine of ejusdem generis it would create no new power. But I can not agree with him that under some other undefined provision of that instrument Congress has the power to loan money. The gentleman referred to no clause or provision of the Constitution to sustain his position, but invoked the instances in which Congress has loaned flags, cannon, &c., for patriotic celebrations as precedents for the passage of the pending bill. Congress has loaned flags to be returned in specie. Congress rather changes the custody for the time being of these flags from the officers of the Government to other persons, and they are not loans in the proper sense of that word. And, besides, these are matters of such small moment that no question of their constitutionality has ever been raised.

But even if it be true that Congress has violated the Constitution in that respect, is that any reason why it should do so now? Has the Congress of the United States the power to tax the people in order to raise money that it may loan it to corporations to enable them to make attractive and successful exhibitions as is proposed in this bill? I do not think that Congress has any such power, and hence I shall vote against this measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. WOLFORD. I shall vote for this bill, and I am not particular whether this money is to be a donation or a loan; the one will suit my purpose just as well as the other.

I think that the best interests of this Government will be promoted by becoming acquainted with the commerce of the world and seeing among us men interested in commerce all over the world. I think a million blessings will come, that will more than compensate for this million of dollars. Those blessings will come in the breaking down of prejudices between the North and the South and in making our people once more a united, a great, and a happy people in heart and soul. With that view I propose to vote for this bill.

I believe that it is perfectly constitutional, and I base that belief upon the power given by the Constitution of the United States to Congress to provide for the general welfare of the United States. I agree with Judge Story that that is a distinct power, and I believe that under that grant of power the Congress of the United States has authority to pass any law that will do good, that will bless the people, that will make them happy.

I can not agree with my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] or my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] that the Democratic party are not for doing good, that they are not for blessing the nation. We can not go for your unjust protective tariff, because it robs one portion of the people to give to another; because it takes $5 out of the pockets of the laboring community in order to put it into the pockets of monopolies. That is the reason we can not go for that. There is no power under the general-welfare clause to do evil; there is no power under that clause to blast, to wither, to curse. The Democratic party holds to the doctrine that you have no right to rob one man to pay to another. That is the difference between us.

But when you come to a broad principle that embraces the North and the South, that embraces the whole people of the country, that embraces all the nations of the world, that lifts up and dignifies and adorns and blesses the nation, you will find the Democrats always to the fore. You may object to this bill because it is sectional, because it may bless the South. I go for it because it will bless the whole people, will bless every portion of this nation; because it will make us all one, will unite us in interest as in principle, and make a great people out of the people of the United States. That is the reason I propose to vote for this bill, and I have not a doubt about the constitutionality of it.

Mr. ELLIS. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to submit the amendment which I offered—the one which was not accepted by the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLIS. The gentleman offered his amendment and then withdrew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the question must be taken upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York, which the clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "act," in line 14, the words "upon being satisfied that $500,000 has been contributed and paid in for the purposes of the exposition by the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition."

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand that amendment has been accepted. It is the other amendment, farther down, which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment must be voted upon by the Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now offer a further amendment.

Mr. ELLIS. I make the point of order that the gentleman offered that amendment and then withdrew it, and can not now offer it again.

Mr. ANDERSON. He renews the amendment, as he has a right to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "thereafter," in line 15, these words, "upon being satisfied that $1,000,000 has been contributed by the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition for the purposes of said exposition."

Mr. HISCOCK. I am willing to modify that amendment in this respect, if it will make it acceptable to the other side, so that all sums which have been contributed shall amount to $1,000,000, in order that the amount invested by the friends of this measure shall be as much as is asked to be contributed on the part of the Government. It seems to me that I am warranted in making this suggestion in view of that portion of the preamble which I now read:

Whereas the stockholders of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition have furnished, to aid in the completion of the said enterprise, $500,000, and have determined to increase the same to $1,000,000 by a vote of a majority of said stockholders, &c.

We are advised by this preamble that that is the sum to be contributed. It seems to me, therefore, that we have a right to annex to this bill as a condition the fulfillment of the promise which has been made.

The question was taken upon the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with a recommendation that the amendments be adopted and the bill as amended be passed.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DORSHEIMER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6856) to provide for the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended be passed.

Mr. ELLIS. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the question will be taken upon the amendments in gross reported from the Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection.

The question was taken, and the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. ELLIS. Upon that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 53 in the affirmative—more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 132, nays 87, not voting 104; as follows.

Mr. ROSECRANS with Mr. LAIRD.
Mr. LIBBEY with Mr. LAMB.
Mr. BUCKNER with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. ELLIS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House now adjourn.

Pending the motion to adjourn, the following business was transacted by unanimous consent:

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. 82) in relation to ceremonies to be authorized upon the completion of the Washington Monument.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DOCKERY, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. TALBOTT, until Monday next.

To Mr. VANCE, until Friday, the 16th instant, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. O'FERRALL, for three days.

To Mr. HILL, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. FORAN, for three days, on account of a death in his family.

To Mr. WASHBURN, for ten days, on account of important business.

The motion of Mr. MORRISON that the House adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHACE: Petition for repeal of internal-revenue taxes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COOK: Petition of 50 citizens of Ottumwa, Iowa, relative to the Chinese restriction act—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 9, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, before the Journal of yesterday's proceedings is approved I should be glad if the Secretary would again read the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] asking a conference and what he asked a conference about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That part of the Journal of yesterday will be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

On motion by Mr. FRYE, that the Senate ask a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 2228) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and the amendments thereto, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore,

Mr. HARRIS raised a question of order, to wit——

Mr. BECK. That is all I care about having read. I do not think the entry in the Journal is proper. The Senator from Maine asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, as I understood. A conference does not mean anything unless it is for some purpose. The Journal does not say what the conference was to be about. There was to be a conference for something, and I think the Journal is incomplete unless it tells what the conference was to be about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Journal states the question precisely as the Chair stated it to the Senate on the motion of the Senator from Maine. The Chair does not remember the words of the Senator from Maine in making his motion, but the Chair thinks the Journal correctly expresses the question that was stated from the Chair to the Senate. Does the Senator from Kentucky desire to make any motion in regard to the Journal?

Mr. BECK. If the Chair is satisfied that that is a full record of what took place, I have no objection.

Mr. BAYARD. I will state to the Chair that the record of our debates is not in accord with the Journal as read at the desk. I read from to-day's RECORD, page 4367:

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the President of the Senate appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BECK. That is the way the RECORD reads, and I thought the Journal ought to read the same way.

Mr. BAYARD. The Journal does not contain that, as I heard it read from the desk, but simply a statement that the Senator from Maine moved the appointment of a conference, and not that the conference should be upon the disagreeing votes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that it is the constant practice of the Chair during all the time that the present occupant of it has been in the Senate, when a Senator rises to make a motion in substance, to state the question as he supposes it to be intended in its parliamentary form. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on the same page, following what the Senator from Delaware has read, states:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate ask a conference with the House of Representatives upon the amendments proposed to House bill 2228.

That was the official statement of the question to the Senate, though the Chair may have been in error in not putting the question in precisely the same form that the Senator from Maine proposed.

Mr. BAYARD. I submit to the Chair that the Journal ought to correspond with the precise motion made. As a matter of fact the motion was made for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and the Journal, I think, should express the fact for which the motion was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal always states the motion that is stated by the presiding officer to the body and not the language of the Senator who makes the motion. The Chair believes that to have been the constant practice. The correction of the Journal, however, is a matter within the control of the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I submit that the Journal does not even show what the President pro tempore laid before the Senate. The President pro tempore said:

The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate ask a conference with the House of Representatives upon the amendments proposed to House bill 2228.

Even that does not appear on the Journal. I want the Journal to show something.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That part of the Journal will be read again.

The Secretary read as follows:

On motion by Mr. FRYE, that the Senate ask a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 2228) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine, and encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and the amendments thereto, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

Mr. BECK. It neither refers to the disagreeing votes of the two Houses nor to the amendments made by the Senate, but simply to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky is in error as to what the Journal shows in regard to the question stated by the Chair, for the Journal does say "the amendments" to the House bill.

Mr. BECK. Then I did not hear it correctly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

On motion by Mr. FRYE, that the Senate ask a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 2228) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine, and encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and the amendments thereto, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am inclined to think the Chair has pursued the usual course in stating the proper motion, but the motion put by the Senator from Maine was different, as the debate which follows immediately shows. For instance, I at once said that there were no disagreeing votes between the two Houses and therefore the motion could not be put, sustaining the point of order of the Senator from Tennessee. The Journal puts the Senator from Tennessee and myself in an awkward position.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had stated the question in the form as it stands on the Journal in substance, and almost literally, before the Senator from Tennessee made his point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think both the Senator from Tennessee and myself are too old members not to know that either the Senate or the House may call for a conference upon any matter whatever, even on the point of appointing a page or in regard to the slightest thing, without reference to a disagreement; but my point and his point, as I understood it, was that on a bill no conference could be asked until there was a disagreement in reference to a question between the two Houses. If the conference was merely in respect to a bill and amendment or in respect to any matter, a conference could be asked by either House upon any subject whatever at any stage, even before the passage of the bill. Such a thing might not be a violation of parliamentary law, but it seems to me that to appoint a committee of conference on a bill and amendments before there is a disagreement on the subject would be, if not unparliamentary, at least so unusual as to excite remark; and therefore the observations made by the Senator from Tennessee and myself at once called attention to the fact that there was no controversy between the two Houses, and that the motion was not a proper one. The motion of the Senator from Maine being to have a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, we naturally responded that there were no disagreeing votes, and therefore that the motion was not a proper one.

However I have no objection to letting the facts stand just as they are. The motion, no doubt, was stated by the Chair precisely as it is entered upon the Journal, at least that would be the natural and proper course, and the Secretary would note it so, and I am perfectly willing to let it stand. But the question that comes up hereafter is open to debate. I do not wish to make any question upon the record, but I wish to make a question upon the practice of ordering committees of conference upon any bill until there is a disagreement between the two Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Journal Clerk can not enter on the Journal any motion until it is stated from the Chair. The Chair supposes that to be clear parliamentary law. The Journal Clerk therefore properly recorded, as the Chair thinks, the statement of the motion as made by the Chair, without reference to the form in which the Senator making it put it. The Chair, supposing himself to be following the constant practice of the Senate and all other parliamentary bodies, took the substance as he understood it instead of the form of the proposition of the Senator from Maine, and stated the question to the Senate to be on the motion to request a conference on the amendments of the Senate to the House bill. If the Chair was in error in that, of course that can be corrected. The Chair supposed he was following the constant practice in such cases.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Tennessee put his point of order on the ground that there had as yet been no disagreement between the two bodies; that it was not in order to ask a conference unless there were disagreeing votes; but the Chair ruled the motion in order on the distinct ground that it was in order to ask a conference on any subject whether there had been disagreeing votes or not; that, whether usual or not, it was in order. The Chair said:

The question whether it is premature or unusual is not a question for the Chair to decide.

Then the Senator from Kentucky took his appeal, but the Chair had put his ruling on the distinct ground that the motion was in order whether there were disagreeing votes or not, and the Chair then again stated the question to the Senate, as appears by the RECORD, saying:

The Chair has overruled the point of order upon the ground that it is within the principles and usages of parliamentary law, although the instances are rare, for either House to ask a conference with the other upon any subject that either House desires to consult with the other about.

So that the ground of the ruling was very distinctly put from the Chair to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Journal of yesterday's proceedings will stand approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of Elwood Post, No. 61, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, and a petition of Post No. 105, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, praying that a pension of $8 a month be granted to every Union soldier and sailor who served sixty days or more in the late war of the rebellion, and who under existing laws is not entitled to that or a greater sum; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM. I present an affidavit of a number of citizens of Montana Territory in relation to the route of the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad, and also a petition signed by some 400 or more citizens of that Territory, residents of the Clark's Fork mining district, in favor of granting the right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad across the northern border of the Yellowstone National Park to Clark's Fork mining district. The bill for this purpose has been reported, and hence the papers may lie upon the table. It is the desire of some members of the committee that these papers be printed. I therefore move that the papers be printed and lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a memorial of Post 52, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lewisburg, Pa., in favor of certain of the recommendations of the committee of that orgaization in relation to pensions; which was referrrd to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT. I present some papers relating to the claim of George W. Morse, in the nature of additional evidence and testimony respecting the claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PLATT. I ask for the adoption of the following order:

Ordered, That the petition and papers of George W. Morse on the files of the Senate be referred to the Committee on Patents, new evidence having been filed in support of the claim since the last report made thereon.

Mr. HOAR. I thought that case had gone to the Court of Claims. I understood it had.

Mr. PLATT. It has not gone to the Court of Claims, and this additional testimony is filed as the case is still before the committee. The object of the order is to transfer all the papers, both new and old, to the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to entering the order proposed by the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears none, and it is ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 84) providing for the supply of depositories of public documents with the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and Statutes at Large, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3932) directing the Adjutant-General of the United States Army to place the name of James M. Thomas on the muster-rolls of Company C, Second Regiment Tennessee Mounted Infantry, and for other purposes, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1845) authorizing the Secretary of War to set apart certain lands of the Fort Bidwell military reservation for cemetery purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3936) for the relief of Benjamin F. Millard, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MITCHELL subsequently said: I wish to have the vote by which House bill 3936 was indefinitely postponed reconsidered, and that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Military Affairs instructs me to report favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 239) to fill vacancies existing in the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and I beg immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It appoints William B. Franklin, of Connecticut, John C. Black, of Illinois, and Thomas W. Hyde, of Maine, managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, to fill vacancies occasioned by the expiration of the terms of office, on the 21st day of April, 1884, of William B. Franklin, of Connecticut, John M. Palmer, of Illinois, and Charles W. Roberts, of Maine.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to the fact that in the title of the bill the word "Home" is used in the singular, and in the body of the bill it is used in the plural, "Managers of the National 'Homes.'"

Mr. HAWLEY. It is a typographical error. I did not notice it. I suppose it would have to go back to the House if amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Probably it would. It may be a typographical error in the print and not in the engrossed resolution that came from the House. The Chair will cause it to be looked at and inform the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] tells me it should be in the singular, because these homes are called "branches" of the main home.

Mr. HARRISON. The law describes it as the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and the different homes are called branches.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the error, if there be any error, is in the body of the joint resolution and not in the title. The Chair will have the original sent for.

Mr. HAWLEY. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana, but let the inquiry be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently said: The Chair will inform the Senator from Connecticut that the print of the House joint resolution in respect of the managers of the Soldiers' Home is correct, according to the engrossed joint resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand that it follows the engrossed copy, but it seems to me that the error is not an essential one in any respect, and being merely a grammatical error it would not affect the title of these officers in any way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the title of the joint resolution will stand as reported.

DISTRIBUTION OF CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Joint Committee on the Library to report back the joint resolution (H. Res. 231) providing for the distribution of the Congressional Globe. As this involves no appropriation, but is only for the distribution of certain documents, I ask that it be considered now.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Public Printer is hereby authorized and directed to deliver to the document-rooms of the Department of the Interior the bound volumes of the Congressional Globe purchased from Messrs. Rives, and such other bound volumes of the Globe and RECORD prior to the Forty-eighth Congress as are in his charge; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed from said volumes to supply as far as possible existing deficiencies in the sets of these documents in the following libraries in the order named:

First. The library of the Executive Mansion, the library of each of the Executive Departments of the Government, the library of the Supreme Court, and the library of the Court of Claims.

Secondly. The State and Territorial libraries of the United States.

Thirdly. Such other libraries in the United States as contain more than 5,000 volumes each. And the Public Printer is hereby directed upon the requisition of the Secretary of the Interior to deliver to him such volumes of the Globe now in his charge in unbound form as may be desired by any of the above-named libraries for the completion of the set of the same, which shall be forwarded to said library upon receiving its assurance that it will cause the volumes thus supplied to be bound and placed upon its shelves: Provided, That before such distribution is made the Public Printer shall deliver to the libraries of the Senate and House of Representatives such volumes as are required to complete fifty sets in each.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress the libraries to which these documents are forwarded, and the number of volumes delivered to each.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. My attention was not called to that measure while it was being read. I am not aware that the matter has been before the Committee on Printing. From what committee does it come?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on the Library, reported now by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. It simply distributes documents already printed. They are now with the Public Printer. They are the Congressional Globes purchased by an appropriation made at a former Congress.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. The joint resolution proposes to transfer the documents to the Secretary of the Interior for distribution. The Secretary of the Interior has facilities for distribution and the documents ought to be gotten rid of. The Public Printer is very anxious indeed to have them out of the way.

Mr. HAWLEY. A great mass of matter was purchased, some of it not of very much value. We have not considered the joint resolution. The Committee on Printing usually has control of these subjects.

Mr. SHERMAN. The resolution was sent to the Joint Committee on the Library, and they considered it very carefully. The House of Representatives passed the joint resolution some time ago, and the matter ought to be disposed of.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no objection if the Senator thinks the resolution is a proper one.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LAPHAM introduced a bill (S. 2184) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the Niagara River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2185) respecting a bridge at Tonawanda, in the State of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LAPHAM. I wish to state that both these bills have the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 2186) for an additional appropriation for the construction of a harbor of refuge at Port Orford, upon the Pacific coast; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GROOME. I introduce a bill which I desire to take the place of one of the same title which I introduced at an early day of the session, the bill (S. 2187) to regulate the rank of engineer officers of the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GROOME (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2188) for the relief of the heirs of James E. S. Holliday, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2189) to authorize the Washington and Chesapeake Railroad Company and the Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad Company to enter the District of Columbia over the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, or either of them; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2190) granting a pension to Norman Kaufman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FARLEY introduced a bill (S. 2191) for the relief of the State of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 2192) for the relief of John Ellis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 2193) granting a pension to Ferdinand Hercher, late hospital steward, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask an order that the claimant, Helen M. Fiedler, have permission to withdraw her papers, which have been filed in the Senate accompanying her bill, and which bill has been favorably considered and passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be granted if there be no objection.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Mathilde Victer be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6856) to provide for the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition; and

A bill (H. R. 2984) granting additional pension to Apolline A. Blair, widow of the late Francis P. Blair, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 2093) to provide for the appointment of an acting secretary of the Smithsonian Institution; and Joint resolution (S. R. 81) filling an existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. 82) in relation to ceremonies to be authorized upon the completion of the Washington Monument; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PUYALLUP BRANCH OF NORTHERN PACIFIC.

Mr. DAWES. If there be no further morning business I move to proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is further morning business on the desk of the presiding officer. "Concurrent and other resolutions" are now in order, and the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] yesterday. It will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to withhold granting patents to or recognizing any claim made by the Northern Pacific Railroad adjoining and on account of what is known as the Puyallup Branch, built many years ago, until this Congress shall take action on the question of the forfeiture of lands granted to said road.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, the matter involved in the resolution would seem so plain that there is no necessity that it should be referred to any committee; and just at this stage of business, if it be referred to so important a committee as that on the Judiciary, it would be almost impossible probably that it should receive action by that committee and then action by the Senate at this session.

The request in the resolution is simple. It invades no rights and imperils none on the part of this railroad company, while it may in an important matter protect the interests of the Government. The resolution relates to some lines which were built by what is known as the Puyallup Branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad for a coal-road. The road was built six or seven years ago, and never until this time have they come to the Department asking for the appointment of commissioners with the view of obtaining patents for the land. It was not built at the time with the idea that it was to be a portion either of the main line or of the branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad. It was built from an interior point to an interior point. If it were a portion of the Cascade Branch, which we claim it can not be, then it would be allowing a railroad company to go from any point of its road where lands were extremely valuable and build a few miles and obtain patents for lands along that line, and might possibly never connect or build at the other end of the branch.

These lands are valuable. They are coal lands, worth at least $20 per acre, and far more than that. Any portions that may not be coal lands are among the finest timber lands in Washington Territory, and in that event they are worth $20 per acre and more. Where is the injury or harm to this railroad company in asking the Department to withhold the sanction or the recognition of the railroad company as having any title to the lands until Congress shall have acted upon the question which is now before both branches regarding the forfeiture of the land grant?

I do not know what the action of the Department might be should nothing be done here; but we do know that this company never contemplated until within a few weeks that they had any title to these lands. It has not been recognized by them as being a portion of their main line or their branch, and was not built as such. It was built for the purpose of reaching certain coal-fields and as a local road, and the best evidence of that fact is that the railroad company suffered these lands to remain for six or seven years after the road was built without any application for them.

Is it to be supposed that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, coming up at times for inspection, if they had title or could secure title to the lands given them upon thirty miles of this railroad, would have suffered that matter to rest year after year until six or seven years had elapsed and until the time that there became danger that the American people through Congress would declare a forfeiture of the lands they had not properly earned? At that juncture, and not till then, we find this company importuning the President of the United States to appoint commissioners, and the commissioners were appointed. Therefore it is proper for the Senate at this time to ask that the issuing of patents or certificates shall be suspended until there shall be at least some action of this Congress as to the question of the forfeiture of the lands.

These are the simple facts in regard to the matter. There is no necessity that I should go further into details. This road is not a portion of either the main line or branch. The company never for six years claimed that they had any title to these lands. Even if they do now come with a pretense of claim, when the whole matter is being investigated and is to be settled by the action of this Congress, it becomes necessary and proper that we should at least ask a suspension, they having lain silent for six years seeking no recognition of a title to these lands. Now, is it injustice to them to ask that they shall wait a few weeks until Congress shall have considered this matter and declared what the policy of the Government is to be in regard to the lands which are claimed to be forfeited by this railroad company?

Mr. CONGER. Accepting the statement of the Senator who has just taken his seat, surely this is a matter which one branch of Congress should not act upon in this abrupt and direct way, affecting claims to lands, without the investigation of a committee. The best argument I could advance is what the Senator has said himself. I assume that every word the Senator has said in regard to the facts of this case is true, and I do not know but that it is all true, and that the Senator understands it; but it seems to me something like the case of a Western lawyer, who told the jury when he was addressing them that in that case there were three distinct facts, two of which were true. It may be one of that class of cases.

Mr. President, I doubt myself whether the Senate of the United States by a resolution has any right to direct the officers of this Government. In short, if there is any question at all about the proposed action of the Departments it depends solely and entirely upon the legal rights of the parties, and the Committee on the Judiciary is a very proper one, if there is any necessity for any inquiry on the subject, to report to the Senate its opinion upon the question.

I will not by any statement in regard to the facts delay the Senate longer, for I have no doubt that the proper disposition of this resolution is to have the report of a proper committee.

Mr. SLATER. I trust that this resolution will be passed by the Senate without a reference to a committee. As I understand the facts it is not an unusual thing to request a Department to withhold action in view of contemplated legislation on some particular subject. That is as far as I understand this resolution goes.

I do not know what may be the actual facts in relation to this particular section of the Northern Pacific Railroad, whether it has been built fully within the terms of the law or not; but there is a question that lies behind this, and not only this particular section but every other section of that road that has been received by the Department, or rather I should say for the acceptance of which commissioners have been appointed since 1879. As I understand the decisions of the court of last resort, it has been decided on one or more occasions that statutes making grants to railroad corporations to aid in the construction of railroads and for other purposes are to be construed both as a conveyance and as law. The original grant to the Northern Pacific prescribed that the construction of the road contemplated in the grant should be completed within a specific time. It provided the machinery for ascertaining whether the road was completed and when completed and how it was to be ascertained.

If, then, this statute was a law, the law was that this road should be completed in ten years, or in 1876. Not being completed in that time, I should like to ask the question by what authority the Department or the President of the United States made appointments to receive any subsequent section of the road? The law was that the road was to be completed in ten years from 1866, or in 1876. I think either the 4th or the 2d of July, 1876, was the time fixed for it. That being the law, and the grant being a conditional one, depending on the condition that the road should be then completed, the converse must be true, that if the company did not complete it within that time it should not be entitled to the land. That being the statute, it seems to me that the President of the United States had no right and no authority to appoint a commission to receive any section of the road after the expiration of the time the statute prescribed within which the road should be built, and in that there was an exercise of authority not granted to the President of the United States.

This resolution does not go further than simply to ask a suspension of the issuance of patents on this particular section of the road, twenty or twenty-five miles, where lands are of great value, until there may be some legislation here; not limited to any particular time, but during the consideration of pending legislation.

I do not know but that it ought to have gone further and asked for an investigation of the whole question, by what authority the Executive of the United States since 1876 has appointed commissioners to receive any portion of this road. It was a subject properly belonging to Congress. The law had ceased to have force by reason of its limitations, and the power to receive and to act upon it, it seems to me, was certainly by the strongest possible implication taken from the executive department when the time expired within which the road was to be constructed according to the conditions contained in the grant. While I am desirous that the resolution shall be passed, I have not thought proper myself to initiate any steps looking to an investigation, but as the question presents itself to my mind it is one that merits consideration and investigation not only in regard to the Northern Pacific Railroad but in respect to all the land-grant railroads.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. Is it in order now to move to proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6092) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

WILBUR F. M'DANIEL.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I wish to call up the McDaniel resolution, which went to the Calendar yesterday. I suppose it will not provoke any discussion, as it was very fully discussed before it was referred to the committee, and there are no new facts to be presented. It is very necessary to have another person in the force of this body in place of Mr. McDaniel. I ask that the resolution be put on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the pending order be laid aside informally, in order that the Senate may consider the resolution referred to by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution is before the Senate.

The resolution was reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment, in line 2, after the word "may," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "five" and insert "nine;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the service of Wilbur F. McDaniel, provided for by Senate resolution of May 20, 1879, be terminated May 9, 1884, and the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate, for the aid and support of the said Wilbur F. McDaniel, who was disabled for life while in the service of the Senate as a page, the sum of $750, to be paid to Rev. Wilbur F. Watkins, of New York city, in trust, for the above-mentioned purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to give a notice. I desire to say to the Senate that next Monday, at the completion of the morning business, during the morning hour, I shall move the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. 1340) to establish and maintain a bureau of labor statistics.

It will be remembered that some six weeks ago or more a bill of the same substantial character, reported by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, was under discussion and had been under discussion for a few days. Other business intervened, and upon objection made by the Senator from Delaware it was placed under the operation of the ninth rule, so that there is a difficulty in reaching that bill. Meanwhile the bill to which I now refer has been passed by the House of Representatives, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and reported back unanimously, and it is the desire of that committee that the House bill be taken up and discussed and acted upon instead of the bill previously reported and partially discussed by the Senate.

Several Senators have indicated a desire that we have early action and that they will be ready to express such views as they desire to submit next Monday. It is also intimated that the discussion, so far as they are concerned, will be very brief. So far as I know very little time will be taken, and I hope that the Senate will be ready at that time and willing that the motion which I shall then make shall be adopted.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the Senator will not press that against the Indian appropriation bill, which may not be completed to-day.

Mr. BLAIR. I should not expect to do so successfully if I should make the effort. I hope it will be understood that we shall begin the bill as soon as possible.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the Indian appropriation bill will be disposed of to-day, but I am not certain about that.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the pending bill, that I may submit the remarks of which I gave notice yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that the pending order be laid aside informally, in order that the measure to which he referred yesterday may be taken up for the purpose of his submitting remarks thereon.

Mr. DAWES. I suppose that the universal usage of the Senate requires that I should yield to this, and I shall therefore yield myself if the rest of the Senate will.

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Florida. The Indian appropriation bill is temporarily laid aside informally, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the bill (S. 1044) to establish a university of medicine at the capital of the United States, in the District of Columbia, for the advancement of science and the discovery of improved methods of treatment and cure of disease.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Committee on Education and Labor——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill itself is not before the Senate, having been referred to the Committee on Education and Labor; but, if there is no objection, the Senator from Florida will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. CALL. I move to discharge the Committee on Education and Labor from the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida to discharge the committee. If no objection be made the motion will be considered at this time. The motion being pending, the Senator from Florida is entitled to the floor upon it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I send to the desk the bill as I have modified it, and ask that it be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to establish a university of original research and of medicine as a part of the Smithsonian Institution, at the capital of the United States, in the District of Columbia, for the advancement of science and the discovery of improved methods of treatment and cure of disease.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $1,000,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid as hereinafter provided, as a perpetual endowment for a university of original research and of medicine as a part of the Smithsonian Institution, at the capital of the United States, in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, and the same shall be paid or expended at such times and in such amount as shall be directed by the President of the United States, for the erection of suitable buildings, as the same may be necessary, for the use of the said university of original research and of medicine as a part of the Smithsonian Institution, and to purchase ground for the same.

SEC. 3. That the interest on the said sum of $1,000,000 shall be annually paid for salaries of the professors and for the expenses of such university, including the expense of experiments in all methods of treating disease, in testing and proving the effects of remedial agents of every kind, and for such hospitals as may be necessary for the purposes of such institution; the said expenses to be determined from time to time by the President of the United States and the trustees of such university.

SEC. 4. That the professors' chairs in said university shall be open to all schools of medicine and all methods of treatment and cure of disease.

SEC. 5. That the allopathic, homeopathic, and eclectic schools of medicine shall all be represented in the professor's chairs of said university, and free and impartial opportunity afforded for the scientific and practical proof of the value of each of such schools of medicine, and of their methods and processes, and for the proof of any and all new discoveries of remedial agents and methods of treatment, the end and purpose of the establishment of this university being to stimulate researches into all methods for the cure of disease, and to furnish scientific and practical evidence of the effects of all remedial agents, and to apply the severest processes of reason and experiment to all alleged discoveries and remedial agencies for the cure of disease and the relief of mankind from suffering and for the improvement of the public health.

SEC. 6. That the board of trustees shall decide what professorships shall be established; and whenever any system or method of cure of disease shall obtain any considerable hold on the public mind, it shall be the duty of the said board of trustees to allow the professors of such system to appear at this university and submit the same to scientific examination and practical experiment and proof; and the expense of the same shall be paid out of the interest of the sum hereinbefore appropriated for the annual expenses of the university.

SEC. 7. That suitable hospitals for the treatment of diseases according to the methods of all systems, and for experiment with all remedial agents, shall be established, and a careful and accurate record kept of all medicines administered, and the effect of the same, and an accurate and correct and minute statement made of the condition of the subject of the treatment, and of his disease and symptoms, and if the treatment or experiment is upon a person in good health, of his condition in this respect, to the end that facts may be gathered in such numbers as to afford a sound basis for reasonable conclusions in reference to all systems and remedial agencies, both those now known and such as may hereafter be discovered.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, influenced by the wishes of learned men in Europe and America who with signal success and great ability have devoted their lives to the interpretation of the order of Providence and nature in their relations to human life and health and the application of this knowledge for the benefit of mankind, I consented to introduce the bill now before the Senate and to present for the consideration of the Senate the reasons which in their judgment so connect this measure with the preservation and protection of the public life and the "common defense" as to demand its favorable consideration by intelligent legislators. I now present some considerations in favor of its passage, with the statement that the thoughts here presented are those of others, and that I have no claim to any other credit than that of putting them together and of a sincere sympathy with their objects and with their confidence that if not now it will not be long before the people of this country will unite in the demand that, with adequate means, with higher and severer processes of reason, and more accurate and extended observation, the United States of America shall join in that splendid march of observation and discovery which they are now making of the malign causes of disease, suffering, and premature death, of the efficient means of their prevention, the prolongation of human life to its natural limit, and the protection of the public health.

The founders of this Government have left to us a legacy of wisdom in their recommendation to us in the first days of the Republic not to neglect the establishment and support of institutions for the diffusion of knowledge. And now, when the public life and health and comfort and prosperity depend on knowledge, when applied science, turning away from the means and appliances for the destruction of mankind, seeks to preserve and strengthen and improve the race, their advice and instruction derive new force.

General Washington, in his first annual message, says:

Nor am I less persuaded that you will agree with me in opinion that there is nothing which can better deserve your patronage than the promotion of science and literature. Knowledge is in every country the surest basis of public happiness. Whether this desirable object will be best promoted by affording aid to seminaries already established or by the institution of a national university, or by any other expedients, will be well worthy of a place in the deliberations of the Legislature.

Again in his eighth annual address he says:

Our country, much to its honor, contains many seminaries of learning, highly reputable and useful, but the funds upon which they rest are too narrow to command the ablest performance in the departments of liberal knowledge for the institution contemplated.

In his second annual message Mr. Madison said:

While it is evident that the means of diffusing and improving useful knowledge form so small a proportion of the expenditures for national purposes, I * * * will call your attention to the advantages of superadding to the means of education provided by the several States a seminary of learning instituted by the national Legislature within the limits of their exclusive jurisdiction. Such an institution, though local in its legal character, would be universal in its beneficial effects.

In his seventh annual message he says:

The present is a favorable season also for bringing again into view the establishment of a national seminary of learning within the District of Columbia. Such an institution claims the patronage of Congress as a monument of their solicitude for the advancement of knowledge, without which the blessings of liberty can not be fully enjoyed or long preserved.

Again in his eighth annual message Mr. Madison says:

The importance I have attached to the establishment of a university within this District on a scale and for objects worthy of the American nation induces me to renew my recommendation of it to the favorable consideration of Congress.

John Q. Adams said:

Among the first, perhaps the very first, instruments for improving the condition of men is knowledge, and to the acquisition of much of this knowledge * * * public institutions and seminaries are essential. Moral, political, intellectual improvement are duties assigned by the Author of our existence to social no less than individual man. For the fulfillment of these objects governments are invested with power, and to the attainment of this end, the progressive improvement of the governed, the exercise of delegated powers is a duty as sacred and indispensable as the usurpation of power not granted is criminal and odious.

Bacon in the Instauratio Magna says:

Man, the servant and interpreter of nature, does and understands so far as he may have observed respecting the order of nature in things or in his mind, and further he has neither knowledge or power.

Truth is the daughter of time, not of authority. No wonder that these spells, authority, traditions, have so bewildered men that they have not dared to hold direct intercourse with things.

It would indeed be disgraceful to mankind if after such parts of the material world had been laid open which were unknown in former times, so many seas traversed, so many countries explored, so many new stars discovered, philosophy or the intelligible world should be circumscribed by the same boundaries as before.

It is manifest that the human understanding creates itself much trouble, nor makes an apt and sober use of such aids as are within the command of man, from whence infinite ignorance of things and innumerable disadvantages arise. * * * With all our industry we should endeavor if haply this same commerce of mind and of things (than which a greater blessing can hardly be found upon earth, at least among earthly felicities) might by any means be entirely restored, or if they might at least be brought to terms of nearer correspondence.

The bill for the establishment of a university for the encouragement and support of original research and medical science, founded on the inductive system of reasoning and provided with all the means for experiment and proof of remedial agencies for the cure and relief of suffering and disease, is intended to meet and provide for a necessity for which private agencies and foundations are inadequate. It is based on the proposition that the first and highest and most beneficent object of human effort, so far as this world is concerned, is the preservation, protection, and development of human life.

PRESERVATION OF LIFE.

It needs no argument or demonstration to prove that to preserve and protect, develop and improve, human life is the only true object of all institutions of government and of law.

The first impression which reason teaches us is that in the economies of nature there are things, agencies, and powers which are hurtful and destructive of human life, and others which are preservative of it. Man soon discovers that there are poisons which destroy life and there are conditions which preserve it; that bad air is poisonous; that there are gases which suffocate; that pure air and exercise preserve and strengthen the body. The mind, the power of thought, is affected by the health of the body; hence the Roman maxim, "A sound mind in a sound body." If this be the essential and absolute condition of life here, if government and law and institutions are depending on it, it follows that it is more the object of government or associated effort than any other, and that the public health is chief among the necessary ends and purposes of government, for the preservation of the public health is the preservation of the public life as well as the individual life, of which it is but the aggregate. Hence, also, it follows that the science or art which ascertains the means and agencies and conditions of preserving life is the most dignified and the highest of all sciences, and most deserving of government aid, direction, and regulation; and that if it be within the reach of human effort to give to it accurate and correct modes of proof and processes of reason, no expense and no amount of labor and care is too great to expend in attaining or advancing this result. If there be conditions of health and remedial agencies which cure or relieve or modify disease, the same processes of reason which enable us to discover these must enable us by careful experiment and proof to ascertain their conditions and define their limit. Unless the economies of nature which reason discovers to us, unless the laws which reason enables us to discern are illusory and intended only to mislead and deceive us and to baffle reason, unless some mysterious cause or power, ever changing, renders generalization untrue and impossible, there must be a law, a principle, for the relief of suffering and cure of disease, whether it be by the specific effect of drugs or medicines or the application of electrical or magnetic power, or conditions of diet and exercise, or the combination of all, is immaterial. It is the law, the principle, the rule, that is important, the extent or limit of its influence, the conditions and qualifications of its existence.

THE NOBLEST EXERCISE OF MAN.

Herein lies the field for the noblest exercise of human reason and human effort; the subject for the most accurate and careful research and for the exercise of the most subtle and the highest powers of reason. How shall we discover the effect of different medicines and drugs on the human organism except by the largest and the most patient induction from facts; how ascertain the antidote or cure for poison or the many and terrible diseases which afflict humanity and destroy health and life and make calamity of such long life, except by constant experiment by scientific and conscientious men, and by a record of these experiments from one century to another?

KNOWLEDGE DOES NOT DIE.

If the economies of this world were that knowledge and all progress died with the scholar or philosopher who had made it; if invention and art and learning perished with every generation, and each succession of human life was compelled to commence anew with the first impressions of the senses and the first thoughts of the mind, unaided and untaught by the experience and observation and knowledge of those who had gone before, there could apparently be no progress. The mythological fable of Sisyphus with his stone ever returning to its place would find its realization in human life and human effort. And we could well afford to confine our public efforts and to limit the sphere of combined or associated effort, or of the force of government, which is only the combined effort of all to the protection of life from violence and external causes and of property and personal relations. But we have no reason to believe that this is the divine economy which governs the world.

We can discover nothing in the things which surround us, nor in our own reflections, which leads to the conclusion that knowledge is not intended for the permanent and successive development and improvement of the human race. We have no reason for believing that the laws or conditions of life and health, the development of human life, are more uncertain and less within the power of observation and reason than the laws and principles which govern with immutable certainty the physical power of nature, and which every day are being discovered with absolute certainty and applied to the comfort and improvement and benefit of mankind.

LAWS OF LIFE WITHIN REACH OF KNOWLEDGE.

Shall we conclude that in the divine economy the powers of electricity, the forces of air and water and fire, the properties of metals, are controlled by laws within the reach of man's discovery and observation for his comfort and benefit, and that the causes which affect life and health, bring inexpressible suffering and sorrow and grief, are removed beyond his reach; that they are altogether uncertain and illusory; and that this vast field of thought and effort lying at the foundation of all progress is a sealed book to patient and devoted and reverent effort and research? Such conclusions have no warrant in the other economics which surround us. They find their only support in the constant recurrence of disease and death, in the general experience of the failure of science and art to cure disease and relieve suffering, in our knowledge of the terrible maladies which scourge the race and sweep hecatombs of all ages and conditions to an untimely and premature grave. But before we accept such a conclusion from these premises we must consider well whether they properly result from them, whether they may not result from other imperfect and negligent processes of assumed science and art, whether our educational processes are not themselves so imperfect as to demand imperfection and uncertainty in the discovery and application of the laws of life and health. The physical forces, the mechanical arts, do not discover themselves; they are not known except by patient study, by long and thoughtful observation and experiment. How much greater must be the effort, the research, the educated thought, and the patient and minute experiment which shall discover and generalize the facts from which proceed the laws which create, regulate, control, and modify the subtle causes of disease and death! What vast amounts of labor, what great effort, do we expend to create death and suffering and disease and want in the machinery of war as compared with our efforts to discover and learn and apply the laws which preserve life and prevent disease and suffering and want! How ignorant and indifferent to the already discovered sanitary laws and the disease and contagion which come from crowded homes, from cities compactly built, from the absence of pure air, from extreme want and poverty, from bad habits and bad food, from the license to murder and torture the uninformed which the laws now give under the pretense of encouraging new and useful inventions! These would seem to be causes sufficient in themselves to account for the failure of medical art and science in the constant recurrence of premature and untimely death within our own experience, and for the saturnalia of death and suffering around and about us.

PRECEDENT ACTION OF GOVERNMENT.

If we look to the precedent action of the Government in former Congresses we find abundant warrant for the passage of this bill for the establishment of a national university of original research and of medicine for the preservation of life and the cure of disease and relief of suffering and the proper care of the public health. Congress has already established a National Board of Health and made large appropriations. It has established marine hospitals and military hospitals for the treatment and cure of disease and to prevent contagion and infection. It has made provision and appropriated money for the preservation of animal life and for the cure and extirpation of disease in the domestic animals which are the subject of property. Large amounts of money or public land—which is the same—have been appropriated for general education. There is, therefore, no want of precedents for the exercise of legislative power in the passage of this bill.

The bill proposes the establishment of a university of original research, including medicine, in the District of Columbia, where the United States has entire and exclusive power, where no objection can be made of an invasion of the power of the States. The measure, therefore, is left to stand on its own merits, without objection for the want of precedents or of constitutional power.

Unless, therefore, it be true that there is no medical science, no art, which can cure disease or diminish suffering or prevent contagion and infection, or unless we believe that the science and the art have already reached their utmost possible limit of beneficence, or unless it be true that private agencies are entirely adequate to accomplish all that can be done, the conclusion can not be resisted that it is the duty of Congress here and now to make such laws as will best protect the public health and the lives of the people. And if within the exercise of its proper constitutional power and without invasion of the territorial rights and power of the States, there can be an exercise of legislative power which will benefit the people of all the States, which will elevate the standard of medical knowledge, which will increase and improve and give accuracy and certainty to our knowledge of disease and its causes and its prevention and cure, assuredly there can be no objection to it.

MEDICAL SCIENCE HAS NOT REACHED ITS LIMITS.

We come thus to a consideration of the adequacy of the means proposed to the objects here stated. It is unnecessary for us to consider whether medical science has attained its utmost possible limit of beneficent action, nor the question whether private effort or State law is sufficient to do all that can be done in furthering the progress of medical science. We have no reason for believing that the presence of observation and experiment in all parts of the world and through all possible agencies, public and private, would exhaust the infinite varieties of nature in the vegetable, animal, and mineral kingdoms, and the unseen but powerful causes which affect life on our planet.

LAW OF HUMAN EFFORT.

We only know there is a divine economy, a law of beneficent result to human effort; that benevolent purpose and effort reveal beneficent causes and effects in all that relates to humanity; that to contend with and endeavor to extirpate disease and suffering and want is the primal law of our existence; that the weapons with which we are armed to wage this conflict are reason, educated reason, trained thought, recorded observation; that whatever the form in which the public powers or forces of Government are placed, they must be so adjusted that in all things educated reason and conscientious and intelligent purpose and effort to protect human life not only from external violence, which is its least formidable enemy, but from the subtle and more dangerous enemies of want, disease, and untimely death, shall be in the ascendant and subject all other forces to its control.

If there be such a thing as beneficent progress or an advancing civilization it must surely be in this direction—in the discovery and application and placing within the reach of all the knowledge of the laws of life and death, of health and disease, of suffering and enjoyment. It must be in concentrating on the individual all the powers and influences which protect him from disease and suffering, poverty and extreme want.

EQUALITY OF LAW AND INEQUALITY OF FACT.

The cry of an equality of right before the law when there is neither equality of enjoyment of right nor of comfort, when the equality before the law is barren of the fruits of comfort and health but coexists with extreme want and sore distress and poverty of a great body of the people, the exaltation of the few and the accumulation into their hands of all real power, is a mockery and a satire too bitter for humanity. Universal republican equality before the human law and universal inequality, want, disease, and poverty before the divine fact does not consist with the great law of beneficent civilization taught by the Divine Master and the Great Teacher when he said: "Another commandment give I unto you; thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, thy mind, and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself."

Let us cease to talk about an equality before the law when the things which the law affects and concerns are neither the equality of right nor the possession and enjoyment of anything real and tangible; when right under the law gives neither land nor homes nor food nor clothing, nor the possession of the fruits of labor, nor the opportunity to labor, nor just and equal compensation for labor, nor health, nor life, nor the knowledge of the means of preserving and protecting life and health, and let us address our legislative power within the just exercise of its defined limits and consistently with our politico-economic laws to such things as will best protect the great body of the people from their real enemies—from want and ignorance, from disease and suffering, from untimely and premature death, from a want of compensatory employment and the absence of just compensation for labor.

Whenever and however within the just limits of our constitutional power we may directly or indirectly beneficially affect and promote the interests of the great body of the people in these practical benefits, I shall gladly contribute to it. In that direction and with the hope of aiding these beneficent and practical results of improved health, of diminished suffering, of longer life, of more joy and brightness and less sorrow—of a higher physical life and better mind and conscience, among all people and in every home, however humble or however great—I shall vote for the passage of this bill, confident that it is on the flood-tide of that advancing civilization which rests on the Great Master's teaching, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

CAUSES WHICH OBSTRUCT SCIENCE.

I am entirely incompetent to trace the course or progress of the science which seeks to preserve and protect human life in relation to the subtle causes of disease. It is, however, obvious that dogmatic opinion, the pride of opinion, self-interest, the wide and profitable field which the suffering of mankind opens to the cupidity of imposture and fraud, are causes which obstruct the progress of medical science and give to it with the thoughtful and scientific mind a reputation for imperfection which does not necessarily belong to it; but far more than these is the absence of a wide and ever-extending system of patient and thoughtful observation and experiment, and its careful and faithful record, which must constitute the only possible means for any discovery of the principles which must be the basis of the law of health and life, of disease and death. The recorded observations, the facts, must precede generalization, and without generalization there can be no science.

If no two cases are alike, if the conditions of disease or life and health with every individual are peculiar, and no remedial agents or methods of treatment and care will have the same effect on any two individuals, then each case must be tentative and experimental, and no previous knowledge of other cases will be of use. There can then be no science and no art in this direction. But this is well known not to be true. We know that poison inserted in the veins produces approximately the same effect, but we do not know the precise conditions which modify such effects.

CERTAINTY OF PROGRESS.

We know that constantly there are discoveries in the animal and vegetable and mineral kingdom of qualities and properties having specific effects on the human organism. We know that every human being is more or less an observer and discoverer of facts relating to life and health and disease and qualities and properties in the earth and in the air. Why should we not have an institution or school which should at least be open for the record of those observations, for examinations and experiment on them, for subjecting to the test of patient experiment all observations and the qualities and properties of things in the earth and in the air relating to disease? If some things have specific properties which are specially destructive of life, why is it not reasonable to assume that there should be others which are preservative in precisely the same degree?

If, as we know, it is within the reach of patient and zealous effort to benefit and improve mankind, for what purpose and to what end is this provision made in the economy of nature? What warrant have we for the opinion that it will stop short of the extermination of disease, of that millennium in which there shall be no pain, nor disease, nor want. Shall we limit by the experience of the past the beneficence of Providence and nature in their relations to the future of our race? To reason thus is to deny all hope of man's progress.

The means by which this benefit occurs is obvious to us. War destroys mankind; exposure, exhausting effort, and privation, extreme want, hunger, and insufficient clothing, bad shelter, we know are destructive of life. We seek to remove these hurtful causes, and we find that still there are subtle, if not more powerful, enemies to life and health. The patient path of discovery and research finds them in bad habits, bad air, bad diet, and in the condition of crowded cities.

A valuable scientific journal makes the following statement:

"Longevity and premature decay are doubtless influenced by the food and general habits of the people, and by temperature and other local atmospheric conditions, although all these may be modified and brought under control by attention to sanitary laws and appliances. Artificial atmospheres are in fact created in large cities according to the character of the buildings, the air-space allotted in them, and the mode of ventilation and draining, as well as by the width of the streets, the sewerage, and other sanitary arrangements. Moreover, the hereditary constitutions of the citizens become in after generations affected by the condition of the cities in which they and their forefathers have lived.

"The facts and figures before us point to many of the causes for so great a variation in the death-rate as has been shown to exist in different cities. A large death-rate will in most cases be found to be the companion of defective house accommodation, ventilation, water supply, sewerage, or scavenging. Thus, for instance, St. Petersburg, with a population of nearly a million, and the high death-rate of 35.2 per 1,000, is without sewerage, and its water supply is taken from the river Neva, more or less contaminated by percolation from the subsoil. Cairo, with a death-rate of 37.2 per 1,000, is supplied with water from the Nile, having no sewers, and the sewage filtering through the subsoil into the Nile above the water intake. Vienna, with a death-rate of 29.2 per 1,000, has an average of sixty people in each house, or twice as many as in Paris, while the ratable value of the houses in Vienna is only one-sixth more than those in Paris. Pekin, with a death-rate of 50 per 1,000, is without proper sewerage, water supply, street cleaning, or other proper sanitary arrangements."

PROTECTION OF LIFE BY THE STATE.

By what processes of argument or reason shall we continue to affirm that all the powers of Government, the power of associated and combined effort, shall be directed to the protection of the individual life against external violence, but that the destruction of the same life by internal causes is an improper object of public effort, of legislative power, when the latter is far more destructive than the former? The proposition is that against war and its dire evils the State must use all the public power to protect the people, but against the pestilence which flieth at noonday and slays its tens of thousands there can be no public effort.

How shall we in reason vindicate our assertions that upon the tariff, upon internal revenue, upon the adjustment of taxation, upon exchange and commerce and its instrumentalities, currency and money and public and private credit, for the purpose of regulating the just distribution of the products of labor, so as to secure to each individual or to the greater part a just proportion, and thus promote the general welfare of the State, we may expend all our time, but no effort shall be made to preserve and protect the life which is to be thus benefited, no effort to protect and preserve unimpaired the health which alone will enable the people to receive and enjoy the just distribution of the fruits of labor when the other economies shall have reached it. We must have laws and public economies which will secure compensation to labor, but none to enable the laborer to live. We must have laws to provide the State with men for her armies and for public defense, but none to increase, protect, and preserve their vigor and health.

These propositions have no foundation in that reason which directs mankind toward the truths of life and the means for its preservation and perpetuation.

LIMITATIONS OF POWER.

Our Government and our institutions and laws affirm that we have discovered that the protection of the individual and the general welfare are best conserved by a division of the powers of government, and vesting those which are local and relate to the local and domestic relations of the people in State governments, and those which are general and concern the whole in a government over the whole.

Around each of these governments or series of powers we have sought to create by constitutional guarantees and prohibitions an impassable barrier to prevent encroachments by one upon the other. Few reasonable persons, I apprehend, will question the beneficent effect of this division of the public powers and the importance to each individual of its entire preservation. But the use of the vast revenues of the Federal Government, although derived from taxation upon the people, with a wise economy, for the diffusion of knowledge among them for the preservation of their lives and their health, can not in any way impair this division of the public powers nor overthrow these barriers.

There can be no reason why the States, having the right to exclude the contributions made by the General Government, should not consent to accept and use a benefaction for their people.

The diffusion of the knowledge how to preserve life, how to exclude disease, how to relieve suffering and pain, how to prevent and destroy the pestilence which itself destroys, can never primarily affect or impair the distinctions of government or the distributions of its power. But here in the District of Columbia, where the national Congress is by an organic law vested with all power which can be constitutionally exercised over the people in its territorial limits, we should be faithless to the great trust imposed on us of advancing the happiness and well-being of the hundred millions of people who will soon inhabit our country if we should neglect to foster and provide every agency which will increase and advance and perfect the knowledge of man of those things which are essential for the protection and preservation of human life, and for the diffusion of that knowledge free to all the people.

It is here, indeed, that the republic of letters, of science, of useful inventions and art should be established, here the advanced thought of mankind should find a home, and foundations for the patient and profound and exhaustive application of experiment and investigation and induction to all science and art should be established, to the end that it may go out on the wings of the morning free to all our people and to all the world.

FRUITS OF PATIENT STUDY.

We shall find by an examination of the fruits which in this our age have proceeded from the patient investigation of disease and the causes which destroy life and concern the public health, that the conclusions which have been reached demonstrating the beneficent effects of patient and recorded observation are abundantly sustained, and that a wide and illimitable future of happiness and exemption from the great enemies of mankind seems to be opening to us.

I extract from the Scientific American of the 16th February of this year the following article:

MICRO-ORGANISMS AND DISEASE.

The public generally was not a little surprised when, something over two years ago, a German professor announced that he had made such progress in the microscopical examination and cultivation of different forms of bacilli and bacteria as to lead to the hope that thereby a means might be found of checking consumption, typhoid fever, and many other diseases, when established, or for their prevention, as small-pox is so largely preventable by vaccination. Since that time European savants have been yet more diligently following up this line of investigation; many different forms of micro-organisms have been successfully cultivated and made to assume widely different variations, so that one which was a virulent poison in one form, for a particular organization, might be innocuous to another, and vice versa. The end sought in these investigations is to so trace the immediate causes and propagators of all diseases as to materially aid in their prevention and cure, the theory being that inoculation with a mild type of micro-organism of a certain disease will overcome the more virulent, and thus prevent danger from that disease.

The knowledge thus obtained has thus far also been of almost incalculable benefit in the treatment of all diseases, especially those of a contagious nature. It was to enlarge our information in this field that distinguished French and German scientists visited Egypt during the cholera of last summer; freely endangering their lives in the prosecution of investigations in the hospitals and lazarettos of Cairo and Alexandria. It is greatly to be regretted, however, that American experts are contributing so little to this branch of the world's knowledge in this eminently humanitarian field, concerning which we quote as follows from the Sanitary Engineer:

"It is a shame that while these investigations are being pushed in Germany, France, and Great Britain nothing of the sort is going on in this country, the good commencement which was made in this direction by the National Board of Health having been totally abandoned for want of funds, while at the same time our legislative tinkers are at their wits' end to know what to do with the surplus in the Treasury.

"Little by little the patient workers in European laboratories are tracing the life histories of the minute organisms which are found in the blood and tissues of men and animals affected with various diseases, and are learning to distinguish those which may be said to cause disease from those which only accompany or follow it.

"They have shown that a certain form of pneumonia is caused by an organism so minute that it appears only as a hardly perceptible dot or speck under the most powerful microscope, and yet which, nevertheless, they have cultivated in a series of tubes, and with the sixth or seventh culture have produced in animals pneumonia precisely like the case with which they started, showing that it breeds as true as wheat would do. Professor Quist, of Helsingfors, announces that the extremely minute particles of vaccine matter can be cultivated in the same way outside the living body and with the retention of their specific powers; and if this discovery be confirmed, it solves the problem proposed by the Grocers' Company of London, who offered a large prize for the discovery of such a process.

"The last discovery of this kind is announced by Dr. Struck, of Berlin, who has been studying the micro-organism which appears to be the cause of a very fatal disease which sometimes affects the bones and marrow of man, and is known to surgeons as acute osteo-myelitis.

"The peculiarity of this organism is that it produces no apparent ill effects when inoculated in animals so long as the bones are sound. But if a bone in the animal is crushed or injured a few days before the inoculation is practiced, the injured limb is rapidly affected by the germ, and death follows in from ten to fifteen days.

"The fact that in order to produce this specific osteo-myelitis we must not only have the specific germ present, but must also have a certain damaged condition of the tissues, is a very suggestive one, as indicating a possible explanation of the fact that in other specific diseases, such as diphtheria or typhoid, only a few out of many persons exposed to the specific cause may suffer any ill effects. The soil in which the seed is planted must be of the right kind and in proper condition or the seed will not multiply. For some of the specific germs an inflamed tissue affords the most favorable conditions; as, for instance, in diphtheria, where a slight sore throat from ordinary causes appears to strongly predispose to an attack. Others, again, flourish in feeble and poorly nourished persons, whose blood is thinner and paler than in health, while still others appear to select as their favorite victims the ruddy and the strong, those who are apparently in blooming health, although such cases are exceptional. Those who have been breathing impure air laden with the emanations of cesspools, or of sewers of deposit, which are only another form of cesspools, or the air of overcrowded tenements, which contains almost as much foul organic matter as that of the cesspool, have been preparing in their own throats and lungs and blood a suitable medium for the growth and reproduction in countless number of these deadly little parasites.

"Much remains to be done in the study of the conditions under which these germs preserve their vitality and multiply outside the living body; in fact, we are only on the threshold of this part of the inquiry, and yet it is precisely this which is of the greatest interest to the health officer and sanitary engineer."

NEGLECT A CRIME.

What a wide prospect of results beneficial to our race is here presented. Who shall say that if in the economies of nature these hidden causes of fearful pestilence and the means of their prevention are within the reach of patient and laborious investigation, how great will be the criminality of that neglect in those who have power, which shall permit them to remain undiscovered for the want of adequate means to prosecute their study and investigation?

ANALOGY FROM PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND ART.

If, on the other hand, we look into the progress of discovery and invention in the physicial sciences and the arts, which are open to a smaller degree of patient effort and observation, we have abundant warrant for the belief, indeed we may almost say for the certain assurance, that the like progress will result from the same application of public aid to the advancement of that science which is devoted to the protection of health and the preservation of life.

INVENTIONS OF A HALF CENTURY.

The number of inventions that have been made during the past fifty years is unprecedented in the history of the world. Inventions of benefit to the human race have been made in all ages since man was created; but, looking back for half a hundred years, how many more are crowded into the past fifty than into any other fifty since recorded history! The perfection of the locomotive, and the now world-traversing steamship, the telegraph, the telephone, the audiphone, the sewing-machine, the photograph, chromo-lithographic printing, the cylinder printing-press, the elevator for hotels and other many-storied buildings, the cotton-gin and the spinning-jenny, the reaper and mower, the steam-thrasher, the steam fire-engine, the improved process for making steel, the application of chloroform and ether to destroy sensibility in painful surgery cases, and so on through a long catalogue. Nor are we yet done in the field of invention and discovery. The application of coal-gas and petroleum to heating and cooking operations seems to be only trembling on the verge of general adoption; the introduction of steam from a great central reservoir to general use for heating and cooking has been in part a success; the navigation of the air by some device akin to our present balloon would also seem to be prefigured, and the propulsion of machinery by electricity is even now clearly indicated by the march of experiment.

There are some problems we have hitherto deemed impossible, but are the mysteries of even the most improbable of them more subtle to grasp than that of the ocean cable or that of the photograph or telephone? We talk by cable with an ocean rolling between; we speak in our voices to friends a hundred miles or more from where we articulate before the microphone. Under the blazing son of July we produce ice by chemical means, rivaling the most solid and crystalline production of nature. Our surgeons graft the skin from one person's arm to the face of another, and it adheres and becomes an integral portion of the body. We make a mile of white printing paper and send it on a spool that a perfecting printing-press unwinds and prints, and delivers to you, folded and counted, many thousand per hour. Of a verity this is the age of invention, nor has the world reached a stopping place yet.—Scientific American.

INVENTION AIDING SCIENCE.

We may form some idea of the aid which the progress of invention is giving to natural science and discovery by a consideration of the late invention of the electric microscope, which is thus described in the Scientific American:

The electric microscope has, in fact, made it possible to exhibit in a most attractive form the appearances presented by minute natural objects when placed under the most powerful magnifying glass. Indeed, the difficulty with which Mr. Link had to contend on Saturday was the smallness of the screen upon which his pictures were thrown. For instance, only a small section of a butterfly's wing could be shown at a time, although the screen was as large as the size of the entertainment court would permit, while the living organisms in a spot of water and the mites in a small piece of cheese were enlarged until they presented a perfectly appalling spectacle to a timid mind. The capabilities of the apparatus may be imagined from the fact that the eye of a fly was presented in a form not less than four million times its natural size. The electric microscope, which is worked by an ordinary primary battery, may be said to have extended almost indefinitely the possibilities of presenting in an attractive and instructive manner the wonderful facts of natural science.

[Scientific American, April 12, 1884.]

THE ECONOMICS OF DISEASE, ETC.—ITS COST IN GROSS.

This may be estimated in several ways, and includes a number of factors. It has been calculated by statistical hygienists that of the cases of disease now current in civilized communities, about one-third could have been prevented by intelligent sanitation, personal or general. In our opinion this estimate is too low, rather than too high; but take it at one-third, then the actual loss to these patients or their families is represented by one-third the whole amount paid doctors, nurses, &c., in a community, plus the loss of time, whatever that may be.

But this is only the first item in the bill of charges. One-third of all the investment locked up in hospitals, dispensaries, asylums, homes, &c., could be placed to profitable and productive use were the laws of health observed. Much more than this; numerous limited localities, vast tracts of fertile land, now shunned or but partly tilled, because of their ill-repute on the score of health, would be doubled, quadrupled, in selling value and producing power were they made free from the poisons which infest them. Millions of acres of the finest soil in the United States are lying idle by reason of the paludal poisons which are generated about them. Yet there is strong testimony that systematic action on a large scale can overcome these miasms.

We have spoken only of disease, but we must also take into account the sequelæ of disease in destroying ability to work, and thus casting the heavy expenses of permanent invalidism on the family or the Commonwealth, or by a fatal result depriving the community of a life which would have possessed a value as capital applied to the production of wealth. This has been the subject of calculation by political economists in England and Germany, and in both countries they have reached the conclusion that the value of an unskilled laborer, at 25 years of age, to his country is $1,200. In other words, this is the average sum which such a person will contribute during his life to the wealth of the community in which he lives. Now, if we suppose one-third of the deaths in a community are preventable, we can readily see how much richer the community would be were it to exercise the necessary prophylaxis.

SHALL WE BEAR NO PART IN IT?

Shall we in the presence of these mighty agencies for the promotion of the happiness of mankind of all ages, sexes, and conditions; of these beneficent powers for the diminution of suffering and the prevention and cure of pestilence and disease; of this splendid work of humanity—shall we bear no part in it? With an overflowing Treasury, shall we say that the performance of the public trust committed to us of the government of the District of Columbia does not require of us a proper care for the protection of the public health and the individual life of the people who are the subjects of this power? Shall we maintain, if this trust can be so performed and this power so exercised that beneficent results shall come to all the people of all the States, that this beneficial effect of the exercise of an admitted power here is a ground of constitutional objection?

While we are exercising the power of ascertaining the cause of disease in animals and of preventing contagion and infection through foreign and interstate commerce, shall we find refuge in an objection of a want of constitutional power to discover and prevent and extirpate the causes of human disease, contagions and infections?

The commerce which is now limited only by the boundaries of the world and the extent of the human race forbids such a thought. The civilization and the industrial progress and the arts and sciences which, disdaining the dogmas of abstract declarations of equality and right, seek to bring comfort and the necessaries of life and health and longer life to every individual in the State, forbid it and demand that the powers of the State within the just limitations of an organic law should have these objects in view.

THE MEANS BY WHICH IT MAY BE DONE.

It is obvious that the continuous, severe, and patient observation of disease, the long series of careful experiment over widely separated fields and subjects, is practicable and efficient only under highly organized and competent agencies; that as knowledge is continuous and does not perish with each generation, so must be the means by which it is obtained and increased be continuous; and that the means for such agencies are beyond the power of individual combination, and can only be secured by great and permanent foundations established and maintained by Government.

The intellectual processes must be of the highest order, and the subjects on which they shall be exercised must be gathered from all parts of the world. Where death and pestilence hold their high carnival, there must the patient and devoted student go for experiment and observation, and report to the foundation to which he belongs. Educated and trained observers must observe and record the symptoms and experiments. Educated and trained men of the highest thought must examine and classify and generalize these facts. Is the prevention of contagious and epidemic diseases worth the expense? Shall the cholera and yellow fever and other scourges be allowed to develop themselves until they pass beyond the reach and control of human science, or shall the means which a beneficent Providence has made dependent on our own energies remain unused?

If the premises we have laid down rest, as we claim they do, on the already achieved results of science and patient effort, then the educated mind of every country will soon demand that the care of the public health shall be one of its chief objects; then will it demand that the only possible agencies which the Divine Providence has allowed us, and the all-sufficient agency shall be used. That is the means, agencies, and the opportunity for applying and recording observation and experiment on all the facts and symptoms of disease and its cause and cure.

BIOLOGICAL STUDY.

Without entering into the field of controversy, I will refer here to the authority of a great name in physical science, which deserves the high respect which it has acquired in science. Thomas H. Huxley, in his lecture on biology, says:

Now I mention another bearing of biological knowledge, a more practical one in the ordinary sense of the word. Consider the theory of infectious disease. Surely that is of interest to all of us. Now the theory of infectious disease is rapidly being elucidated by biological study. It is possible to produce from among the lower animals examples of devastating diseases which spread in the same manner as our infectious disorders, and which are certainly and unmistakably caused by living organisms. This fact renders it possible, at any rate, that that doctrine of the causation of infectious disease which is known under the name of "the germ theory" may be well founded; and, if so, it must needs lead to the most important practical measures in dealing with those terrible visitations. It may be well that the general as well as the professional public should have a sufficient knowledge of biological truths to be able to take a rational interest in the discussion of such problems, and to see, what I think they may hope to see, that to those who possess a sufficient elementary knowledge of biology they are not all quite open questions.

Let me mention another important practical illustration of the value of biological study. Within the last forty years the theory of agriculture has been revolutionized. The researches of Liebig and those of our own Lawes and Gilbert have had a bearing on that branch of industry the importance of which can not be overestimated; but the whole of these new views have grown out of the better explanation of certain processes which go on in plants, and which, of course, form a part of the subject-matter of biology.

In another work on animal automatism Mr. Huxley uses these eloquent words:

Moreover, I urge that a thorough study of human physiology is in itself an education broader and more comprehensive than much that passes under that name. There is no side of the intellect which it does not call into play; no region of human knowledge into which either its roots or its branches do not extend; like the Atlantic between the Old and the New Worlds, its waves wash the shores of the two worlds of matter and of mind; its tributary streams flow from both; through its waters, as yet unfurrowed by the keel of any Columbus, lies the road, if such there be, from the one to the other, far away from that northwest passage of mere speculation in which so many brave souls have been hopelessly frozen up.

We can form some idea of the condition of the kindred sciences which are necessary for the proper care of the public health, which is the public life, from the following statement of the same distinguished scientist:

I think that sound and practical instruction in the elementary facts and broad principles of biology should form a prominent part of the arts curriculum. Moreover, as I have already said, I have no sort of doubt that in view of the relation of physical science to the practical life of the present day it has the same right as theology, law, and medicine to a faculty of its own, in which men shall be trained to be professional men of science. * * * The establishment of such a faculty would have the additional advantage of providing in some measure for one of the greatest wants of our time and country. I mean the proper encouragement and support of original research. The other day an emphatic friend of mine committed himself to the opinion that in England it is better for a man's worldly prospects to be a drunkard than to be smitten with the divine dipsomania of the original investigator. I am inclined to think he was not far wrong. And be it observed that the question is not whether such a man shall make as much out of his abilities as his brother of like ability who goes into law or engineering or commerce; it is a question of living or starving. If a student of my own subject shows power and originality I dare not advise him to adopt a scientific career, for supposing he is able to maintain himself until he has attained distinction, I can not give him the assurance that any amount of proficiency in the biological sciences will be convertible into the most modest bread and cheese. And I believe that the case is as bad, or perhaps worse, with other branches of science. In this respect Britain, whose immense wealth and prosperity hang upon the thread of applied science, is far behind France, and infinitely behind Germany.

Let us consider briefly the import of this statement that the knowledge, the applied science on which not only the immense wealth, that is all the production, comfort, and happiness of the people of Great Britain and the United States depend, but upon which also the health, lives, and vigor of their people depend, is so neglected and so without public aid and recognition, says the greatest and most devoted follower of that school of science which seeks to interpret nature and to apply science to the practical wants of man that he who undertakes it must do it at the risk of starvation.

If this fact of the dependence of these great interests on knowledge or applied science is true; if this is the decree and divine economy which an all-wise and beneficent Ruler of the World has established—and who shall gainsay or deny it?—what further need for argument to demonstrate that it is the duty of those who give direction to the combined efforts of the whole people to direct them toward the attainment of those ends upon which both their prosperity and life depend?

Now let us turn for a moment to see what is being done in other countries for bringing applied knowledge into immediate connection with all the people and training them into its knowledge and use.

I extract the following from that most valuable journal the Scientific American:

[From the Scientific American, March 8, 1884.]

TECHNICAL SCHOOLS IN SAXONY.

The amount of attention given to purely technical education in Saxony is shown by the fact that there are now in that kingdom the following schools: A technical high school in Dresden, a technical state institute at Chemnitz, and art schools in Dresden and Leipzig, also four builders' schools, two for the manufacture of toys, six for ship-builders, three for basket weavers, and fourteen for lace-making.

Besides these, there are the following trade schools supported by different trades, foundations, endowments, and districts: Two for decorative painting, one for watchmakers, one for sheet-metal workers, three for musical-instrument makers, one for druggists (not pharmacy), twenty-seven for weaving, one for machine embroidery, two for tailors, one for barbers and hair-dressers, three for hand-spinning, six for straw-weaving, three for wood-carving, four for steam-boiler heating, six for female handiwork. There are, moreover, seventeen technical advanced schools, two for gardeners, eight agricultural, and twenty-six commercial schools. (Deutsche Industrie Zeitung, No. 3.)

Thomas Jefferson said:

A public institution can alone supply those sciences which, though rarely called for, are necessary to complete the circle, all the parts of which contribute to the improvement of the country, and some of them to its preservation.

Since Jefferson wrote these words the sciences have with every year come to perform a vastly more important part in the improvement and preservation of the country, and to-day they are the chief ministries to the life and comfort of our people. Their immediate connection with the daily life of the people in their preventive influences and the necessity for their cultivation and for their support and encouragement, and the diffusion by the agency of Government of the knowledge they acquire, is well illustrated by the following statements from a valuable paper read by Dr. John G. Johnson, of Brooklyn, before the Medico-Legal Society of that city, in relation to poison from the use of canned goods. The paper and a letter of S. P. Holt, of New York, under the title of "Canned goods poisoning," ought to be published and circulated over the whole country by Congress. Dr. Johnson says:

Having had in my practice six cases of corrosive poisoning from the eating of canned tomatoes, and finding that none of our works on toxicology gave any information on the dangers of canned goods, and none of the medical works accessible furnished anything to guide the physician on the subject, after consulting the chemist and former chemist of the board of health of Brooklyn and gaining no information from them, it was thought proper that I should bring the matter before this society, from which have emanated so many laws beneficial to the community. * * *

The position the French Government has taken with regard to the danger from lead poisoning in the cans can be best judged from the regulations established by the director-general of customs of France:

"The consulting commission of hygiene, to whom the question has been submitted, is convinced that, so far as the public health is concerned, there are serious objections to permitting the sale of products which from the contact with solder or with surfaces containing lead might become the cause of poisoning."

Mr. S. P. Holt, in his pamphlet, says:

There is nothing that so earnestly and importunately calls for immediate action upon the part of our law-makers as some action looking to the protection of the consumer from lead poison. Not a human being within the reach of our 50,000,000 population, except those interested in the improper (and I trust soon to be unlawful) method as at present used, but would sign a petition praying for a safeguard that shall be thrown around an article of consumption so universally used, so unexceptionally poisonous as the great, very great, majority of canned goods. That article of food amounted last year to $300,000,000.

The results of extensive tests of vegetables and fruits put up in cans soldered in the usual way, made by the Boston Institute of Technology, have shown that salts of lead are germinated by the contact, and the fruits, &c., thus become dangerously poisonous.

Again, the necessity for the support and encouragement of original research and applied science in the protection of the public health will be seen from the report of Consul Lambert of the epidemic which destroyed the people of the town of San Blas on the Pacific coast of Mexico in 1883.

The vomito appeared at San Blas, an island on the Pacific coast of Mexico, after the absence of a century. The town had 3,000 inhabitants. One-third of those who remained died, says the American consul, in his report of March of this year. So violent was the disease that in a large percentage of cases death occurred simultaneously with the first warning, and while the person was feeling well and looking comparatively well. Vomiting generally appeared simultaneously with the attack, and many are said to have choked to death. It partook more of the nature of pyæmia, and attacked the stomach as the objective part with more malignity than the ordinary black vomit, but at a different stage. The consul says he is constrained to believe in the germ theory, and that the inoculation may have been so fatal that being taken up at once into the circulation its effects operated precisely as any other deadly poison. The important results reasonably to be expected from an adequate foundation for the continuous pursuit of knowledge may be realized from a consideration of the results of enlightened inquiry and effort in the past even with inadequate means. Previous to the discovery of Jenner it is recorded by Russell, in his history of medicine, that in one year two millions of persons are reported to have died of small-pox. In Iceland it destroyed one-fourth of the population, and the capital of Thibet, in the East, was deserted for three years because of it.

Instinctive admonition to use the instrumentalities which Providence, in the order of nature, has either already discovered or placed in our power to discover, is contained in the history of the Black Death, the great plague of Europe in 1347–'48. Thorold Rogers, in his book on Work and Wages, says:

The Black Death is alleged to have had its origin in the center of China in about the year 1333, and is reported to have been accompanied by various phenomena, in the earth and atmosphere, of a very novel and destructive character, such, indeed, as were noticed as long ago as in the plagues of Athens and the simultaneous visitations at Rome or the mortality which prevailed in Northern Europe near three centuries before our era—and at the terrible pestilence which visited the known world in the age of Justinian. So, in later times, the cholera and influenza were traced to particular spots in India or China, which had been desolated by earthquakes, as Justinian's plague was said to have had its origin at Pelusium.

Nearly every infectious or contagious disease which has desolated mankind appears to have had its origin in the East and to have traveled along thence to Europe, although the yellow fever is said to be a product of the West. It is alleged that before it reached the West the Black Death exhausted itself in the place of its origin. Like most other plagues it was infinitely more destructive at the commencement of its career than after it had endured for a time. * * * We are told that it killed the strong * * * as with Asiatic cholera when it is most virulent; many of those attacked perished speedily, and before the disease had developed its most characteristic symptoms. It appears, indeed, and the impression is confirmed by scientific research, that when some new infection or contagion is developed the whole population is speedily liable to the assaults of the disease, and that sometimes it may totally perish, as in all likelihood the ancient occupants of the ruined cities in Central America have disappeared without leaving any sign, other than their stupendous buildings, of their existence.

The Black Death, as our forefathers called it from the dark purple blotches which appeared on the skin when the blood and tissues had become wholly disorganized through the virulence of the disorder, still lingers in the East under the name of the Levant, or the Oriental plague. Even now we are occasionally informed of an outbreak * * * where the * * * Turk has reduced every one to squalid poverty and misery, and whence Europe is again threatened. * * * The Black Death visited Christ church, Canterbury, very lightly for a century before the friars had laid in pure water from the hills to the monastery.

The Black Death first attacked Europe in Cyprus at about the end of 1347, and was accompanied by great convulsions of the earth and by atmospheric disturbances. Many persons who were seized with the disorder died instantly. * * * It appeared in Avignon, January, in 1348; * * * in Florence, by the middle of April; * * * France and Germany, in August; * * * on 1st of August in the seaport town of Devonshire, in England; and in Russia in 1351.

The mortality was enormous and appalling. It is probable that one-third of the population perished. * * * The immediate consequence was a dearth of labor and excessive wages. Crops rotted in the fields, cattle and sheep roamed at large, and land went out of cultivation. But the progress of sanitary science has put an end to the worst ravages of a disease which was so terrible more than five centuries ago.

THE ORDER OF PROVIDENCE AND NATURE.

In this effort I have endeavored to advance the purposes of the noble spirits who are associated throughout the world in the great work of a reverent, patient, and laborious effort for the interpretation of Providence and nature in the advancement of man in comfort and well-being in his life on this earth and hereafter, and as a feeble tribute to the labors of one of that band of martyrs, now gone to his rest, whose soul throughout a long life knew no other aspiration than that of faith and hope in an ascending progress of the human race, in the order of Divine Providence, toward the final goal of a relief from crime and disease and sorrow, through the faithful use, in subjection to the Divine will, of the faculties bestowed on man for his development and improvement.

In every age there have been men who have seen in the world and Divine Providence some other purpose than the creation of agencies to destroy life and create grief and suffering, who regard the powers of government, whatever may be their limitations, as intended for beneficent purposes, and who can see nothing but good in the discovery of truth and its diffusion among mankind and its application to their wants and necessities. Of such men were Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe. All of these considered the beneficent use of government to be its great object, and chief among its agencies the discovery and diffusion of knowledge among the people by the aid of the public money. They were not afraid to intrust the power of expending the public money for this object to the Federal Government.

I shall be content if I shall have done something toward directing the attention of the people to the importance of original research and applied knowledge in all the departments of human effort, and especially toward that most noble of all pursuits, its application, under the most certain conditions, to the protection of the public health and the relief and prevention of disease. I have no fear that the intelligent and thoughtful mind of the people will find fault with the judicious and prudent expenditure of the public money for these ends, due regard being always had to its being in conformity with the distribution of power under our distinctive system of Federal and State governments.

DIFFUSION OF KNOWLEDGE BY GOVERNMENT.

An opinion is entertained by many that the discovery of truth and diffusion of knowledge is not one of the proper objects of government; that no information should be obtained by government and disseminated to the people except such as relates to subjects as to which there is power in the National Government to make laws.

If we examine the ground of this opinion we will find that it has no foundation in reason, and will not bear the test of examination. Those who maintain it will not pretend to vindicate it by the assertion that it is not absolutely necessary to all the interests of society and the individual that the truth in relation to life and health and comfort and all economies should be ascertained. Neither will they assert that when known it should be confined to a few and withheld from the multitude. They must base their opinion, if they desire it to rest on any other ground than a mere prejudice, a dogmatic assertion, on the ground that individual effort is a more successful agency and better adapted to accomplish results requiring great expenditure and continuous effort, often extending from age to age, than associated or combined effort, and we see that in this analysis of their thought it assumes an impossible form.

But some persons insist that although combined or associated effort is necessary to obtain results beyond the power of individual effort, yet this association should be voluntary as contrasted with involuntary association, which they assume to be the principle of government; that the voluntary association of the individual contrasted with his involuntary performance of a public or private duty has some special efficacy; but under our form government is a voluntary association of the people for public purposes, subject to an agreement that the combined and associated effort of all should be directed by the opinions of the greater part. And here again we find the analysis equally assumes an impossible form. The fact whether one of a minority voluntarily or involuntarily performs a public duty does not affect the performance of the duty so long as it is performed.

Some persons, again, insist that the combined and associated effort of the whole people organized in the form of government must be limited to the protection of the individual and the public life against external violence, to the agencies of war, military defense and force; and that while it is safe and proper for this purpose to intrust the control and direction of this organized force of the efforts of all the people to government, and to create great armies for its control, yet it is unsafe for the people that their common efforts should be directed to the discovery of truth and its application to the necessities and wants of the people and the diffusion of knowledge among mankind. That is, the use of power for malevolent and destructive purposes is safe and right, but its use for benevolent and beneficent objects is unsafe and wrong.

Again, this analysis of their thought assumes an impossible and unreasonable form. I take no part in such opinions. They have no connection with any just or reasonable theory of State rights and power, or of national power and right. The distinctions between the two are broad and palpable, and they need never interfere with each other—both were intended for beneficent objects. The exercise of power and force and subjection, and the exercise of the power of giving and accepting or rejecting, differ in their nature and all their qualities. Power demands subjection; giving demands nothing, and can be exercised only with consent. The States can never be destroyed by being aided and built up. The people can never be injured by having their wants more abundantly supplied with the fruits of their own labor, nor by having their health and vigor improved and their lives prolonged by protection and immunity from pestilence and disease. Great public objects can never be as well accomplished by individual effort as by the associated effort of many persons. Voluntary association of a part can never be as effective as the organized association of all the parts in the form of government for beneficent purposes.

FALSE THEORIES OF GOVERNMENT.

Now let us examine that theory of government which holds that the protection of the public health and the public life from anything but violence is a tyrannous and dangerous usurpation of power and an unnecessary and wasteful expenditure of the public money.

OBJECTS OF GOVERNMENT.

What are the objects and purposes of government? Are they confined to the protection of life, person, and property from violence either from individuals or nations? Do their powers extend to leading or in any way influencing the individual into other and higher modes of life? Must the advancement of a people, their protection and prevention from anything but violence, the increase of their activities, their improvement as a species, be left entirely to individual effort, and the power of combined or associated effort, of which the government is intended to be the most perfect form, be withheld from it? The answer to these questions will exhibit the true conditions.

The Institutes of Justinian, from which the great body of the law is derived, lay down these propositions:

Jurisprudence is the knowledge of things divine and human, the science of what is just and unjust.

The precepts of the law are to live honestly, to hurt no one, to give to every one his due. The law is divided into public and private. Public law regards the state of the commonwealth. The people by the lex regia make a concession of their whole power. That law which natural reason appoints for all mankind is called the law of nations, because all nations make use of it.

The law of nations is common to all mankind, and all nations have enacted some laws as business and necessity required.

We perceive then that from the earliest times the function of government covered those things which regarded the state of the commonwealth. We have found it wise in the progress of time to divide this concession of the whole power from the people, the lex regia, and to distribute some of it to the National Government and to reserve the larger part of it to the States, and the people in the several States have also seen fit to limit the power of the States in respect to their powers over their own people; but we have not and no people ever have or ever can deny to government or public law, whether State or national, the power and duty of regarding the state of the commonwealth as the proper subject for the exercise of its power, subject to the conditions of its organic law.

Hence we perceive that, whether the power be state or national, whether a republic or a monarchy, that which concerns the state of the commonwealth, whether it be the act of a private individual or the act of a great number; whether it be a great public calamity, a war, a pestilence, a famine, or an invasion; whether it concerns the state of the commonwealth as respects its "common defense," or whether it concerns it as respects its advancement in power and prosperity, which is the general welfare, must ever be the proper object of the power of government, and that under our system of States and of a national government, with separate and limited powers, so long as we avoid any interference with the power of the States and subject to this supreme limitation on all power. We shall find no want of authority for the appropriation of money for any object which concerns the state of the commonwealth or on which the public life depends. Surely the progress of applied science leaves no doubt of the necessity of an institution of original research with adequate provision for continuous investigation and experiment.

I find the following statement in a public journal which, in view of the suffering which this country has sustained in former years and to which it is again liable, demands from intelligent and conscientious legislators careful consideration:

BERLIN, February 19.

The German sanitary commission which was sent to Egypt to study the nature and causes of cholera, which after finishing its labors at Alexandria was ordered to continue its investigations in India, has just forwarded a report from Calcutta where it arrived two or three months ago. The commission discovered the cholera germ in a water tank at Calcutta, and found in the suburban village where the cholera made its appearance the same microscopic organism which had been discovered in the lower intestines of cholera victims in Egypt.

I insist that this information, when verified in an authentic form, demands preparation and preventive legislation on our part far more than if we had authentic information that some great power was organizing the forces of war for our destruction. This preventive and preparatory legislation can only be effectively had in the form of a permanent institution of original research, amply provided with all the instrumentalities for the successful prosecution of its great and beneficent work.

Russell, in his History of Medicine, says:

Among modern physicians there is no one who by his zeal and philanthropy secured the love of his fellow-citizens in a higher degree than the late Professor Alison, of Edinburgh, and few whose opinions on any subject connected with the future prospects of medicine carry more weight with the public and the profession. He wrote as follows: "Our hopes of the increasing usefulness and efficiency of our art must depend partly on the improvement of medical education and the more uniform diffusion through the members of the profession of the knowledge which we already possess, and partly also on the progress which may yet be expected in two lines of inquiry in which our success has been as yet only partial: First, in the discovery of specifics which may counteract the different diseases and actions of which the body is susceptible as effectually as the cinchona counteracts the intermittent fever, citric acid the scurvy, or vaccination the small-pox; and secondly, in the investigation of the causes of disease, whether external or internal."

How great will be the glory, how beneficent the contributions to suffering humanity, if in this the second century of the independence of the Republic the United States shall establish a university of original research, provided with all the means for exhaustive study and investigation, and taking precedence of all peoples in the history of the world in this the first and highest of all the objects of human effort in relation to human life?

I withdraw the motion to discharge the Committee on Education and Labor from the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to discharge the committee is withdrawn.

During Mr. CALL'S speech, at 2 o'clock,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida will please suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (H. R. 2228) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and for other purposes, in respect to which the pending question is the appeal of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HARRIS. I am informed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is necessarily absent from the city, and that he desires that the motion and the pending question upon it shall go over until next Monday at 2 o'clock. I therefore ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the consideration of that question be postponed until 2 o'clock on Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the pending order be postponed until 2 o'clock on Monday next and then be considered as the unfinished business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Florida be allowed to continue his remarks.

Mr. DAWES. Is it necessary to take up the Indian appropriation bill by motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. DAWES. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Florida be permitted to conclude his remarks, after which the Chair will entertain the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. It does not make any difference which one is first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Florida proceeding with his remarks? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALL concluded his remarks, as given above.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6856) to provide for the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. 2984) granting additional pension to Apolline P. Blair, widow of the late Francis P. Blair, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I move to take up and consider at this time the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6092) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the bill be read by paragraphs, and that the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations be acted upon as they are reached in order in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill be read by paragraphs, and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be considered as the reading proceeds. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAWES. Before the Secretary commences the reading of the bill, it may be interesting and I hope instructive to the Senate to listen to a summary of its provisions, and the differences between the report of the Senate Committee on Appropriations and the bill as it came from the House, as well as the differences of each of them from what the Department estimated would be necessary for the Indian service.

The amount of estimates for the Indian service in all its departments is $8,466,809.91. The amount of the bill as it passed the House is $5,456,389.31. The Senate Committee on Appropriations have proposed amendments which increase the amount in the bill by $757,413.60, making a total, as reported by the committee for the Indian service of the present year, of $6,213,802.91. The amount appropriated last year was $5,373,655.91. The bill as reported is less than the estimates by $2,253,007. The bill as reported exceeds the act of last year by $840,147. I have here the changes in detail. The facts are fully presented in this table which I submit:

Amount of estimates for 1885		$8,466,809 91
Amount of bill as passed the House	$5,456,389 31
Increase made by the Senate Committee	757,413 60
Total as reported to the Senate		6,213,802 91
Amount of act for 1884		5,373,655 91
The bill as reported exceeds the act for 1884		840,147 00
The bill as reported, less than the estimates for 1885		2,253,007 00

The changes in amounts made by the committee in the House bill, are as follows:

INCREASE MADE BY SENATE COMMITTEE OVER HOUSE BILL.

Salaries of Indian agents	$1,400 00
Salaries of five Indian inspectors, restored	15,000 00
Traveling expenses of same	1,000 00
Buildings at agencies and repairs	30,000 00

The chief and main increase and that which is most interesting to know is in the appropriation for Indian schools. The analyses of the appropriations of last year and the proposed appropriations for the present year are as follows:

INDIAN SCHOOLS.

Amounts appropriated for 1884	$675,200
Amounts for school buildings at Arkansas City and on Sioux reservation in Dakota—reappropriations from 1883	50,000
Amount expended from the appropriation for educating children west of the Mississippi under act May 17, 1882	85,139
Total appropriated and expended for 1884	760,339
Amounts for 1885 as reported to the Senate	1,096,600
Amounts reappropriated from the appropriation for educating children west of the Mississippi	19,961
Total as reported to Senate for 1885	1,116,561
Increase as reported over 1884	356,222
Increase exclusive of amounts for buildings at Arkansas City and Sioux reservation (reappropriated) and for education of children west of the Mississippi under act May 17, 1882	421,400

I have also taken the pains to analyze the bill further, and to show under what heads this large amount is made: First, the amount appropriated by Congress under treaty, where the amount appropriated is fixed by the treaty itself, so that we have nothing to do with the amount but to fulfill our treaty obligations, amounts to $552,348.91. We have, however, under treaty, discretionary appropriations; and the amounts appropriated under treaty by Congress, where the amount is not fixed in the treaty but is left to Congress or the Department, is $2,094,237. The amount appropriated by Congress for the support of Indians as a gift, not required by any treaty obligation, but required by what we deem to be our obligations to the Indians themselves, is $1,316,500. The recapitulation of these sums amounts in the total to $3,963,085.91. This statement presents these items in detail:

Appropriated as a gift	1,316,500 00

There is, besides this, a considerable expenditure of money as the income of trust funds. A portion of this we appropriate for every year. That appropriation is found on the sixtieth page of the bill. The Indian trust funds, so held, for which we appropriate each year the income at 4 and 5 per cent., is $1,616,366.66; but this shows only a very small amount of the trust funds which belong to the Indians. These funds were originally held and invested by the Secretary of the Interior in United States bonds and other securities. Some loss of these securities was experienced about twenty years ago, just before the war, and since, in the redemption of United States bonds from time to time; bonds held in trust for the Indians have been called in, and the consequence was that the Secretary of the Interior was holding unproductive a large sum of money which belonged to the Indians.

In 1880 Congress passed an act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior in lieu of reinvestment in bonds to pay over these sums of money to the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the respective tribes of Indians for whom he originally held the bonds in trust, and the act provided for a permanent appropriation without further act of Congress of the interest upon these credits at 5 per cent. Since 1880 there have been deposited in the Treasury under that act $10,834,763.38, on which the Government pays 5 per cent. interest to the Indians according to the terms of the trust, without any further appropriation. So that the whole amount of trust fund held by the Government is $12,451,130.02.

I have here a statement from the Secretary of the Interior of the manner in which he has expended this interest on the trust funds every year, which I propose, without taking the time of the Senate, to print with the other figures, so that the interest which the trust funds are drawing from the Treasury and the manner in which they are expended will all appear in the RECORD:

Statement of Indian funds held in trust by the Government in lieu of investment on which interest is paid semi-annually by the Treasury without further appropriation by Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the pay of Indian agents, in line 64, to increase the clause for the pay of the agent "at the Pine Ridge agency" from $2,000 to $2,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 66, to increase the appropriation for the pay of the agent "at the Rosebud agency" from $2,000 to $2,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 76, to increase the appropriation for the pay of the agent "at the Mescalero agency" from $1,500 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 89, to increase the appropriation for pay of the agent "at the Sac and Fox agency, Indian Territory," from $1,200 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 97, to increase the appropriation for pay of the agent "at the Cheyenne and Arapaho agency" from $2,000 to $2,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 109, to increase the appropriation for pay of the agent "at Mackinac agency" from $1,000 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 118, after the word "all," to strike out "eighty-eight thousand nine" and insert "ninety thousand three;" so as to make the clause read:

For the Eastern Cherokee Indians, $800; in all, $90,300; and all provisions of law fixing compensation for Indian agents in excess of that herein provided are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, after line 124, to strike out the following clause:

The office of Indian inspector is hereby abolished, and the Secretary of War shall detail five officers of the Army, not under the grade of captain, who shall act, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, as Indian inspectors; and the Secretary of War shall change such officers at any time the Secretary of the Interior shall request the same to be done.

And insert in lieu thereof:

For pay of five Indian inspectors, at $3,000 per annum each, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 134, after the word "five," to strike out "Army officers detailed as;" and in line 135, after the word "inspectors," to strike out "Provided, No payment shall be made to such Army officers for traveling expenses in this service except as provided in this act;" and in line 138, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

For necessary traveling expenses of five Indian inspectors, including incidental expenses of inspection and investigation, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 142, after the word "traveling," to insert "and incidental;" so as to make the clause read:

Necessary traveling and incidental expenses of one Indian school superintendent, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 145, to increase the appropriation "for buildings at agencies and repairs of the same" from $20,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 150, before "special," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" and in line 153, after the word "traveling," to strike out "and" and insert "or;" so as to make the clause read:

For contingencies of the Indian service, including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents, and of their offices, and traveling and incidental expenses of special agents, and for pay of employés not otherwise provided for, and for pay of the five special agents, at $2,000 per annum each, $40,000: Provided, That special agents shall be allowed $3 per diem for traveling and incidental expenses while traveling or actually on duty in the field, exclusive of cost of transportation and sleeping-car fare.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 159.

Mr. DAWES. I move to add at the end of line 159:

And any unexpended balances of appropriations for the expenses of the said commission are hereby reappropriated and made available for compensation for clerical services performed by direction of the commission during the current and the last two fiscal years.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why does the Senator want to go back to cover the two years past?

Mr. DAWES. I will state that this communication came after the bill was reported. The Indian Commission have been required to do a good deal of work this year. They were employed to go down and settle the difficulty with the Creeks; they have been sent to different parts, and have done a great deal of valuable service. They go without pay. They are very short of clerical force in their office. There is about $2,500 of the appropriations of last year and the year before that is not expended. They would like to expend that in clerical force. There is no compensation for themselves; and it seemed so reasonable that I thought it should be done.

Mr. COCKRELL. Have we not been paying that commission for rent of room, for a messenger, and a whole parcel of stuff that they ought never to have had? And now it is proposed to go back and cover the past two years.

Mr. DAWES. Whether they ought to have it or not depends upon whether they are useful. If they are of no use we ought not to have kept them in existence. They are a body of men recognized by the law, and from year to year have been rendered indispensable in the opinion of the Interior Department. They were once paid officials. Afterward their expenses alone were paid, and they were provided with a clerk and a room in which to do business.

Mr. COCKRELL. And a messenger.

Mr. DAWES. And a messenger. That is all they have now; but they have a great deal more work now than they had two years ago. They have rendered very valuable service, which required the employment of clerks as best they could get them. It is only that amount. If the Senate does not think it is wise to let them have that unexpended balance, then it will not adopt the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Appropriations, as the Senator from Massachusetts will recall, has been striking at the House of Representatives in regard to appropriations of this kind and has stricken out of every appropriation bill which has come here the clauses appropriating unexpended balances on the ground that it was a vicious mode of legislation; and now the Senator comes in here and asks us to do the same thing. I protest against playing hot and cold. If it is vicious, it is vicious when added by the Senate as well as when put on by the House. Let us know the amount and not figure it in any such style as that which is now proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read for information.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that obnoxious to the point of order? It has not come here from any committee. If the Senator will make it conform to what the Senate has done all the time, and specify the amount, and if he says it is necessary, I am not going to object to it; but I will protest against it and defeat it in any way I can if left to stand as it is.

Mr. DAWES. Will it meet the Senator's views to say "$2,000 of the unexpended balances?"

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I want. I want the Committee on Appropriations to be consistent in the committee-room and out of it.

Mr. DAWES. The committee are not responsible for this.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I do not want one member of the committee to place the committee itself in an improper position, because we are here and nominally assenting to it.

Mr. DAWES. I will try not to do so; and I will try to meet the Senator's views by saying "the unexpended balances to the amount of $2,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri make a point of order?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not now if the Senator's amendment is changed so as not to appropriate what we do not know anything about. Let it specify what we appropriate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts modifies the amendment. It will be reported as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

And any unexpended balances, not to exceed $2,000, of appropriations for the expenses of the said commission, are hereby reappropriated and made available for compensation for clerical services performed by direction of the commission during the current and the last two fiscal years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state in reference to the suggested point of order of the Senator from Missouri that the rule provides that no amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be so and so. The Chair thinks that strictly a point of order of this kind should be made before the question is submitted to the Senate and debate goes on. The Chair mentions it now so as to put gentlemen in possession of what is evidently the apparent construction of the rule, though the Chair has always been very liberal in those respects. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Fulfilling treaties with Indian tribes," in the appropriations for the "Apaches, Kiowas, and Comanches," in line 169, to increase the appropriations "for purchase of clothing" from $12,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the line 171, to strike out:

For school buildings and teachers, as provided for by article 7, treaty of October 21, 1867, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 176, to reduce the total amount of the appropriations for fulfilling treaties with the "Apaches, Kiowas, and Comanches" from $54,700 to $52,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "Cheyennes and Arapahoes," in line 183, to increase the appropriation "for purchase of clothing" from $10,000 to $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 186, to strike out:

For school buildings and teachers, as provided for by article 7, treaty of October 28, 1867, $5,000.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts who has charge of the bill why lines 187, 188, and 189 are recommended to be stricken out? The Senate has agreed to strike out lines 172 to 174 inclusive, in regard to which the same inquiry might be made.

Mr. DAWES. There are quite a number of those provisions which the Senate Committee on Appropriations propose to strike out and cover them all together in another place at the close of the bill under the head of appropriations for schools, so that all the appropriations for schools may be together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 192, to reduce the total amount of the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "Cheyennes and Arapahoes" from $41,600 to $40,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "Chippewas, Pillagers and Lake Winnebagoshish bands," in line 237, before the word "article," to strike out "of;" so as to make the clause read:

For thirtieth of forty installments of annuity, in money, per third article of treaty of February 22, 1855, and third article of treaty of May 7, 1864, $10,666.66.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "Columbias and Colvilles," after the word "domain," in line 305, to insert:

And subject to entry under the homestead laws only, except such portion thereof as may properly be subject to sale under the laws relating to the entry of timber lands and of mineral lands, the entry of which shall be governed by the laws now in force concerning the entry of such lands.

So as to make the proviso read:

And provided further, That in case said Indians so elect to remain on said Columbia reservation the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the quantity of land therein stipulated to be allowed them to be selected in as compact form as possible, the same when so selected to be held for the exclusive use and occupation of said Indians, and the remainder of said reservation to be thereupon restored to the public domain, and subject to entry under the homestead laws only, except such portion thereof as may properly be subject to sale under the laws relating to the entry of timber lands and of mineral lands, the entry of which shall be governed by the laws now in force concerning the entry of such lands.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to add a verbal amendment to the amendment of the committee, to which I presume there will be no objection. I move to insert, in line 306, after the word "and," the words "shall be," and then, after the words "subject to," the words "settlement and;" so as to read:

And shall be subject to settlement and entry under the homestead laws only.

That will make it a little more specific, I think, and accomplish more certainly the object the committee had in view.

Mr. DAWES. That is right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I will add the word "which;" so as to read:

And which shall be subject to settlement and entry under the homestead laws.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "Creeks," in line 343, after the word "cents," to strike out "$2,000 of which shall be expended for educational purposes by the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to make the clause read:

For interest on $675,168 at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, under provisions of third article of treaty of June 14, 1866, $33,758.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "Crows," in line 352, after the word "dollars," to strike out "and $3,000 of this sum may be expended, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for educational purposes;" so as to make the clause read:

For third of twenty-five installments, as provided in agreement with the Crows, dated June 12, 1880, to be used by the Secretary of the Interior in such manner as the President may direct, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, under the same head, in line 370, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

For sixteenth of thirty installments, to supply three hundred and fifty boys and three hundred and fifty girls, under the ages named, such flannel and cotton goods as may be needed to make a suit as aforesaid, together with a pair of woolen hose for each, per same article, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, under the same head, in line 383, after the word "furnish" to strike out "flour and meat, and;" in the same line, after the word "articles," to insert "of food;" in line 385, after the word "require," to strike out "fifty-five" and insert "seventy-five;" and in line 368, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seven" and insert "twenty-eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to furnish such articles of food as from time to time the condition and necessities of the Indians may require, $75,000; in all, $128,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "Kickapoos," in line 409, before the word "support," to strike out "settlement;" in line 411, after the word "including," to strike out "such as may be removed hereafter" and to insert "the purchase of stock;" in line 412, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" and in the same line, after the word "all," to strike out "eight," and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Kickapoo Indians in the Indian Territory, lately removed from Mexico, including the purchase of stock, $6,000; in all, $10,493.24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 418, after the word "paid," to insert "as provided in said treaty, and;" in line 421, after "United States," to strike out "the same being" and to insert "such sum as may be;" in line 423, before the words "one hundred," to strike out "sum of;" in line 425, after "1854," to insert "not exceeding;" and in line 430, after "Treasury," to strike out "$3,716.21," so as to make the clause read:

This amount, to enable the President of the United States to carry out the provisions of the third article of the treaty made with the Kickapoo Indians, dated June 28, 1862, to be paid as provided in said treaty, and under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, to eleven Kickapoo Indians who have become citizens of the United States, such sum as may be their proportion of the $100,000 provided for said tribe for education and other beneficial purposes per treaty of May 18, 1854, not exceeding $3,716.21; and the Secretary of the Interior is directed to pay also to the said eleven Kickapoos their proportion of the tribal funds held in trust by the United States, and on deposit in the United States Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Apppropriations was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "Miamies of Eel River," after the word "dollars," in line 475, to strike out:

Provided, That Matilda Teresa Rousseau, of Saint Joseph County, Indiana, shall be entitled to her pro rata share of the money heretofore allowed the Miami tribe of Indians by the act of March 3, 1881, notwithstanding she was not included in the enumeration provided in that act; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to audit and allow her the sum that will be due as herein provided.

So as to make the clause read:

For permanent annuity, in goods or otherwise, per third and separate articles of treaty of September 30, 1809, $350; in all, $1,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out the following clause, from line 495 to line 498 inclusive:

NAVAJOES.

For school buildings and teachers, as provided by article 6, treaty of June 1, 1868, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes," before the word "thousand," in line 507, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For sixth of ten installments, to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior, for each Indian engaged in agriculture, in the purchase of such articles as from time to time the condition and necessities of the Indians may indicate to be proper, as per sixth article of treaty of May 10, 1868, and agreement with the Sioux Indians, approved February 28, 1877, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 511, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twelve;" and after the word "dollars," in the same line, to insert:

Provided, That the amounts in this and the preceding paragraphs shall be expended pro rata, as near as may be, for the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes in Wyoming, and on the Tongue River, in Montana.

So as to make the clause read:

For sixteenth of thirty installments, for purchase of clothing, as per sixth article of treaty of May 10, 1868, $12,000: Provided, That the amounts in this and the preceding paragraph shall be expended pro rata, as near as may be, for the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes in Wyoming, and on the Tongue River, in Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 518, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes" from $44,000 to $56,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts having the bill in charge to the language of the amendment inserted at line 511 and following, which would seem to exclude the Cheyennes and Arapahoes who remain in the Indian Territory. It was intended I think to divide the money pro rata among all the Cheyennes and Arapahoes who were the subject of the treaty. Instead of that it seems to limit it to those who have removed to Wyoming and Montana. There are some in the Indian Territory.

Mr. DAWES. That is not the intention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas desire to go back to a previous amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. There is no objection to the amendment in line 518.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment in line 518. Is there objection to it? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. Now add to the amendment of the committee, at the close of line 515, "as those in the Indian Territory."

Mr. PLUMB. I want to include all the Indians entitled.

Mr. ALLISON. We have been in the habit of appropriating separately for the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes, and they are distinct from the Arapahoes and Cheyennes in the Indian Territory.

Mr. PLUMB. They are Southern Cheyennes who are embraced in another provision of the bill; but the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes were sent from Montana to the Indian Territory about 1877, and a portion of them have been returned to Montana. The design of the committee in inserting this amendment was that they might have their share of the gross amount of money provided by treaty, but it was not intended to exclude those in the Indian Territory.

Mr. DAWES. I think the Senator is mistaken. The estimate found on page 114 for this whole amount has this note:

For Shoshone agency, Wyoming.

Now, a portion of the Wyoming Indians are on Tongue River, and the idea is to divide between those in Wyoming and those on Tongue River. If the Senator will look at the Book of Estimates, here is the estimate and here is the note. These are for the Shoshone agency, in Wyoming, just two items, which are in the bill. The information which we received induced us to provide for those Cheyennes and Arapahoes who have gone on to Tongue River out of the appropriations for those for Wyoming. Suppose we go on with the understanding that if it be necessary we shall return to this item and let the Senator look into it. Will that do?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause making appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "Omahas," in lines 524, 525, and 526, to strike out the following words:

Seven thousand five hundred dollars of which may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be expended for educational purposes.

So as to make the clause read:

For second of twelve installments, being last series, in money or otherwise, per fourth article treaty of March 16, 1854, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in the appropriation for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi," after the word "Iowa," in line 647, to insert:

And provided further, That there is hereby appropriated, from the moneys to the credit of the Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi on the books of the Treasury, a sum sufficient, not to exceed $15,000, to purchase not more than two sections of land in Kansas for the use and benefit of such portion of said tribe as is now in said State, the title to said land to be taken in the name of the United States, in trust for the use and benefit of said Indians, who may receive patents therefor in the same manner and upon the same conditions and requirements as are provided for the Sioux Indians by article 6 of the treaty concluded April 29, 1868, and the provisions of the act approved March 1, 1883, relating to the Sioux Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "Shoshones and Bannocks," in line 764, before the word "dollars," to strike out "ten thousand" and insert "eleven thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Shoshones: For fifteenth of thirty installments, to purchase suits of clothing for males over 14 years of age, flannel, hose, calico, and domestics, for females over the age of 12 years, and such goods as may be needed to make suits for boys and girls under the ages named, as per ninth article of treaty of July 3, 1868, $11,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was to strike out lines 772 and 773, as follows:

For school buildings and teachers, as provided for by article 7 of the same treaty, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was to strike out lines 781 and 782, as follows:

For school buildings and teachers, as provided for by article 7 of the same treaty, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 786, to reduce the total amount of the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "Shoshones and Bannocks" from $30,800 to $27,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with "Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska," in line 801, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-eight" and insert "forty;" so as to make the clause read:

For fifteenth of thirty installments, to purchase clothing for males over 14 years of age, for flannel, hose, and calico, and domestics required for females over 12 years of age, and for such flannel and cotton goods as may be needed to make suits for boys and girls, per tenth article of treaty of April 29, 1868, $140,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 817, to increase the appropriation "for pay of additional employés at the several agencies for the Sioux in Nebraska and Dakota" from $20,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 825, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 826, after the word "dollars," to insert "and an additional sum of $75,000, to be expended only on the condition that the remainder of Sitting Bull's band shall return to the United States and unite with said tribes;" in line 829, after the word "tribes," to strike out "and not exceeding $70,000 of this amount may be used for;" in line 831, before the word "transportation," to insert "above sums shall include;" and in line 834, after the word "practicable," to strike out "Provided, That the supplies issued under this appropriation shall not be issued for a greater length of time at any one time of issue than ten days;" so as to make the clause read:

For subsistence of the Sioux, and for purposes of their civilization, as per agreement ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877, $1,325,000, and an additional sum of $75,000, to be expended only on the condition that the remainder of Sitting Bull's band shall return to the United States and unite with said tribes; the above sums shall include transportation of supplies from the termination of railroad or steamboat transportation; and in this service Indians shall be employed wherever practicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 836, to strike out:

For the support, civilization, and education of the Medewakanton band of Sioux Indians, in the State of Minnesota, $10,000.

And insert:

For the purchase of stock for the Medewakanton band of Sioux Indians, in the State of Minnesota, and other articles necessary for their civilization and education, and to enable them to become self-supporting, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 845 to 1847, inclusive, as follows:

For school buildings and teachers, as per article 7 of treaty of April 29, 1868, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 850, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for fulfilling treaty stipulations with "Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska," from $1,646,300 to $1,803,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in the appropriation for fulfilling the treaty with the "Sioux, Yankton tribe," in line 857, after the words "civilization of," to insert "and purchase of stock for;" so as to make the clause read:

For subsistence and civilization of and purchase of stock for 2,000 Yankton Sioux heretofore provided for in appropriations under "fulfilling treaty with Sioux of different tribes," $40,000; in all, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "confederated bands of Utes," in line 880, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the clause read:

For sixteenth of thirty installments, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for clothing, blankets, and such other articles as he may deem proper and necessary, under eleventh article of same treaty, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 883, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the clause read:

For annual amount, for the purchase of beef, mutton, wheat, flour, beans, and potatoes, as per twelfth article of same treaty, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 884 and 885, as follows:

For school building and teachers, as provided for by article 7, same treaty, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 887, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the "confederated bands of Utes" from $63,020 to $73,020.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 932, to increase the appropriation "for subsistence and civilization of the Assinaboines in Montana, including pay of employés," from $20,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 936, to increase the appropriation "for support, education, and civilization of the Blackfeet, Bloods, and Piegans, including pay of employés," from $45,000 to $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 953, before the words "one thousand two hundred dollars," to insert "not to exceed;" so as to make the clause read:

Support of Chippewas on White Earth reservation: For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the care and support of the Otter Tail, Pillager, Pembina, and Mississippi Chippewa Indians on the White Earth reservation, in Minnesota, to assist them in their agricultural operations, and for pay of physician (not to exceed $1,200), $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 954, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to establish the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewas in permanent homes on homesteads, and to purchase stock, implements, and other necessaries, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 958, to insert:

For the removal and settlement of the White Oak Point and Mille Lac bands of Chippewa Indians on the White Earth reservation, in Minnesota, $15,000: Provided, That the lands vacated by said Indians shall not be disposed of in any manner until further legislation by Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish that action on that amendment be postponed until the bill is concluded. I wish to suggest to the Senator having charge of the bill an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. DAWES. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the question on this amendment be passed over informally. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 973.

Mr. VEST. I wish to offer an amendment at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendments are not now in order, except from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VEST. I ask consent to offer it. I think there will be no objection. After line 973 I move to insert:

For payment to the Flathead, Cootenay, and Lower Pend d'Orielle Indians in Montana Territory, for the right of way to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company over their reservation, the sums of $16,000 and $7,625, the former sum being due to the tribes before-named in their tribal organization, and the latter sum to individual members of said tribes under the terms of an agreement made between said tribes and the United States on September 2, 1882, and being the amounts of money heretofore paid to the United States by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in payment for said right of way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment being now considered? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to it.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Missouri can explain the amendment, but perhaps I may as well do it.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company made an agreement with these Indians, which was ratified by the Government of the United States, by which it agreed to pay for the right of way over the lands of these Indians the sums specified in this amendment. The company has paid the money into the Treasury of the United States according to the agreement, but it can not be got out of the Treasury for these Indians except by an appropriation, and they have been expecting it and are needing it and are in great distress for the need of subsistence, and they are wondering why they do not get the money.

A bill has passed the Senate appropriating these sums out of the Treasury to these Indians, but it is doubtful whether it gets any further this session, and it is only to meet such an exigency as that that the Senator from Missouri offers this amendment to this bill. It was not brought before the attention of the Committee on Appropriations because it did not occur to any one but that the bill which passed the Senate would probably become a law at this session. It is now apparent that it may not become a law, and the result would be to leave these Indians in a very bad fix if they could not get their money which the company has paid into the Treasury, and would leave the Government, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] suggests, in a bad fix.

Mr. DOLPH. I rose to inquire in regard to the facts of the case. If the facts are as stated by the Senator who has charge of the bill, if this money is now in the Treasury of the United States, and can only go to the Indians when it is appropriated by Congress, then I think the amendment is right; but that is not the usual course. I think the usual agreement is—I do not know how it is in this case—that the money is used for the benefit of the Indians under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. I did not suppose that the money had been covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. VEST. It has been.

Mr. DOLPH. If it has been, of course it will require an appropriation to get it out and pay it to the Indians.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to hear the amendment read again so that it may be seen what is to be done with the money, because it should be applied by the Secretary of the Interior according to the terms of the agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to add to the amendment the words "to be paid in conformity with the terms of said agreement."

Mr. VEST. Put that in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified and will be stated as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is modified by adding:

And said sum shall be paid in conformity with the provisions of the aforesaid agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 973, to insert:

For support and civilization of Charlos's band of Flathead Indians, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for those of said Indians who remain in Bitter Root Valley, as well as for those who remove to the Jocko reservation, $21,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 981, to increase the appropriation "for subsistence and civilization of the Gros Ventres in Montana, including pay of employés," from $20,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I ask leave to go back to line 959 and consider that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paragraph referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts will now be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 958 it is proposed to insert:

For the removal and settlement of the White Oak Point and Mille Lac bands of Chippewa Indians on the White Earth reservation, in Minnesota, $15,000: Provided, That the lands vacated by said Indians shall not be disposed of in any manner until further legislation by Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend by adding this proviso in place of the proviso contained in the amendment as printed:

Provided, That the lands acquired from said Indians by the treaty proclaimed March 19, 1863, shall not be patented or disposed of in any manner until further legislation by Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does that include all the lands?

Mr. DAWES. All those acquired under the treaty. It means the same as we intended to make the original amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 999, after the word "improvement," to strike out "eighty" and insert "one hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Support of Indians at Fort Peck agency: For this amount, to be expended in such goods, provisions, and other useful articles as the President may from time to time determine, in instructing in agricultural and mechanical pursuits, in providing employés, educating children, procuring medicine and medical attendance, care for and support of the aged, sick, and infirm, for the helpless orphans of said Indians, and in any respect to promote their civilization, comfort, and improvement, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1104, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

For subsistence, support, civilization, and instruction of the Shoshones and Bannocks, and other Indians of the Fort Hall reservation, in Idaho Territory, including pay of employés, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1008, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "eighteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For support, civilization, and instruction of the Shoshones, Bannocks, and Sheepeaters, and other Indians of the Lemhi agency, in Idaho Territory, including pay of employés, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 1017.

Mr. PLUMB. It is a matter not of any very grave import, but in line 1016 the word "subsistence" is used where I think it would be better to use the word "support." It is used in a sense that I think "support" would answer better. I therefore move to strike out the word "subsistence" and insert the word "support;" so as to read:

For support and civilization of the Makahs, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1021, to increase the appropriation "for support and civilization of the Modoc Indians now residing within the Indian Territory" from $4,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1024, after the word "including," to insert "the construction of ditches, reservoirs, and wells, the purchase of stock;" in line 1026, before "medicines," to insert "purchase of;" after "medicines" to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be paid from the funds now in the Treasury belonging to said Indians;" so as to make the clause read:

For instruction, support, and civilization of the Navajo Indians, including the construction of ditches, reservoirs, and wells, the purchase of stock, pay of employés, and purchase of medicines, $50,000, to be paid from the funds now in the Treasury belonging to said Indians; and not exceeding $1,200 of this amount may be paid for a clerk.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1032, after the clause "for support and civilization of Joseph's band of Nez Percé Indians in the Indian Territory, $20,000," to add the following:

And of this amount a sum not exceeding $1,625 may be paid, under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to James Reuben, for expenses incurred by him in taking thirty-three Nez Percé Indians from the Indian Territory to Idaho; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to expend the balance of this appropriation for the removal of the Nez Percé Indians now in the Indian Territory to some other location, if he deems it proper so to do, and for their support at such new location.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 1046, to increase the appropriation "for support and civilization of Shoshone Indians in Wyoming" from $12,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1046, to insert:

For support and civilization of Shoshone Indians in Nevada, including pay of employés, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 1054.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to line 1053, where the word "subsistence" again occurs.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall not move an amendment there. I observe that the words "subsistence" and "support" have been used interchangeably in different portions of the bill, and as it would require a number of corrections to render them uniform, I shall not take up the time of the Senate with the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1056, after the word "Indians," to strike out "at Fort Griffin, Tex.;" so as to make the clause read:

For support, civilization, and instruction of the Tonkawa Indians, and for their removal to a reservation in the Indian Territory, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for support of schools," in line 1067, after the word "for," to insert "and in pursuance of treaty obligations, $550,000;" so as to read:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, and in pursuance of treaty obligations, $550,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1069, after the word "buildings," to insert "$75,000;" so as to read:

For construction and repair of school buildings, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1070, after the word "schools," to strike out "four hundred" and insert "twenty-five;" and in line 1071, after the word "dollars," to insert "in all, $650,000;" so as to read:

And for purchase of cattle and sheep for schools, $25,000; in all, $650,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 1072, to strike out:

And no portion of this sum, nor of any other sum appropriated by this act for the support of Indian schools, shall be paid for service rendered by any scholar taught in said schools during the period of his tuition, except for excess of value of labor over and above cost of tuition and support, or either furnished by the Government.

And insert:

Provided, That the entire cost of any boarding-school building to be built from the moneys appropriated hereby, including furniture, shall not exceed $5,000; and the entire cost of any day-school building to be so built shall not exceed $800.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the committee to move an amendment to this amendment. In line 1080 I move to strike out "five" and insert "fifteen" before "thousand;" so as to read:

Shall not exceed $15,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1084, to reduce the appropriation "for support and education of Indian children at industrial schools in Alaska" from $15,000 to $10,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; I object to the amendment. The Secretary of the Interior recommended an appropriation of $25,000 for schools in Alaska. I need not rehearse to the Senate the obligations we are under to the people of that Territory, which obligations, I am sorry to say, we have almost wholly neglected for the past sixteen years. During a large part of the sixteen years we have been receiving a very handsome dividend upon the sum we gave for that Territory, but have expended next to nothing upon it unless we take into account the cost of some revenue-cutters traveling along the coast, and now the salary of a collector and two or three other officials.

The Secretary of the Interior, who is well informed on the subject, recommends an appropriation of $25,000. The bill comes to us appropriating $15,000, and the committee recommend that that be still further reduced by inserting $10,000 instead of $15,000. I wish the chairman of the subcommittee would kindly enlighten us as to the reasons, for I presume he has reasons that seem good to him, and perhaps they are good; but I should like to hear them.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. HAWLEY. I asked the Senator in charge of the bill to give some reasons for this reduction.

Mr. DAWES. The committee were of opinion that money appropriated for schools in Alaska at this time and under the conditions which exist there would be money thrown away; that there were no conditions such as would enable any one to expend the money economically and effectively for the purposes of education. It was in that disposition that the committee cut down this provision. There was an effort to strike it out entirely.

I am free myself to say that this is the only feature in the bill in which I could not concur with the committee. I regretted very much their cutting down this appropriation, and I shall vote against the amendment itself; but I have given the reasons which influenced the committee in proposing this amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. The objection that $15,000 appropriated there would be thrown away in the present condition of the civilization of the Alaska Indians is equally good obviously against the proposition to appropriate $10,000. Some people think that money is not wasted there in education. For example, it is made a matter of congratulation, and justly a matter of congratulation, in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that the churches and benevolent associations of this country are spending $25,149 upon education in Alaska. They did that I suppose within the last year. They are not throwing away their money, at least they think they are not, and they have been continuously supplying it. They are supplying our deficiencies, our neglect of moral and political obligations. The benevolent institutions and religious societies are supplying, I see by the same report, $239,430 to the general subject of education among the Indians of all parts of the country.

The population and the character of the population of Alaska are very well understood. There are some 20,000 Indians there, of whom four or five thousand are in a semi-state of civilization; they are called semi-civilized people. The Russians furnished them something in the nature of religion, the best they had, and as far as I know a good article, but we have not sent them anything. The Russians organized and supported Greek churches over a large portion of the territory. We have done absolutely nothing. The Russians supported schools there; we have done nothing. I think this is the first attempt to appropriate anything there. I believe there never has been one dollar given by this Government to support schools in Alaska. I recollect nothing.

Mr. DAWES. There was $50,000 appropriated some ten or fifteen years ago when I was in the other House, and it was in a gross sum. The purpose of it was to go to Alaska, but the examination by the authorities who had the money to expend of the facilities for expending it profitably there was such that they never expended it. We have in point of fact never expended a dollar there, although ten years ago, when I had charge of an appropriation bill in the House, there was included in the appropriations an item of $50,000 for educational purposes in Alaska. It was never expended, and it was a good many years before I could find out why. I have succeeded in getting the answer, which I have given to the Senator, that it was not expended because our officers did not know how to expend it. That answer I think influenced the committee somewhat in thinking that the same condition of things exists now that did then, and they would not know how to expend the money if it was appropriated.

I would have this item $25,000 instead of $10,000, because I believe it can be expended, and properly expended, and profitably expended, but the committee whose organ I am were of the opinion it should be cut down.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was not far out of the way, then. An appropriation was made, but made so long ago that nearly everybody had forgotten it, and on investigation it proves that no dollar of it was ever expended. I would rather waste $25,000 one year than to leave this reproach any longer upon us. I have no idea, however, that this would be wasted under the care of the Secretary of the Interior. It will, if granted, build a few plain school-houses and support a few teachers. It will be an experiment—merely a beginning. It would be about one-tenth or one-twelfth of the revenue that we are annually receiving from Alaska. We have kept that Territory, in the face of our solemn treaty with Russia, to make money out of, and have absolutely neglected every duty we owe to those people, the only officer we have sent there being a collector of customs to gather a few more dollars besides those we get from the Alaska Fur Seal Company. I hope the Senate will trust the Secretary of the Interior to expend just $25,000 upon the education of four or five thousand children there. Let us make the experiment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have been trying to catch the point the Senator was making, and I desire to know if he has offered any amendment?

Mr. HAWLEY. I was speaking on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it will be in the recollection, I think, of most Senators that when the bill providing for the organization of a civil government for the Territory of Alaska was under discussion early in this session of the Senate we had considerable debate over an education clause that was contained in that bill. That bill proposed to appropriate $25,000 for education in Alaska. I have turned to the discussion before the Senate on that feature of it and I desire to read the remarks of the distinguished member of the Committee on Appropriations who has this appropriation bill in charge.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me? I forgot to move the amendment I rose for the purpose of moving.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us first disagree to the committee's amendment. That is the proposition now.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have been advised that my better way is to move to insert "twenty-five" instead of "ten."

Mr. COCKRELL. I raise the point of order on anything that increases the amount.

Mr. HAWLEY. My amendment is in accordance with the estimate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will treat the question in such a way that the Senator from Missouri will have his point of order reserved when the time comes.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the question now is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the pending question.

Mr. HARRISON. I suppose that any amendment to the bill, if this amendment of the committee were disagreed to, would not be in order now under the agreement as to the consideration of the bill. The committee amendments were first to be acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order to move any amendment that would be at any time in order to the amendments of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. When the educational feature of the Alaska bill was under discussion my friend the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] said, addressing me:

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator to make that $40,000 instead of $25,000, so that it may be understood that no effort to change phraseology here is animated by a spirit of cramping at all the purposes of the committee.

And again:

Mr. DAWES. I do not desire to press an excessive sum. If the committee have determined that $25,000 is as far as can be prudently and wisely expended, I withdraw any suggestion of any increase of the sum. My opinion is that in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior not a dollar will be expended beyond the limitations of wisdom and prudence in the administration of the fund.

The colleague of the Senator [Mr. HOAR], referring to a statement I had made as to the number of pupils already in the schools maintained there by the religious societies, said:

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me, if that be true, the Senator should have insisted on the $40,000 suggested by my colleague rather than the $25,000, which must be an entirely inadequate provision, because we have not only to provide for instruction but provide in the first instance school buildings and apparatus, and this sum of $25,000 is not the cost of one of probably twenty school-houses that you can find in any of our populous towns or cities.

To that I responded at the time that the Committee on Territories in naming the sum of $25,000 had supposed that it was as much as the Senate would be willing to vote, not as an expression of our judgment as to the amount that might profitably and reasonably be expended in Alaska for education; but as we were simply beginning schools there it was thought to be as much as we could prudently name at the beginning. This amendment, proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, if it is adopted, instead of giving us the sum of $40,000, which the Senator from Massachusetts himself suggested as the proper sum to be named in the Alaska bill, would reduce the entire appropriation for education in Alaska to $10,000. If, as he argued, $25,000 was inadequate, how much more, then, is the $10,000, which is proposed to be the extreme limit to be given for this purpose, utterly inadequate?

Mr. President, when $25,000 was agreed by the Senate to be appropriated by the Alaska bill, it was then distinctly said—and I remind the Senator from Kansas himself that he too raised this proposition—that the amount was too small. I think, therefore, as the Senator from Connecticut has said, that this appropriation should be increased to at least $25,000, because it is not likely that the appropriation made in the bill providing a government for Alaska will go into force at this session of Congress or can have effect at all until next year, and in that state of the case we should have only the sum of $10,000 to be expended for education there.

It is true, as the Senator from Connecticut has said, that under the auspices of religious societies, and maintained by the free contributions of our people in the States, there have been started in Alaska a number of most flourishing schools. As I have been informed they last year had 1,000 scholars in attendance, perhaps not all of the school age, some of them probably adults, and the number was simply limited by the capacities of the school buildings to contain them and the teachers to instruct them. It was said, as I had occasion to mention before of the Indians of the coast, that they are intelligent people, and some one writing of them said they are a people mad for education.

I think that we ought to show not a parsimonious but a liberal spirit.

Why, Mr. President, in one of the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations to this bill which we have just adopted we have allowed the sum of $15,000 to be expended for a single boarding-school. The committee had reported a limit of $5,000, and it was increased upon their suggestion to $15,000, so that they contemplate an expenditure for a single boarding-school among other Indians of $5,000 more than the entire appropriation for the Indian education in the Territory of Alaska. I am sure the Senate, upon reflection and upon recollection of what was in the contemplation of the Senate when the Alaska bill was passed, will at least secure $25,000 by this bill for the purposes named.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

Mr. HAWLEY. Now I will make the motion I intended to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLUMB. I will yield to allow the motion to be made.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to insert "twenty-five" instead of "ten."

Mr. COCKRELL. I raise the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves to amend the amendment by striking out "ten" and inserting "twenty-five."

Mr. PLUMB. There is no "ten" to strike out as I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the question. If the Chair understands correctly the Senator from Connecticut, he moves to amend that part of the amendment of the committee which proposes to insert the word "ten" by striking out the word "ten" and inserting the word "twenty-five." On that question the Senator from Missouri raises a point of order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That it increases the appropriation, and is therefore out of order under Rule XVI.

Mr. HAWLEY. To which I may be allowed to respond that it is in accordance precisely with the Book of Estimates, and that admits the amendment under the rule. It is the exact figure recommended in the Book of Estimates and fortified by the arguments of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior in their reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The sixteenth rule provides in relation to appropriation bills that—

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session—

And similarly that no amendment to increase the amount in an amendment reported from a committee shall be in order—

unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

The Senator from Connecticut calls the attention of the Chair to the book of annual estimates submitted by the Treasury Department in pursuance of law, and under the head of "Interior Department, Indian Affairs," submitted by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission in pursuance of law, is this paragraph, under "Estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885:"

Support of Indian schools in Alaska: Support and education of Indian children at industrial schools in Alaska, $25,000.

The Chair therefore thinks that the motion to amend the amendment of the committee by increasing the amount from $10,000 to $25,000 is in order.

Mr. PLUMB addressed the Senate. [See Appendix.]

Mr. CONGER obtained the floor.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator give way to a motion to adjourn? We can not conclude this bill this afternoon.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us go on.

Mr. VEST. Will not the Senator from Michigan give way to a motion to adjourn?

Mr. CONGER. I desire to occupy but a short time, and I can say what I have to say better now probably, unless there is some particular reason for adjourning at this time. ["Go on!"]

I should like to say, Mr. President, what I have to say while the remarks of the Senator from Kansas are fresh in his mind, and in the mind and hearing of Senators here, because I think after one good night's rest and a quiet return to the normal condition of my friend, if he could review this speech which he has made he would wish to alter it so effectually that it might be thought to be the speech of any other Senator on this floor than himself.

It was an unusual ebullition against Christendom and against religion and against churches and against white people and against Indian people and against Aleuts and against Chilkahts and against every class and condition of men. The Lord only knows what was done in a committee that could have reported such an attack upon all the civilizing influences which humanity is using in this world to elevate the condition of men; I can not imagine. Generally the Senator from Kansas is one of the most forward men on this floor to advocate the elevation of the race, high or low, rich or poor, proud or humble; and yet I must say that with ridicule and with zeal and with earnestness and with far-fetched allusions, I think this the most extraordinary speech against the attempt to benefit inhabitants of the United States, wherever they may be found, that has ever been delivered on the floor of the Senate. Why, sir, one would think that there had been a great wrong to the Government of the United States and to the people of the United States in Alaska, that there was some retribution to be heaped upon the memory of those who procured Alaska to this Government, that the sins of the fathers of this nation were to be visited upon the poor unfortunate Aleuts and Chilkahts and other inhabitants of that far-off and lonely region.

Mr. President, it is but a few years since this Government, at an expense of $7,000,000, procured by treaty from Russia this Alaskan territory. Many thought it was a matter of political necessity for which this Government should pay $7,000,000 merely to get behind the British territory on this continent and be north of it and have a loop-hole in the rear. Many thought that it was a beautiful tropical climate, adorned with flowers and fruits and roses. There were all kinds of imaginations about it. It was supposed, at all events, at that time that for all practical and substantial purposes as a part of the United States it was a mere sentimental treaty acquiring what was worthless in a money consideration, and only extending our territories where we could.

But nothwithstanding that the Government of the United States entered into a solemn treaty with Russia in making that purchase that the inhabitants of Alaska should enjoy all the rights, privileges, immunities, and advantages of citizens of the United States if they desired to remain in the Territory of Alaska as citizens of the United States under the new purchase, sir, this Government solemnly bound itself to grant all privileges of citizenship and all rights to the people that remained. In regard to this particular clause relating to education the Government bound itself to and with the Russian Government that their educational institutions should be preserved, that their churches, which under the Russian system were merely educational institutions, should all be preserved to those who owned them, recognizing both their edifices for religious worship and their edifices for educational purposes. That was in the treaty made by our Government.

It is, however, understood and agreed that the churches which have been built in the ceded territory by the Russian Government shall remain the property of such members of the Greek Oriental Church resident in the Territory as may choose to worship therein.

And any one who has read the history of their churches either in Russia or in Alaska knows that they are merely collections of schools, and their only means of education. This Government has recognized its duty to provide for the education of a portion of these citizens in its own laws. I find in the statutes approved July 1, 1870, this provision in regard to the lease of the two islands Saint Paul and Saint George for the purpose of obtaining the fur-seal bearing animals of Alaska:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby empowered and authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for the collection and payment of the same—for the comfort, maintenance, education, and protection of the natives of said islands, and also for carrying into full effect all the provisions of this act.

Being the rents for the islands—

The Government of the United States has received as the proceeds of two little islands, mere specks in that great Behring's Sea, three hundred miles from the mainland of Alaska, up to this date $3,945,000 in cash into the Treasury of the United States, at an expense of less than $11,000 a year all told. It has received into the Treasury of the United States from 1870 up to this time a net profit of over $3,000,000 and a gross sum in money of over $4,000,000—more than half the whole purchase-money of Alaska from two little islands, Saint Paul and Saint George in Behring's Sea; more than half enough to repay the purchase-money for Alaska; more than 6 per cent. interest annually upon that purchase-money.

When we received that territory there were Greek churches scattered at all the principal places of residence of the Aleuts. When we received that territory there were school-houses at every village scattered along the islands. When we received that territory the Aleuts, the largest portion of the inhabitants of Alaska, lived in houses with furniture and conveniences equal to those of our frontier settlers in the United States, with religion, with education, with the cultivation of the domestic virtues, as pure and innocent-hearted a people as dwelt upon the face of the earth. For almost twenty years this Government has never expended a dollar for the improvement and education of that people. It has drawn from that region over $4,000,000, and has never returned, that I know of, even in the shape of educational privileges or to support their worship or to improve their condition, one single dollar. Is there nothing due from this people to the inhabitants of a land which they purchased at great cost? Is there nothing due from this people and from this Senate to the inhabitants of a land which notwithstanding its great cost has been an unusually profitable investment pecuniarily to the United States, and bids fair in the future to be one of the most valuable territories in our land?

Mr. President, I have examined with care for many of the past years that country lying adjacent to the United States on the other side of the Saint Clair River, where I live—Canada, with its Indian tribes located within sight of my own home, where the British Government has had control—and compared it with our own care for Indians in the United States.

Sir, from the mouth of the Saint Lawrence to the far-off northern regions of Prince Rupert's Land there is no tribe of Indians where the government of Canada has not founded its schools and supported them and educated the people; not only built school-houses but built churches, taught those people; and the result has been that for the last fifty years, with a large population of different tribes of Indians extending from Labrador to British Columbia, there never has been an Indian war in all that vast province. There has never been an expenditure of a thousand dollars for armament or for troops to put down Indian outbreaks. And yet there are the same kinds of Indians that live within our border; the same tribes, with the same peculiarities, with the same habits in many respects, with whom our Government has been from time to time engaged in vigorous and bloody war. For fifty years there never has been in Canada one outbreak among the Indian tribes, although they are counted by thousands and hundreds of thousands. Why? Because the missionary, that the Senator from Kansas speaks of with such unmitigated contempt, passes under the sanction of the government into all those wild regions. The Catholic, the Episcopalian, the Presbyterian, the Methodist, the Baptist, all denominations have sent their missionaries and established their mission schools, and in great number. The Government does not think it derogatory to its character to aid any branch of people, no matter what their sectarian or religious views may be of a denominational character, in reclaiming savages from their wild state and educating them in the principles of religion and of morals and of government and of society, making them better.

Oh, sir, it is no wonder that right along that imaginary dividing line, the forty-ninth parallel, for more than 3,000 miles, and along our lakes and rivers, on the cold north, with fifty-three different tribes of Indians from Labrador to the Pacific, incited by all the passions, incited by all the lust, incited by all the desires, incited by all the heroism of Indian nature, there has never been one single outbreak; there has never been one general massacre; there has never been a war nor a battle for fifty years; and the moment you pass south of that imaginary line into the territory where we are all sovereigns, into a territory where every man and woman and child is taught to believe in education, in virtue, in religion, in morality, wars rage and the thunder of battle is heard on the plains and on the mountain with such frequency that we hardly look up to inquire whence the sound of the thunder comes.

What is the reason for this difference? There is something essentially right and essentially wrong in these two conditions. The one is that under an arbitrary, monarchical government justice has been done, rights have been respected, the means of education have been afforded, the restraints of religion have been imposed, government has encouraged even the missionary to lend his powerful aid to redeem from the degradation of savagery the people who inhabit that land; and on our side there has been too often expressed and carried out in practice the theory of our modern days that the only good Indian is a dead Indian, and that the only territory left to the Indian in this land, once all his own, is a little strip to which we all are hastening, six feet by three, deep in the ground.

Sir, I regret more than I have words to express what I have heard fall from the lips of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I say it in sorrow. I do not attach that same feeling to the remarks of the Senator from Kansas, because he lives upon the frontier, because he is imbued with the frontier feeling as to the Indian, because his people want the land on which the Indian trod, and insensibly those feelings have taken possession of him which have taken possession of many other good, kind-hearted Christian men. But why he in whose hands we have placed the care of the Indians, why he into whose hands we have given the protection of the Indians, their advancement, their culture, their conduct physically and perhaps religiously, should be willing to permit, if he could possibly avoid it, the little paltry pittance of $15,000 in the bill as it came from the House to be cut down $5,000, one-third, without raising his voice, as he does often in behalf of the right, I can not understand.

Mr. DAWES. I think if the Senator had been listening here he would have understood my position. I believe the Senator has been told, all the Senators present in this Chamber have been told, that I did all I could to make this appropriation $25,000 and that I should vote to make it $25,000. The Senator must have been absent during some interesting part of this discussion.

Mr. CONGER. I did not unfortunately hear that remark of the Senator, but I have no doubt he made the remark. I have heard him on these occasions with a voice like thunder denounce what he believed to be such a wrong to these people, and I am glad he has reiterated his views here.

Now, Mr. President, of the $4,000,000 which this Government has to-day in its Treasury received from all Alaska it proposes in this bill, which appropriates hundreds of thousands of dollars for the education of our own Indians on the plains, and in the mountains, wild Indians and tame Indians, Christian Indians and pagan Indians, cannibals and saints, to expend in Alaska $10,000.

Sir, I was amused as other Senators were over the capital and practical illustration of the Senator from Kansas in regard to the methods by which Indian children may be induced to give some attention to the instruction and to the instructors furnished them. Why, sir, there is a picture of rude, wild children gathered by all the inducements and enticements that a loving man or woman can hold out to them to gather them in from the wild forests and from the rock and from the seashore and from the mountain-top, to bring them under some influences for education, for culture, for reclamation from a savage state, to teach them first those things that interest them; and here is a learned gentleman, he says, a professional man, an astronomer traveling for health in that region, and it is a matter of supreme ridicule to my friend who has sported over the plains of Kansas shooting the antelope that this astronomical philosopher should try in the forests or on the shores of Alaska to see whether he could make any impression upon the minds of the ignorant people there and gather them by some means so that he could convey information.

Why, sir, the gentleman says he made an orrery of pieces of tallow; he placed the sun here and the earth there, and the planets in their places, and the moon where it belonged—an orrery in Alaska of pieces of tallow, and when the little wondering minds were afraid they could not comprehend it he told them as thousands of men and women do in this Christian land, "if you come and get your lesson you shall have some candy, you shall have the tallow;" and they came and this astronomer pointed out the sun and the moon and the stars and the place of the earth, gave them their first information perhaps, old and young that were there, of how God's world was made. That man believed in teaching those children and those Indians something about the Creator and the creation. No matter what his object was, no matter how intensely he may have interested them in this work, it is enough to overturn all the efforts and all the feelings of philanthropy of this man to say that he gave the tallow to the children when they were done.

If there could be no incentive to study, and to thought, and to labor, if there could be no reward held out after nights of toil and days of study, where would you and I be, sir, in the intellectual race? Learning does not come without being sought. Education is not obtained without an effort. The mind does not expand itself without any inducement. In Alaska there are many schools; in Alaska there are Christians—I am not ashamed to speak the name even in the august presence of the Senator from Kansas—in Alaska there are Christians who have gone to that far-off land and established schools and are teaching the children of that land and gathering them in and holding out all inducements to them to study and to learn to fit them for earth and fit them for heaven.

The Government never gave a cent, but the people of the United States have, as they had opportunity and saw fit, contributed many thousand dollars to educate those far-off dwellers by the sea. They have established there schools. The gentleman referred to by the Senator from Kansas who has and is spending his life in efforts to build up in near and remote regions of the land schools and churches, as to whom I to-day for the first time ever heard an insinuation against his integrity, against his honesty, against his virtue, against his religion, against his judicious zeal for the cause of his Master, does visit that region. There are educated intelligent ladies there teaching those schools, fit to adorn any circle in this land, giving their lives to it, dependent upon the charities of the churches and not upon the help of their Government. I have seen the photographs of many of their schoolhouses scattered all along the coast; I have seen the photographs of the children assembled before them with their teachers; I have seen the neat, cleanly appearance of those children, their bright intelligent looks as photographed before me. Sir, the time is coming, is fast approaching, when the totem-posts upon which are carved the idols of their families and which are planted at the doors of the houses of the Alaskans will be laid aside and the columns of the temple and the belfry of the school-houses will be taking their places.

Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas said that some superintendent of some school or some teacher had asked for shoes for Indian children at $3 a pair, asked the Secretary of the Interior to furnish shoes at $3 and I think 27 cents or 44 cents a pair. Sir, the answer of our distinguished Secretary of the Interior written to that superintendent or teacher, and as a circular to all superintendents and teachers, was worthy of the man and was worthy of the officer. In a brief letter he explained his opinion and he believed the opinion of the Government in regard to the mode of education, the mode of clothing, and the things that it was desirable to teach, and the rules and methods to be observed—a letter that should be printed in letters of gold and framed in every agency and in every school-house. Oh, sir, without being much of a man-worshiper or allowing my feelings in my old age to go out toward any man with any particular zeal, I can not deny that when I read that answer (which was not referred to by the Senator from Kansas) to the letter to which he did refer, I felt proud of my race, I felt proud of my Government, I felt proud of the Secretary of the Interior that he should be prompted to write so good, so practical, so kind, so decisive, so energetic a letter to the agents of this Government and teach them so well in that brief rounded letter what was expected of them by the people of the United States and in what way they could best perform their duties to their Government and to those that they were sent to care for and minister to.

That same Secretary recommends $50,000 for the schools in Alaska. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommends $50,000 for the schools of Alaska. The President sends to Congress the communications in which both these officers recommend that there be put into this very appropriation bill an item of $50,000 for this purpose, not with approval or disapproval, but in the ordinary way in which he sends the opinions of his officials and asks for them the consideration of Congress. The more recommendations there are for any reasonable appropriations, the more this committee have cut the appropriations down.

For me, sir, I shall vote for the amendment to appropriate $25,000, heartily and cheerfully. I would prefer that the sum were $50,000. I know of no way in which we may appropriate a little pittance of the $4,000,000 that lies in our Treasury, derived from that unhappy land, better than by giving back to it for educational purposes some of that magnificent fund. I would give at least as much as Russia in the years gone by. I would do as much for these people as I would for the murdering savages upon our plains and in our mountains. I would treat a people partly educated, living in the forms of civilized life, most of them dwelling in houses, heretofore having had their education from their old government, as well as I would the blood-thirsty Arapahoes, and the Apaches, and the Modocs.

That is all this amendment means. It means to make a little paltry appropriation at which the Christian world would sneer, but with which we will solace ourselves that we have at least attempted to do a little toward the fulfillment of the infinite obligation that rests on a sovereign people, not only toward its own citizens of its own land, but toward the citizens acquired by treaty from an oligarchy, from a despotism. I would at least endeavor to show that under the benign influences of this free Government there was justice and kindness enough among the American people and their representatives to treat these far-off people in that distant region as well as the autocrat of Russia and his imperial government treated them before they were handed over to the tender mercies of this Christian nation.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me ask for information, is there provision for a meeting to-morrow?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. At what hour? I do not understand the order of exercises agreed upon in regard to the ceremonies. Do we meet here at 12 o'clock for business?

Mr. ALLISON. At the usual hour, I understand, and at 1 o'clock the ceremonies take place.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator yield to me a moment for the purpose of having a bill referred?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

GOVERNMENT OF UTAH.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask to have taken from the table Senate bill 404, and that it be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). The Secretary will report the bill by title.

Mr. CULLOM. It is the bill (S. 404) to reorganize the legislative power of the Territory of Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the bill being taken from the table? The Chair hears none. The bill (S. 404) to reorganize the legislative power of the Territory of Utah is before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 2093) to provide for the appointment of an acting secretary of the Smithsonian Institution; and Joint resolution (S. R. 81) filling an existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3838) granting a pension to Theodore C. Hawkins; and

A bill (H. R. 4188) granting a pension to William W. Day.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 2194) for the relief of George A. Corden; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2195) granting a pension to John S. Kirkpatrick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2196) granting a pension to Silas W.

Welsh; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire, if in order, to offer an amendment to the bill now under consideration, on page 61, section 2, after line 7, and ask that it may be printed so that it shall be before the committee and the Senate. It is agreed to by the committee, I think, and at the request of the Senator from Arkansas who is absent [Mr. GARLAND] I have offered it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed and lie on the table.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator to yield to a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield for that motion.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 9, 1884.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. DOUGLAS F. FORREST, D. D., Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HARDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. Yesterday I voted for the bill relating to the Centennial Cotton Exposition at New Orleans. Having conscientious convictions about the power of Congress in that regard I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my vote. It does not change the result.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REGENTS SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a letter from Professor Baird asking that a Senate bill and a joint resolution be passed in reference to a vacancy in the Board of Regents, and providing for appointment of an acting secretary. They are matters of course, and I ask unanimous consent to take them up and pass them.

There was no objection.

Joint resolution (S. 81) filling an existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class "other than members of Congress," occasioned by the resignation of Peter Parker, be filled by the appointment of James C. Welling, of the city of Washington.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SINGLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ACTING SECRETARY SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The bill (S. 2093) to provide for the appointment of an acting secretary of the Smithsonian Institution was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Chancellor of the Smithsonian Institution may, by an instrument in writing filed in the office of the Secretary thereof, designate and appoint a suitable person to act as secretary of the Institution when there shall be a vacancy in said office, and whenever the Secretary shall be unable from illness, absence, or other cause to perform the duties of his office; and in such case the person so appointed may perform all the duties imposed on the Secretary by law until the vacancy shall be filled or such inability shall cease. The said Chancellor may change such designation and appointment from time to time as the interests of the Institution may in his judgment require.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SINGLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NEW YORK INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask by unanimous consent that the House Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2047) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas, and that the amendments be reported from the committee for present action.

The bill and amendments were read.

Mr. WELLER. I ask to make an explanation.

Mr. HAMMOND. When this bill was up before I said I thought it ought to pass. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] made objection, and afterward showed me a report which satisfied me for the time it ought not to pass, and I therefore object.

Mr. PERKINS. Permit me to state that the gentleman from Arkansas said to me he would not object to the consideration of the bill, provided he could move an amendment to increase the price to be paid for the land.

Mr. HAMMOND. When the gentleman from Arkansas is present perhaps I may withdraw my objection.

INDIAN WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I move by unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 172) amendatory of the act of June 27, 1882, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and report to Congress the amount of all claims of the States of Texas, Colorado, Oregon, Nebraska, California, Kansas, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington and Idaho, for money expended and indebtedness assumed by said States and Territories in repelling invasion and suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes."

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act of Congress approved June 27, 1882, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and report to Congress the amount of all claims of the States of Texas, Colorado, Oregon, Nebraska, California, Kansas, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington and Idaho, for money expended and indebtedness assumed by said States and Territories in repelling invasion and suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "April, in the year 1861," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "January, in the year 1851," adding at the end of section 1 of said act the following:

"Provided, That all such claims of the State of California arising on and after the 1st day of January, 1851, shall be examined and investigated as aforesaid."

Mr. HOLMAN. Reserving the right to object, I will suggest this measure proposes to go back to the year 1851. It refers to a period during which there has been a large amount of legislation and many questions raised in the courts within that peroid as to whether investigations have gone beyond the point authorized by law. And unless the measure is more specific and definite, directing particular reports or covering specific periods, I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. STEELE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana on the left [Mr. STEELE] objects.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand the regular order.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope my friend from Tennessee will yield for a moment to permit me to ask to have printed in the RECORD a memorial from the Louisville Board of Trade.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a remonstrance from the Louisville Board of Trade against the proposed new bankrupt law. I will state that this is the only remonstrance against the passage of that law, while there have been a half-dozen or more in favor of it.

The SPEAKER. The title of the memorial will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Memorial to Congress of the Louisville Board of Trade against the passage of a national bankrupt act.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York. I object.

Mr. McMILLIN. Regular order.

APOLLINE A. BLAIR.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the bill the title of which the Clerk will now report, and upon which the previous question was ordered on last Friday.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2984) granting arrears of pension to Apolline A. Blair, widow of the late Francis P. Blair.

The SPEAKER. This bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole to the House on last Friday with amendment, and the previous question was ordered upon its passage as amended. The question is now, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill has been reported from the Committee of the Whole, as I understand it?

The SPEAKER. From the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, on last Friday, at which time the previous question was ordered upon its passage.

Mr. McMILLIN. I believe there was an agreemeent at the time that there should be a vote in a full House upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the passage of the bill.

The question was taken.

Mr. STEELE. I demand a division. It was the understanding in the committee that we were to have a yea-and-nay vote on this bill. Therefore I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, 21 members only voting in favor thereof.

Mr. STEELE. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, 21 members only voting in favor of tellers.

Mr. STEELE. I demand a count of the other side.

The SPEAKER. There is no count of the other side on a demand for tellers. The rule requires one-fifth of a quorum to order tellers. One-fifth of a quorum has not voted on the demand of the gentleman from Indiana.

A division was called for on the vote first taken.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 17.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. No quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. STEELE and Mr. HANCOCK were appointed tellers.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to state that I am in favor of this bill; but it was my understanding in Committee of the Whole that an agreement was had to allow a yea-and-nay vote on this subject in the House. It will be remembered that I made that request.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will take their places.

The House again divided.

Mr. HOLMAN. I beg leave to say, Mr. Speaker, that if there was an agreement in Committee of the Whole when this bill was reported to the House that a yea-and-nay vote should be taken, in common fairness that agreement should be carried out.

Mr. MORRISON. There was no such agreement. That is a mistake.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. It was the understanding that there was to be a vote in full House.

Mr. MORRISON. Yet there was no such agreement that a yea-and-nay vote should be had upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. That having been the understanding, of course I should not insist upon the demand.

Mr. STEELE. It was my understanding that no objection was made to the suggestion that a yea-and-nay vote should be had. On that understanding no point of a quorum was made.

Mr. BELFORD. I demand a call of the House, to the end that the country may know whether a party with 76 majority here can not furnish us with a quorum for the transaction of the public business when this side of the House is ready.

The SPEAKER. The motion for a call of the House is not in order while a vote is being taken.

The tellers will report.

The tellers reported ayes 136, noes 21.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum.

Mr. STORM. It would save time to have a yea-and-nay vote. I hope the House will consent to that.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will retain their places, a quorum having not yet voted.

Mr. STEELE. I find, Mr. Speaker, that the RECORD bears out the statement I have made, as will be found by reference to page 4062, near the bottom of the page. It will be seen that I used this language:

> As a matter of claim this bill should have gone to the Committee on Claims. I am not going to object, but I do ask that gentlemen having it in charge will let it go into the House so we may have a quorum and a yea-and-nay vote on this question. I tell you I will vote for it when it goes into the House.

I do not understand that any objection was made to that suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will further report.

The tellers reported the result of the vote as ayes 142, noes 22.

So (no further count being demanded) the bill was passed.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I move to amend the title of the bill by striking out the words "arrears of" and inserting the word "additional;" and add at the end of the title the following words, "and for other purposes;" so that it will read: "A bill granting an additional pension to Apolline A. Blair, widow of the late General Francis P. Blair, and for other purposes."

The motion to amend the title was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the several vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin. I wish to ask whether it would be in order now to vote upon the bill (H. R. 3935) with reference to removing the charge of desertion from the records of soldiers, which was under discussion some two weeks ago? We were engaged in voting upon that bill when the recess occurred on a previous day. I wish to ask if it is not now unfinished business properly coming up at this time?

The SPEAKER. That will come up as unfinished business when the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar makes its next report and the House resumes consideration of it. The bill just passed came up before the morning hour because the previous question had been ordered upon it.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

Mr. COX, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 6933) to authorize the National Academy of Sciences to receive and hold trust funds for the promotion of science, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order, this being Friday, is the call of committees for reports of a private nature.

MAJOR D. WILLIAMS.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 394) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Major D. Williams; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. JOHNSON.

Mr. LE FEVRE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6287) for the relief of John H. Johnson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JACOB HOERTH.

Mr. LE FEVRE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 3210) for the relief of Jacob Hoerth; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN F. AMOS.

Mr. LE FEVRE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5500) for the relief of Benjamin F. Amos; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARTHA LAWSON.

Mr. LE FEVRE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5941) for the relief of Martha Lawson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ISAAC R. H. CALDWELL.

Mr. LE FEVRE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5508) granting a pension to Isaac R. H. Caldwell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ISABELLA PALMER.

Mr. LE FEVRE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5553) granting a pension to Isabella Palmer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES FRAZIER.

Mr. LE FEVRE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5555) granting a pension to James Frazier; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. LE FEVRE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 4078) for the benefit of Simeon Crain; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with an adverse recommendation the petition of Martha A. Bowles, administratrix of James R. Bowles, deceased; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. WHEELER.

Mr. FERRELL, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 5322) for the benefit of William H. Wheeler; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendment and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. ROWELL, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with adverse recommendations bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The bill (H. R. 2750) for the relief of James White and the legal representatives of William White, deceased; and

The bill (H. R. 4112) for the relief of Henry O'Neill, jr., of Jackson, Mich.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of standing and select committees. If there be no objection, the Chair will now recognize gentlemen for reports who were not in their seats when their names were called.

CAPE COD SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. Is it a private bill?

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that it is. I am instructed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report back the bill (H. R. 6320) making an appropriation for the construction of breakwaters, entrances, and approaches to the Cape Cod Ship-Canal. I desire to ask the judgment of the House as to what committee it should be referred to?

The SPEAKER. That does not seem to be a private bill.

Mr. WILLIS. It is a private company which is constructing this canal.

The SPEAKER. If there be objection the gentleman from Kentucky can not report that bill under this call.

Mr. WILLIS. I am merely reporting the bill back in order that it may be referred to the proper committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Kentucky making the report?

There being no objection, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6320) making an appropriation for the construction of breakwaters, entrances, and approaches to the Cape Cod Ship-Canal; and the same was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

ANN J. WILLIAMS.

Mr. CONNOLLY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 6934) granting a pension to Ann J. Williams; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House to consider bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar.

WILLIS N. ARNOLD AND OTHERS.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3937) for the relief of Willis N. Arnold, reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. GEDDES.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Willis N. Arnold, of Henderson County, Tennessee, the sum of $6,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, it being the amount collected by the military authorities of the United States for his benefit, and paid by them into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I desire to inquire of the Chair if this is the proper time to offer a substitute for the bill just read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize at this time the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES], the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, having charge of this bill.

Mr. GEDDES. I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee for that purpose merely.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I desire to say that the next bill upon the Calendar is intimately connected with this one, growing out of the same transaction. I submit as a substitute for the pending bill that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute, will be read.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the respective sums of money, as hereinafter provided, to the respective persons named herein, or to their heirs or legal representatives, to wit:

To H. Johnson, $753.89.
To Stephen M. Johnson, $753.89.
To D. J. Franklin, $149.37.
To Josiah Franklin, $179.05.
To Nat Buckley, $298.65.
To John Tull, $358.10.
To Elias Bray, $447.65.
To Dr. G. Johnson, $179.05.
To Harrison Trice, $298.65.
To Jeremiah Crook, sr., $597.30.
To Willis Arnold, $5,956.86.
To Archie McCorkle, $447.65.
To G. L. Ross, $1,493.15.
To S. L. Ross, $1,493.15.
To John M. Hart, $597.30.
To William A. Brummer, $915.94.
To John D. Smith, $298.65.
To A. B. Cook, $298.65.
To Daniel McCollum, $298.65.
To Jeff Jones, $149.37.
To Thomas McGill, $179.05.
To James Ledbetter, $179.05.
To William Ozier, $597.30.
To Elijah Bond, $298.65.
To John L. Cawthon, $597.30.
To William Hall, $597.30.
To Carroll Beaver, $597.30
To John West, $753.89.
To James Clifford, $298.65.
To O. F. Hendrix, $895.26.
To Frank Cawthon, $358.10.
To James Cawthon, $149.37.
To S. E. Grider, $149.37.
To Silas Grider, $149.37.
To John Robinson, $274.32.
To Hugh McKnight, $228.60.
To John G. Smith, $91.44.
To Caleb McKnight, $228.60.
To James Thomas, $228.60.
To William P. Walker, $137.16.
To A. S. Rogers, $389.71.
To Tison G. Maness, $640.08.
To William H. Bond, $137.16.
To F. M. Ballard, $274.32.
To Stephen Messengill, $137.16.
To William Swink, $502.92.
To Kenton M. Jones, $411.48. In all, $25,445.36.

Mr. GEDDES. The amendment just offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] will bring before the Committee of the Whole the subject-matter of the claim for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others, which bill stands next in order on the Calendar to the bill called by the Chair for the relief of Willis N. Arnold. I will address myself to that bill by way of statement, in order to get before the Committee of the Whole as well as I can a few of the facts involved in these two cases. They are so naturally blended and so connected that the merits of the one can not be considered without regard to the demerits or the merits of the other.

I shall probably have occasion to regret again and again the great difficulty experienced in this body in securing the attention of members to questions of great importance, not only in principle but sometimes in amount. The amount involved here may be regarded in the ordinary sense of our legislation as somewhat insignificant; it is only some $27,000. But the principle involved rises far above the amount of money in controversy.

This case, or I may say these cases, have a somewhat variable history in our legislation, and therefore the brief statement that I propose to make and regard as essential may be important to a proper understanding of the two cases.

Willis N. Arnold seeks to recover $6,000 of money admitted to be in the Treasury of the United States, and, as he claims, assessed and collected for his express benefit. Hiram Johnson and others claim that the $6,000, admittedly now in the Treasury for some one, was improperly assessed upon them, and instead of being paid to Arnold and others should be refunded to them.

These cases came before the Committee on War Claims of the last Congress, and if I remember correctly (and I may be corrected if I am in error) a unanimous report was made in favor of giving Willis N. Arnold $6,000, and an adverse report in the case of Hiram Johnson and others. The same cases were again considered at the present session, and I think there was but a single dissenting vote—at all events a large majority, and perhaps all the members of the committee except one, were in favor of the claim of Arnold and adverse to the claim of Hiram Johnson.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will my colleague allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. GEDDES. Certainly.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Why did you not insist upon the point of order that the substitute was the substance of another bill pending before the committee, instead of having these two matters brought up together?

Mr. GEDDES. I may say that it did not occur to me at the moment, and I regard it now as immaterial. As I have said, the merits of these two cases are so blended that they must necessarily be considered together, and a favorable action on the case of Arnold will necessarily be an adverse vote on the next bill on the Calendar, which is involved in the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

In 1862 the United States forces, of which J. C. Sullivan was in command in some subordinate way as general, were in possession of a portion of Tennessee. General Grant was the superior officer in command, but Colonel Haynie was the commander of the post of Henderson, Tenn. The military authority had control there; the civil law and the civil authority had no power and no control in that community at that time.

About that time repeated raids were made by confederate soldiers upon these squads of Union men who held possession of the country, and in November, 1862, a band of men captured Henderson, and destroyed a large amount of Government property, and with it a considerable amount of private property belonging to private citizens. Colonel Haynie, in command of the post of Bethel, determined to exercise what he regarded as his military right, and to make an assessment upon a given scope of territory in order to collect a sufficient amount of money to reimburse in dollars and cents the amount lost by the Government and the amount which these private individuals had lost in consequence of this raid. He made the order, the order was enforced, and the assessment collected, and the money so collected was paid over and turned into the Treasury of the United States.

Three gentlemen, members of three separate Illinois companies, composed the board that made the investigation; and I have before me what will be admitted to have been their action at that time. Colonel Haynie's order was that they were to inquire as to what property was destroyed and its value and to whom it belonged; also the amount of the damage done to the bridge in that vicinity and to the private parties.

That commission met December 8, 1862, and it is important to mention right here what they found. They found that cotton belonging to John Aldridge and Smith Patterson, of the value of $9,606.36, was destroyed by that raid; that cotton belonging to W. D. Silvey, of the value of $2,565, was destroyed; that cotton belonging to Willis N. Arnold, this claimant, amounting in value to $6,000, had been burned; that cotton of the United States was burned amounting in value to $1,900; that there were also destroyed a water-tank belonging to a railroad company, valued at $1,500; camp equipage, $2,500; depot property, belonging to railroad company, $2,000; making exactly $26,751.36. The commission also find (and to this I desire to call the attention of the House) that the owners of the property destroyed were loyal citizens of the United States. This report from which I have just read is signed by the members of the board.

Following that order they made an assessment upon gentlemen whose names are here recited, and who are here as the claimants on the other side. This assessment was made for the payment of that exact sum, of which more than $23,000 was paid. Something over $3,000 was not paid, because the men upon whom the assessment was made had gone into the rebel army and could not be reached.

Mr. DIBRELL. If the gentleman will allow me one question, I wish to ask whether there is any proof that this man Willis Arnold ever lost a bale of cotton, any proof except that report?

Mr. STORM. No, sir.

Mr. GEDDES. No, sir; nor that these other men paid the money.

Mr. DIBRELL. Oh, yes; the report of one of the officers shows that.

Mr. GEDDES. There is no dispute that the finding at that time, indorsed by General Grant, by General Sullivan, by General Haynie, and every military man connected with the transaction, was that Arnold lost this property of which he was the owner, and that he was a loyal man.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I would like the gentleman to point to any proof, other than the statement of Arnold himself, that he ever lost a bale of cotton.

Mr. GEDDES. I refer the gentleman to this report and the report of the Glover committee in 1877, of which I shall hereafter speak. Fresh on the heels of this transaction came the Glover report, which went into the whole history of the matter and which found the facts as I now state them.

Mr. WOLFORD rose.

Mr. GEDDES. There is no man living to whom I would more gladly yield than to my friend from Kentucky; but I can not consent that all my time shall be taken up by interruptions.

Now, finding that this assessment thus made could not all be collected, a second assessment was made and collected, thus covering the whole matter. This is the history of the transaction in 1862.

The next date in order is 1864. In 1864 Willis N. Arnold addressed a letter to General Grant upon the subject of this claim, and received from General Grant's secretary (perhaps that was not his military title) a reply to which I invite the attention of the House, because it followed closely upon the heels of this transaction. The date was 1866.

> In reply to your communication of June 11, addressed to Lieutenant-General Grant, and requesting that you, as a loyal citizen, might be remunerated for losses sustained by you at the burning of Henderson, Tenn., General Grant directs me to inform you that an assessment was made by General Sullivan, by his orders, upon the property of disloyal citizens for the purpose of remunerating the sufferers at Henderson, and that since General Sullivan has been mustered out of the service he has informed General Grant that a certain amount of such assessment remains in his hands.
> General Grant advised General Sullivan to turn over the said sum to the authorities, so that it might be devoted to the uses for which it was collected.

This was in 1866. This letter was brought to the attention of General Badeau during the pendency of this claim before our committee. There was in the letter an interlineation of a word; and I, as a member of that committee, said "There must be no proof subject to suspicion. How do we know but that this interlineation was put there by some other party?" The word interlined was material to the reading of the letter. Therefore at my suggestion the letter was again presented to General Badeau in 1882; and upon this letter, written away back in 1866, he wrote this indorsement:

> The above letter was written by me June 26, 1866, together with the interlineations, while I was serving on the staff of Lieutenant-General Grant.

Thus the matter stood in 1866. Concurrently with these proceedings these parties who had suffered were pressing their claims before Congress. Among them Aldridge had a private bill passed by both Houses of Congress, which was approved by President Grant March 3, 1875, to pay him out of the Treasury of the United States $9,606.36 of this money assessed and collected by the military authorities.

Now I desire to read what General Grant said in 1882. He, too, was addressed during the pendency of the claim before our committee. He says in his letter:

> I have no recollection of loyal citizens having been molested at that time or of having ordered collections in their behalf; but whatever the record may be made at the time, then it may be taken as the exact facts. What I here state is simply from recollection.

Twenty years had rolled by, and we could all see how neither General Sullivan nor General Grant nor any other man——

Mr. DIBRELL. Read the balance of General Grant's letter in which he said he never intended——

Mr. GEDDES. You can do it in your own time.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Were these farmers or cotton speculators?

Mr. GEDDES. These were not cotton speculators and they had no connection with them, but well-known loyal citizens, whose property was destroyed in that raid.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Who was Arnold?

Mr. GEDDES. A loyal citizen of Tennessee then and now.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. There seems to be a great deal of cotton in it.

Mr. GEDDES. A great many loyal men had cotton at that time, I suppose. They were not all beggars in Tennessee.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. That is not my question. I asked whether he was a farmer.

Mr. GEDDES. I do not care if he was as poor as Lazarus and there is a military record that he owned this property, that he was a loyal man and other men destroyed it, he ought to be paid. Other men who suffered at the same time were paid out of the money of the United States in the Treasury.

Mr. DIBRELL. He was indicted.

Mr. GEDDES. The Government does not claim this money. The Government is a trustee for this money.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Nobody but Johnson and those from whom it was taken seek it, and they are the ones who ought to have it.

Mr. GEDDES. I presume not, and there will be no effort to refund it to anybody else. Following this action in 1877 I have the report of the Glover committee, to which I desire to invite the attention of gentlemen, because I know that a letter from General J. C. Sullivan, now twenty-two years after this transaction, will be offered here in conflict with plain and well-established facts on the record and contrary to the plain statement of General Grant. Look to the Glover report of 1877. That report of March 2, 1877, is as follows:

> The intention in ordering that money to be paid to Colonel Webster was to make him custodian of the fund for the indemnification of the United States, John Aldridge, and other loyal citizens who had suffered by the raid on Henderson Station. When Colonel Sanford brought the first installment of the collection up to Jackson Colonel Webster was not in the city, and Colonel Stanford paid over the amount to General Sullivan, and received his receipt for the same. General Sullivan, after keeping the money for a short time, became nervous on account of having no safe place of deposit for it, and telegraphed to Major-General Grant for orders as to what disposition he should make of it. General Grant replied to General Sullivan, ordering him to turn the money over to the provost-marshal at Jackson, Tenn., Major Smith.

Let me call the attention of the committee to the only evidence in any degree at variance with this whole military record, and at variance with the proof in the case which is now for the first time in 1884, and within the last few weeks, obtained from General J. C. Sullivan. I know when I say this that there was an unofficial statement by a man by the name of Hillyer that this money ought not to be paid to Arnold; but I wish to invite the attention of this House to the reason why I think Mr. Hillyer made that unofficial statement—not under oath, unofficial, and to the War Department. Why was it? I have here a letter in 1864 from T. H. Harris, the assistant adjutant-general of General Sullivan. He says:

> I was assistant-adjutant-general of the District of Jackson during Brigadier-General Sullivan's command, and fully believe, from my personal knowledge of the facts, that the abstracts above given from Major Smith's cash-book are correct and truthful, and that the Government of the United States is justly indebted to Aldridge, Patterson, Silva, and Arnold in the sum of $17,913.20, and consider that W. S. Hillyer, late colonel and provost-marshal-general Department of the Tennessee, should be required to show the disposition made of the $32,260.90 received by him from Major Smith.
> T. H. HARRIS,
> Lieutenant-Colonel and Assistant-Adjutant-General.

And when the War Department called on him for that showing, the only thing he gave was this unofficial, unsworn, and unsupported statement that it ought not to be paid to these parties.

That is not all. The War Department made a report rejecting the claim upon two grounds, both of which were well taken. The War Department acted according to the law regulating claims of this kind. They refused the claim—

First. Because cotton used for breastworks is not quartermaster's stores.

We all recognize the fact that that point was well taken; and—

Second. That the destruction was the act of the common enemy.

And we all recognize that as a good ground for the rejection of the claim by that department. But I invite attention now to what the quartermaster reports in relation to the other matter:

General Grant, then commanding, ordered a war levy upon neighboring rebels, and the full value of the United States property and of the cotton (private property) destroyed appears to have been collected.

That is what the quartermaster reported in that connection. Now I want to give my attention to this letter of General J. C. Sullivan, now for the first time offered. In that letter he says this:

It was not intended that the money so collected should be used in any way to reimburse any person or individual who claimed a loss by such raid——

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio, since he calls this a letter, whether it is not in fact a deposition sworn to by him?

Mr. GEDDES. I am not able to answer that question. I refer to it as a letter, although he may have verified it in that way under oath.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. It is a deposition, sworn to by him.

Mr. GEDDES. It may be called an affidavit. I am not saying that General Sullivan's statement is not a sworn statement I am calling it and using it as proof in the case twenty-two long years after the original transaction, and I assert confidently, and there can be no contradiction of what I say, when we consider the plain facts fully established and conceded in this record.

He says:

I issued order No. 15 to prevent further raids by compelling the co-operation of these parties with me in my endeavor to do so. My order was a perfect success.

It will be remembered that it was not his order at all except indirectly.

In my opinion the relief asked for should be granted.

And again says General Sullivan:

I know that many thousands of dollars were collected, a careful and accurate record of which was made and preserved, and all the money so paid was then, to the best of my recollection—

Mark you—

was then, to the best of my recollection, sent by me to the United States subtreasury at Saint Louis, and placed on deposit under such circumstances, to the best of my recollection—

He takes care to repeat that a second time, as you will observe, "to the best of his recollection"— as would have enabled me to withdraw it and refund it to the parties at the proper time. But in the spring of 1863 I was relieved of the command of the Department of West Tennessee and placed on General Grant's staff.

Now, I beg the House to remember that in the very brief of Hiram N. Johnson that I now hold in my hand this man Sullivan is plainly and flatly and overwhelmingly contradicted by their own brief and by their own testimony. Page 6 of the brief of the attorneys of Hiram N. Johnson will show that. It will be remembered that General Grant ordered the money paid over to the provost-marshal by this man Sullivan. Here I have in their own brief a record from the book of Major Smith, the provost-marshal of the District of Jackson. Here is what was done with the money. It was not sent to any bank in Saint Louis. It was not sent at all by General Sullivan. There is the Glover committee, that says that General Sullivan became nervous and did not want to hold it and wanted to have nothing in any way to do with it, and that he telegraphed to General Grant, and Grant says in reply, "Turn it over to the provost-marshal." There is the provost-marshal's record. He says:

JANUARY 21, 1863.

To this amount, received from General Sullivan, $8,388.20.

That is all this man Sullivan ever had. He says now, twenty-two years after the transaction, something else, and as I do not know him I would not for any consideration do him an injustice. I only attack his memory. His heart may be good, his head may be ordinarily good, but it is far off its balance on this record and in reference to these facts. But it only proves to all of us how the written records of twenty years ago are superior to any man's memory and to human recollection. We all know how frail it is, and we all know what value is attached to the records of our courts and our Congress and the records of our business men everywhere as against the mere memory of any man.

But that is not all in regard to Sullivan. All the balance of this money was paid to other parties, and here is the record of it and when paid right at the time; some paid for private parties; some paid for the railroad companies; some paid for the Government; and General Sullivan had nothing to do with it.

Now, for fear I may take too much time in this statement, I want to go to the question of the right to make this assessment. It is said that it was arbitrary, extraordinary, harsh. That is the history of war. All war is harsh, all war is arbitrary. When you drive away or remove by necessity or suspension, under the conditions and circumstances surrounding you, the courts of the land, the civil tribunals of the country, and the officers of the civil law, and you substitute military commanders and military law and military rule and the marching of armies, I have yet to learn that that has the mildness and the gentleness of a proceeding in a court of justice.

Let me suggest to my good friends sitting around me who want this money refunded to Hiram Johnson and others and say it was a harsh thing under military law and military rule to take their money; let me suggest to them that General Early entered good old York, in Pennsylvania, and assessed $30,000, put it in his pocket, and marched back within the rebel lines. We will give you an order on General Early to pay over to Hiram Johnson and the others that $30,000.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I am much obliged to the gentleman for his liberality. But I wish to ask him does he think the conduct of General Early was right?

Mr. GEDDES. Well, you would not get much out of me in favor of military rule.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We are not to get a good deal out of you, I am afraid.

Mr. GEDDES. Not much, except as I may be backed by military authority and international law well settled. And I will tell my friend when I go down to his good State of Tennessee and would appeal to its courts I would expect the courtesy and the ease and the gentleness of the civil law. And if he will come to Ohio he will find all the liberality that that civil law gives. But if he will march an army over into Ohio and bring it into my town he will find it the roughest place he ever invaded. I would expect him to make me realize that I was traveling a rough road if I were to go to Tennessee and attempt to extort money from its citizens.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GEDDES. Certainly.

Mr. MCMILLIN. My question has reference to the illustration he has given us of the city of York. I want to know if there is any class of private citizens of the United States who did not participate in that assessment of York upon whom you would now levy tribute for the purpose of paying those damages?

Mr. GEDDES. You talk, as I said, about military law being harsh. No one has felt that more keenly than I have during this session of Congress. It has been my honor to preside over a committee where all these claims are presented, and among them there comes a class of claims like this. A loyal man was the owner of a mill in the valley of the Shenandoah, all he had in God's world of property, and the Union forces, his own friends, burned it down over his head with all there was in it for fear the rebels would get possession and use it for military purposes. He comes with his claim and we reject it. Is not that harsh? Is not that hard? Is not that arbitrary? Yes; but it is one of those fruits of this war that we have to endure, which all deplore and all regret, and I pray that this world may never see its like again.

Dr. Best, of the gentleman's own State, comes here and says: "The Union forces tore down my house, all I had in the world, to keep the rebels from occupying it and shooting at our friends." He was loyal; he stood by the Union; he never wavered; he came here Congress after Congress, or did until his death, asking payment, and our committee rejects it. Do you suppose we do not feel that this is harsh? Do you suppose I do not think that is hard? If you do, you mistake my heart. How then can I say as a member of that committee or of this House that this $27,000 shall be refunded to these men and reject the claims of others? The law is not with you. The law is against this claim.

Now I must be permitted to read one clause in the Elements of International Law and Laws of War, by Halleck:

PENALTY FOR MILITARY OFFENSES.

In the first place we may seize upon private property by way of penalty for the illegal acts of individuals or of the community to which they belong. Thus if an individual be guilty of conduct in violation of the laws of war, we may seize and confiscate the private property of the offender. So, also, if the offense attach itself to a particular community or town, all the individuals of that community or town are liable to punishment, and we may either seize upon their property or levy upon them a retaliatory contribution by way of penalty. Where, however, we can discover and secure the individuals so offending, it is more just to inflict the punishment upon them only; but it is a general law of war that communities are accountable for the acts of their individual members. This makes it the interest of all to discover the guilty persons, and to deliver them up to justice. But if these individuals are not given up, or can not be discovered, it is usual to impose a contribution upon the civil authorities of the place where the offense is committed, and these authorities raise the amount of the contribution by a tax levied upon their constituents.

The allowance of this claim of Hiram Johnson and others would open the door for the presentation and allowance of a class of claims aggregating several hundred millions of dollars in amount, and which have been uniformly reported adversely by our committee. I hope no such step will be taken. This adverse report comes from a Democratic committee of this Democratic House of Representatives, and voices the general sentiment of the country on the subject of the payment of such claims. If the Committee on War Claims is overruled by a vote of this House and a claim of this character allowed, that committee should feel called upon by every consideration of honor and self-respect to guard the Calendar and the interests of the country against any repetition of the act.

I believe I have made all the statement I desire to submit at present. It has been general, somewhat brief, and I fear it is a very imperfect statement of the condition of these two claims and of their merits and demerits. I will reserve any balance of time to which I may be entitled.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. STORM. I am a member of the Committee on War Claims, which reported this bill. At the time the report was agreed upon I did not concur with the majority in the conclusions which they reached upon it. At the time the bill was before us I did not know that there had been any favorable action upon it by either the Senate or the House of any previous Congress. The principle involved in the report struck me as untenable as a general proposition. The whole proceedings struck me as being so harsh, so utterly devoid of any legal authority, so utterly destitute of justice and of humanity, that the mere statement of the case made me hesitate; and although I said at the time that I did not care to make a minority report, I could not come to the conclusion which the majority came to.

Since then I have found that this bill was reported to this House favorably in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses; I mean the Hiram Johnson bill, and in the Forty-sixth Congress it passed this House. I also find that it has had a favorable report two different times in the Senate and has once passed that body. It has received a favorable report in the Senate at the present session, making in all five reports in favor of the bill for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others, which bill has twice passed the two Houses of Congress, once by each legislative branch.

I think this statement ought to have great weight with this body in considering the question now before us. I know that the learned gentlemen who is the chairman of the Committee of War Claims [Mr. GEDDES] has argued this case with a great deal of positiveness, with a great deal of earnestness, and with a conviction that he is right. Still I think others who have paid as much attention to the question at different times as he has paid to it have come to a different conclusion. Therefore I must differ with the learned chairman of the committee, which I regret to do, but justice in this case requires that I should do so.

I do not place myself upon the constitutional ground that a man can not be deprived of his life, liberty, or property without due process of law. I do not base my opposition to the report of the committee on the fact that the Constitution says that no person shall be deprived of his property for public use without just compensation. I admit the general proposition that in the midst of war the laws are silent; inter arma silent leges. But I do say that for this specific act no precedent can be furnished and no legal authority produced to support it.

I admit the fact that an army may go into a hostile territory and assess contributions upon the inhabitants for its support and for military supplies; that it can take quartermaster stores and commissary supplies for the support and subsistence of the army. I do not deny that the Government may assess contributions even upon private persons, possibly, for losses which the Government itself has sustained.

But I do deny the proposition, the naked, bald proposition that the Government can go to A, B, and C and make an assessment upon them to pay D, E, and F for losses sustained by reason of the wrongful, the illegal acts of other parties. I know that in the early days of English history such a thing was done as making assessments upon a tithing, or town, or hundred, upon the taxable inhabitants thereof for losses sustained by the depredations of robbers and thieves. But that is not this case.

This is a case where twenty-five or thirty persons were selected and told that they must pay for the wrongs done to the property of certain other persons to make good their losses. Nearly all the losses for which the assessments were made in this case upon certain persons residing in Henderson, Tenn., were sustained by private individuals. The losses sustained by the Government amounted to only $5,080 out of the $26,751.36 assessed by the military authorities. All the rest of the losses were sustained by private persons and by private corporations, and were mainly the result of the destruction of cotton.

Now, when this Government has positively refused to pay for cotton lost as the result of the operations of the war I would like to know on what ground the Government proposes in this case to turn around and make itself the insurer of cotton destroyed by the rebels in raids which they may have made within the Union lines? That is what is sought to be done here; it is to say that the Government shall make itself the insurer for losses sustained by private individuals within the Union lines on account of raids or incursions made by rebel forces from without.

This case does not involve the question discussed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES]. It is not the question of the loss of property destroyed by the ravages of war and incident to the operations of carrying on a war. It is not that question at all; it has nothing to do with it. It is simply a question whether the military authorities had the right to make an assessment upon certain individuals of a community, not all the citizens of a town or township, borough or city, but upon a few certain selected citizens, to assess upon them a certain amount in order to make good the losses which had been sustained by certain other private citizens within the Union lines.

Now, was it the purpose in this case to make an assessment for anything more than the losses sustained by the Government, amounting to $5,080, a part of this amount, I believe, being for cotton and the rest for arms and camp equipage belonging to the United States? What evidence have we on this subject? We have the positive statement of General Grant himself, which is embodied in the report of a committee of the Forty-sixth Congress. I read the language of that committee:

> At the time of the appraisal of the damages and of the levying and collecting these assessments it was supposed to be under and in execution of an order of General Grant, then commanding the troops in that department. But it appears from the papers filed that General Grant disavowed the construction put upon his general orders by the local officers, and declared the purpose and intent of his general order to be that reprisal should be made by way of levy and assessment in case of raids within our lines like the one at Henderson only to repay such losses as the Government might sustain in its property thereby, and he refused to recognize the right of private claimants to reimbursement by such levy and assessment.

General Grant says:

> General Hillyer's letter as printed above is no doubt entirely correct. I certainly never intended any collection for the benefit of cotton purchasers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if a misconstruction was placed upon General Grant's order, and he positively says that a misconstruction was placed upon it, that it was never his intention to sanction the authority exercised by this military commission that made these assessments, shall we insist upon carrying out the misconstruction which was thus put upon General Grant's orders by his subordinates? This money is still in the Treasury; this injury can still be repaired; justice can still be done to these parties without doing injustice to anybody else. General Grant says that he never intended that this construction should be placed upon his order.

Mr. GEDDES. The gentleman ought perhaps to state in this connection that the only authority we have for that is the unofficial and unsworn statement of this man, who is charged with having the money, and which it is claimed he ought to be compelled to pay over.

Mr. STORM. The gentleman is mistaken. I have just read from the letter of General Grant, dated February 28, 1882. This has nothing at all to do with Sullivan's statement. I will come to that. The gentleman says that we have no evidence except the unsworn statement of Sullivan.

Mr. GEDDES. No, no!

Mr. STORM. I understood the gentleman to say that.

Mr. GEDDES. No, sir.

Mr. STORM. Then the gentleman takes that back. Let me read the sworn statement of General Sullivan, the officer who issued the order. What does he say about the matter? In order to break the force of this statement, the gentleman has found it necessary to cast a suspicion upon the honesty of this man. Here is the sworn statement of General Sullivan.

> Order No. 15 was not directed against parties who had been tried and convicted of complicity in the raid, but as against those whom I believe could control and discourage future raids; such parties as I believed to be influential and were interested in keeping the department quiet were selected and made to put up a money security—the amount based upon their ability in proportion to the loss sustained.
> (It was not intended that such money so collected should be used in any way to reimburse any person or individual who claimed a loss by such raid. That would have been insuring cotton buyers against war risks.)
>
> What I was trying to do was to preserve quiet in my department, using as few troops as possible. I did not believe that the parties from whom I collected this money participated in the raid. I issued order No. 15 to prevent further raids by compelling the co-operation of these parties with me in my endeavor to do so. My order was a perfect success. In my opinion the relief asked for should be granted, as this money was simply a bond for good behavior and compulsory assistance in helping me maintain order and quiet.
> Cotton purchasers were not looked upon with favor in General Grant's command, and no officer would have dared make innocent parties pay their claims.
> I most positively state that it was in no manner intended by me to pay or adjust any such claims. JEREMIAH C. SULLIVAN.
>
> Subscribed and sworn to before me this 3d day of March, 1884.
> [SEAL.] JOHN E. HARVILL, Notary Public.

Now, gentlemen, what will you say in the face of these statements of General Grant and General Sullivan?

Mr. BLAND. I would like to understand what is the purpose of this bill?

Mr. STORM. The first bill—the bill for the relief of Willis Arnold (though as I understand we are discussing both bills, as they are necessarily connected)—is to pay him $6,000, the amount awarded by this military commission to him as one of the parties who suffered from the rebel depredations.

Mr. BLAND. I understand that certain parties were assessed and paid the money.

Mr. STORM. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. Where is that money now?

Mr. STORM. That money, less what was due to the Government, $5,080, is, or ought to be, in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BLAND. Then why not pay it back to the parties from whom it was taken?

Mr. STORM. That is just what I am advocating. That is what the second bill proposes to do—to pay it back.

Mr. BLAND. Then this money was assessed on certain parties to pay other parties?

Mr. STORM. Yes, sir; an assessment was made on about thirty persons to pay five or six others.

Mr. BLAND. Does the gentleman propose to confirm robbery of that sort?

Mr. STORM. No, sir; I do not want to do anything of the kind. This bill for the relief of Willis Arnold is first on the Calendar. The bill for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others who paid the indemnity is next on the Calendar.

But, as has been stated, we have nothing to show what was the damage sustained by these parties, Willis Arnold and others, excepting the report made by that military commission, and when we glance over that it is evident that the result was reached by pretty large guessing, because it would have been strange that the value of cotton burned belonging to Arnold should have been exactly $6,000—no odd hundreds and no odd cents. It is very strange also that another person should have lost just two thousand five hundred dollars' worth of property and another just two thousand dollars' worth. This was evidently a guessing, lumping estimate. There is no satisfactory evidence to my mind that this man Arnold ever lost one-fourth or one-fifth of the amount now claimed here.

But we have the fact this amount was collected and paid. We do not have to read the report for that, because it is acknowledged by the Treasury official.

Mr. GEDDES. Will my colleague of the committee permit me to ask him whether there is a particle of evidence that they did not have this property and were not owners of it, as found by the commission at the time.

Mr. STORM. I say that is the only evidence there is.

Mr. GEDDES. For; with none against.

Mr. STORM. Exactly. There is nobody here against it, because I am taking the position he is not entitled to it and is not the owner of the property, and it makes no difference to me whether the claim is just or unjust in amount, whether it be $500 or $5,000. It is the principle I am contending for.

As I said before, it does no one wrong to pay back to these parties the sum of money which these officers took in execution of these orders. There can be no precedent, I take it, in our history, and especially in the late war, for such military action as this; and when no legal authority can be adduced, is there any ground on our part to hesitate for one moment to do justice to these parties when the money is in the Treasury and is not appropriated to any other use? With these remarks, I have no more to say.

Mr. COSGROVE. Is the amount proposed to be paid by the substitute the same as the amount in the Treasury?

Mr. STORM. The amount assessed was $26,000, but out of that the Government has reimbursed some $5,800. That must be deducted, of course, and when deducted the balance will be the amount which will be distributed pro rata among the parties from whom it was taken. They never can get back the amount assessed from them, because the Government, as I have said, has reimbursed itself to the amount of $5,800. About that reimbursement I have nothing to say. Instead of getting back $26,000 these people will get back somewhere between twenty-one and twenty-two thousand dollars.

I now reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Chairman, the war having been over for a great many years, it seems to me every gentleman in this House ought now to be willing to do impartial justice to the owners of private property. The highest right known and recognized in this Government, after the protection of life and liberty, is the protection of property. Since we had a government there has not been a time in war or in peace when it was denied the labor of men belonged to them and that the property they had accumulated was theirs.

But I do not wish to elaborate an idea of that kind. I could not recognize as a patriot, I could not recognize as a gentleman any man in Congress or out of it who was so dishonest that he wanted unnecessarily to put his hand into the pockets of private citizens and take their property by act of war or any other act unless the necessity of war demanded it. There is no necessity of war now; there is no need of staining the character of our brightest and purest general by such an attempt as this. There is no reason we should collect money by robbery, for that is the name of it; you can not give it any other name, and I am astonished my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES], chairman of of the Committee on War Claims, should want to legalize in time of profound peace such a robbery as this.

There is no need of doing it under the distinguished name of the noble and gallant Grant; there is no need under his name for doing such a thing as this. General Grant repudiates it as an honest man, and he ought to repudiate it. Every Union officer, every man who was worthy of commanding Union forces, will repudiate it.

Let us for a moment consider how this thing stands. At the time these assessments were made there were two great armies in the field. No one contends as an act of war the Union Army had the right to go out and plunder indiscriminately men of peace. We contended with the other side, and we were triumphant. We contended that every man should be recognized North and South who owned allegiance to the Government, and, if he would not, then we had the right to whip him; that is as far as we had any right to go.

And that, sir, is as far as we had a right to go. But what do you claim? A right to rob our citizens, a right to plunder the people you would not allow to go out of the Union, as you said, for the good of humanity, for the good of our common country, for the peace and glory and the liberty and the honor of this great Government. You shall not go out of the Union, we said, but we will rob you and we will plunder you, and we will chastise you and destroy you, and then cast you out as worthless and unfit for this great Government. Is that what the gentleman would have? Does the gentleman advocate such a system as that with reference to these people? I appeal, Mr. Chairman, to his sense of justice, to his sense of magnanimity, whether he would be willing to support such a proposition when stripped of its disguise, because that is practically what his argument amounts to?

But, sir, with reference to what General Grant said in this connection I will not stop to read it now, but it was in substance this: "I did not authorize it." And I assert right here and now that while in a state of war there are classes of men and nations who believe, no doubt, that they have a right to levy contributions upon a town or a country, no such ideas ever entered into our statesmen or into the minds of any of our gallant Union officers who were fit to command a regiment or a company. I deny that such a sentiment existed among them. For the Union Army, for their honor and as a matter of right and justice to them, I deny that they are a band of robbers and a band of marauders and of public plunderers. But, sir, what are the true facts in this case? What did we hold out to these people?

Mr. GEDDES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WOLFORD. No, sir, I will not answer you; I will treat you as you treated me. I wanted to put a little sense into your head and you would not let me; now you must do without it. [Laughter.]

Mr. GEDDES. And I want to reciprocate that courtesy.

Mr. WOLFORD. I say that there never was a principle so absurd, so dishonorable, so dishonest, so abominable as the proposition that you have a right to take from our people, disloyal men, if you please to call them, their property and keep it after the war is over, after peace is declared, and put it into our Treasury as a part of the funds of an honorable nation. It is as bad, sir, as the price of blood that would not be received into the Jewish treasury when Judas Iscariot betrayed with a kiss for thirty pieces of silver the Saviour of the world. But you want to put it there and I believe it is just as bad as the money that Judas Iscariot received as his bribe.

Mr. GEDDES. No, I want to take it out. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. WOLFORD. It is robbery in the name of justice, and it is plunder in the name of the law; it is dishonor in the name of the Union. What right have you to keep the property of men under such circumstances? But, sir, it was to vindicate the honor and name of General Grant that I rose here to-day. He has said that he never made such an order, and his word is good in this country. He has said that he never intended such an order, and doubted whether he had the power to issue it or not except in the case of the restoration to that poor Union woman the value of her bridge that had been burned down. He favored restoring her the money, but he said that he had never intended to give it to these cotton speculators. And General Sullivan, the man who indorsed the order, and whose testimony shows the facts in this case, is conclusive upon that point. General Grant and his officers and all of them stand before the country on trial, and the gentleman from Ohio would have them condemned for an action that I regard as unworthy of a soldier. Would you damage them; would you blast their reputation; would you crush them with infamy; would you wrong them with an accusation of this kind? And they stand before the country on trial.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the order of General Grant was a general order to the effect that his forces should take from inside of our lines such property in retaliation. Not inside of the confederate lines, for that was an act of war, but inside of our lines where there is a raid and destruction of property. He did not make any other order. We had dominion over our line, and General Grant said if they destroyed public property they had the right to redress themselves upon those in rebellion against the Government in the neighborhood where the wrong was done. And that is as far as he went; and right here now I would say that while I am an admirer of General Grant, still I think he went even too far then, and I was opposed to what he did in that respect, because it was the honor of our Government that was at stake, and besides that I hold that there was but one government in this land. Our confederate friends said there were two. I do not know which view my friend from Ohio took of it. Which side were you on?

Mr. GEDDES. I thought there was but one government.

Mr. WOLFORD. Then, of course, you are a Union man; and you should vote with us on this question. You deny the right of these States to set up an independent government. That being the case every dollar lost, every piece of property that was destroyed, every man that lost anything during that war was a man who was a part of our Government, because this was our whole people and our Government. We just said to these gentlemen who were fighting us, "You are acting on a false assumption. Come back here and behave yourselves or we will make you. We will treat you like little children who are disobedient. We will chastise you. We will whip you until you come back." But you want to strike them now. You want to strip them of their property. You want to take the property of private individuals and put it into the Treasury of the United States where it would be a disgrace to the nation; or else you want to give it to the cotton speculators, not that it belonged to them.

But our Union officers held no such doctrine and acted upon no such doctrine. And I come here to vindicate them and say it is to their honor and their praise that during the whole war very few robbers participated. There were a few; there will be bad men everywhere, and gentlemen you on the other side had a few, too; you will not deny it, any man that is honest among you. They are the sort that will go with the gentleman from Ohio to vote for public plunder.

This money was taken from citizens, loyal and disloyal. I have said and I have the proof here under General Grant's own handwriting that he never intended to pay this money to anybody, but that it was only intended to make good the property of the General Government that they had taken inside of our lines. And he paid just one woman $500; and it was the gallantry of the good and brave man that led him to do that.

But you talk of General Grant being in favor of the principle the gentleman from Ohio has advocated here to-day. He would be ashamed of it; he is ashamed of it and repudiates it. And you ought to repudiate it too.

Now, Mr. Chairman, how much do they say was taken, and from whom? Twenty and odd thousand dollars. Now, whose money was that twenty and odd thousand dollars? That order sent a good many of them into the confederate army. I regret that, for they kept shooting our men. I do not know how many that order sent into the confederate army, but they shot our men, for they kept shooting and shot with a vengeance. They said, "You robbed us, and we will be avenged." That order extended to such men as the committee say were disloyal in their feelings. I notice one thing. There never was a robber on either side that when he robbed anybody, if a Union man, but wanted to rob in the name of the Union and always said it was a rebel he wanted to rob. If on the other hand the person robbed was a Union man, then it was in the name of the confederacy he was robbed.

But you make an assessment of twenty and odd thousand dollars. Where is all that money excepting the $6,000? Where has it gone? Has it gone back into the pockets of the men whom you took it from? Or would you misappropriate it by giving it to a set of men who are not entitled to it, who do not want to bear the loss that fell on them through the fortunes of war? Did I hear my distinguished friend from Ohio proclaiming the doctrine that when we followed General Morgan into Ohio and captured him, and when Morgan took property it ought to be replaced by Morgan's command or somebody else? The Government never thought that. It would be ashamed of that doctrine. I venture to say the gentleman is the only man in Ohio who would say you should go out in time of peace and plunder the confederates and make another war to collect what you lost in Ohio. Is that what you want? To make another war to collect what you lost in Tennessee?

No, sir; let their fortunes go as my fortune went. Let them go like the fortunes of the men who faced the enemy in the times of greatest peril. We staked our all. I thank God that we did so, for it was a high, a noble, and a glorious stake. We staked life and put it in jeopardy. We staked our fortune and everything we had for the maintenance of the great principle of the Union. And where is your honor when you want to plunder in the name of the Union? Have I lost my property? Let it go. And if another Union man lost his property, let it go. It was the fortune of war. If the confederates lost their property, God knows they need it and I should be glad they had it; but let it go.

But when this money is collected under the authority of the United States Government and put into the Treasury, I say it burns the pockets of the guardians of the Treasury. I say it is a shame and a disgrace to the nation, and it ought to come out as quickly as possible. And if you have misappropriated it, I want to remind you that under the grand flag of liberty and equality this great and powerful Government should do nothing that is dishonest or unjust. Carry out at all times the principles of honor and honesty and you will make your flag immortal in this Government. I say bring back your money if you have misappropriated it and give it to the cotton speculators. I understand that this man Arnold never made a bale of cotton in his life.

Mr. GEDDES. There is not a particle of proof of that.

Mr. WOLFORD. Where is your proof? You can not expect us to prove a negative. The gentleman has assumed a violation of principle and of every law, and has made a long speech in which he asks those who deny his position to prove a negative. I will not attempt to accommodate the gentleman; although proof was plentiful as blackberries I would give no such reason in any such case. But General Grant tells us this man was a cotton speculator, and he says he never intended that order should extend to cotton speculators. He says: "I only levied that assessment because I thought it was well to have it, and it could be held in security for the future good conduct of those people." That was an act of war and might have been a good thing. But I never dreamed the Government would undertake to pocket it, or would undertake to give it to anybody else but the man it was collected from.

The gentleman from Ohio says it had a good effect, it caused the raids to cease. But I say the only question for this House to decide is what is its duty in this case. I appeal to gentlemen on every side that the only question for this House to consider is will you do right and restore this money to the men from whom it was taken, or will you give it to some one else who may have lost property?

Do you intend to go with the honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES]? I have heard of the bloody shirt being waved; it has been waved in many forms. But God knows that the shirt the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES] has waved was the bloodiest shirt and with the filthiest blood on it that I ever saw.

Now, will you set a precedent here in the Congress of the United States to go out to our confederate friends who have been impoverished and ruined by the war and say to them that the money which you wrongfully took from them shall be used to pay some losses which a Union man may claim to have sustained? Will you justify the assessment upon confederates to pay the great State of Ohio for the loss which was sustained by the raid of General Morgan? I do not know where it will lead us. But you may be sure we will never be a happy country, we will never be a free government, we will never be great or honored among ourselves or by foreign nations if we pursue such an unjust, unwise, and unholy course of action as is here recommended.

There is but one honest thing for us to do, and that is to pay back what of this money is left in the Treasury to the men whom you got it from, and with interest. And then we should pass another bill before I shall be satisfied. I never shall be satisfied until this Government, for its own honor and glory and sense of justice, shall make an appropriation to pay back every dollar that was assessed upon these people, and I hope there will be enough in this Congress willing to do the right thing.

The war is now over. Peace is established. There is no army now threatening or menacing you. The property which you took was their property then, and it is now. The only question is, will you give this money back, what there is left of it, to the men you took it from, and then appropriate enough more to pay the balance?

I have already trespassed too long on the time of this House. I did not expect to speak on this bill, but when I heard such a distinguished man as my friend from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES] advocate boldly in the Congress of the United States the robber's cause I could not keep still.

Mr. STORM. I will yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DIBRELL].

Mr. DIBRELL. I will reserve that time until my colleague [Mr. TAYLOR] has addressed the committee.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose as briefly as possible to call the attention of the committee to the prominent facts in this case, and to submit the questions of right and justice, and law arising, and that should govern the same. This being done, I shall insist that the amount over and above a sufficiency to fully indemnify the Government be refunded to the parties who were assessed, and that this Committee of the Whole recommend to the House for adoption, the bill I had the honor to introduce, in lieu of the report of the Committee on War Claims.

I have not heretofore monopolized much of the time of the House, and I respectfully ask attention to a fair and impartial discussion and consideration of the facts and circumstances surrounding this case, as disclosed by the proof. Fully conscious of the embarrassing difficulty to overcome, and that the report of the committee submitted by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES], chairman of the Committee on War Claims, is a barrier, yet believing as I do that the bill for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others, beneficiaries, was hastily considered, and that the report can not and does not, command the support of the entire committee, and personally knowing these claimants, I most respectfully demur to the action of the committee and earnestly invoke the attention of members to a consideration and examination of the merits of the case, and a reversal of their decision. If attention can be arrested for a short while, I feel confident that a plain statement, corroborated by the facts, which no member of the Committee on War Claims will gainsay, will be sufficient.

It may be permissible to remark, however, that this case has been here for a number of years, in which time these parties have been demanding redress from the Government, and that these claims were reported favorably in the Forty-fifth Congress, and again at the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress, when they passed the House, and I have no doubt with the aid of the vote of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on War Claims. Since that time the case has been shifting between this and the other end of the Capitol, having been favorably reported in the Senate and adversely in the House at the last session of Congress.

But now it is proposed to deny these parties the payment of their claims, and by a report insist that although the money extorted from them by military assessments in the distempered times of 1862 now constitutes a part of that grand surplus which is in the vaults of the Treasury, it shall remain there as a fund collected by arbitrary power, by payment from non-combatants, which in my opinion if permitted by this Congress, indicates that they believe the Government has the right to assume the rôle of a highwayman and exact money at will from its peaceful citizens and loyal subjects.

As I have already stated, this bill has passed this House in a preceding session, and in the last Congress passed the Senate, and for years has been ricocheting between the two Houses, and had its origin in the following manner:

On the 25th of November, 1862, a command of confederate cavalry made a raid upon a force of Federal soldiers stationed at Henderson, on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, capturing the garrison, their arms, camp equipage, &c. The confederates also burned a few bales of cotton alleged to belong to the United States, but which in fact was the property of one of the claimants, as shown by the proof on file, and destroyed the depot buildings and water-tank belonging to the railway corporation.

This in war was legitimate, and was an occurrence not infrequent during hostilities with each of the belligerents. Other cotton was destroyed, the ownership of which was claimed by private parties, who applied to the Federal authorities for redress, and on the 2d of December following the commandant of the Federal forces stationed at Bethel Springs (Col. I. N. Haynie, of the Forty-eighth Illinois Regiment) appointed a board of officers, who were directed to ascertain the losses sustained and approximate the damages suffered from the raid, with a view to an assessment by way of reprisal upon persons residing in the neighborhood, supposed to be in sympathy with the confederates. The board thus constituted and appointed assessed the value of the property captured and destroyed as follows:

Cotton burned belonging to the United States	$1,900 00
Arms and camp equipage	3,180 00
Cotton belonging to individuals	18,171 36
Railway property	3,500 00
Making a total of	26,751 36

This extraordinary, ex parte proceeding, the finding of this military board, was submitted to Colonel Haynie, who thereupon caused an assessment of this amount to be levied upon certain citizens, the claimants, who resided in the neighborhood of Henderson. The amount was prorated according to the estimated wealth of each of the claimants, and they compelled at the point of the bayonet, at the risk of being made prisoners and carried to Alton, to raise this large amount of money.

This action was reported to the general commanding, and he requested to issue "an order directing the collection and disbursement of the amount assessed."

On the 12th of December, 1862, General Sullivan, commandant of the district, by Special Order No. 15, directed Colonel Haynie to collect the amount from the parties, but did not direct its disbursement as requested, but ordered him to "pay over the amount to Col. J. D Webster, superintendent of United States military railroads."

I here submit a statement with the names of the parties upon whom assessments were levied and the respective amounts:

The commission convened under Special Order No. 73 reported the following list of names and amounts to be assessed upon each, as follows:

H. Johnson	$815 00
Stephen M. Johnson	815 00
D. J. Franklin	163 00
Josiah Franklin	195 60
Nat. Buchley	326 00

This amount of money, Mr. Chairman, was forced from the parties sought to be made beneficiaries in this bill, and to-day the greater part of it is in the Treasury of the United States.

The Government has been reimbursed in full the sum of $3,180 for the destruction of arms and camp equipage—a proceeding, it occurs to me, no fair-minded, unprejudiced person can insist upon as right and honorable in a great nation, to thus compel her citizens to pay for the torts of others they could not control.

Furthermore, the Government was engaged in war, and not in a cotton speculation; but this extraordinary commission, or board of military assessors, assumed as much, and saw proper to assess an amount sufficient to indemnify the Government for cotton supposed to belong to it. It appears, however, from the proof, that the Government had no cotton at Henderson to be burned. To this I will again refer.

Mr. Chairman, I have stated that the commandant at Jackson refused to order a disbursement of this fund, and his action was endorsed by General Grant, for on the 23d of January, 1863, he, by telegram from Memphis, Tenn., ordered Major Smith to turn over the funds received from General Sullivan, by virtue of this assessment, to the provost-marshal-general, Col. William S. Hillyer, which was accordingly done.

There has never up to this time been issued an order directing the disbursement of this assessment. In the collection of this levy the sum of $28,625.34 went into the hands of the officials and was accounted for by them to the Government, and most of the same has been covered into the Treasury. It further appears that the railroad property was valued at $3,500, and that the damages to the road have long since been repaired, not by the Government, but by the railroad company, and that no part of said sum was ever used in repairing the damages. The railroad is not here complaining or demanding payment, yet the report of the committee recommends to the American Congress, that this Union of ours should act the part of dishonesty, by levying an assessment for the benefit of the railway and then denying the right of the company and of the individuals to the money.

Mr. Chairman, upon what hypothesis, upon what provision of the laws of war, can this be justified? The Government evidently is not entitled to the benefits of this appraisement; the railroad has never demanded it, and as soulless as such corporations are generally supposed and denominated, the Mobile and Ohio Company up to this time has possessed too much conscience to do so.

Is it to be promulgated that the United States will voluntarily assume to be prochien ami for the railroad? If so, she as such guardian has acted in bad faith with her ward, for twenty-two years ago she collected this money, and by this report proposes to swindle the infant, for there is no accompanying proposition to pay the railroad.

I desire to call the attention of the House to a part of the report submitted by the Committee on War Claims through General Bragg (a gallant Union officer), then chairman, to the Forty-sixth Congress, with a recommendation that these claims be paid, which is as follows:

At the time of the appraisal of the damages and of the levying and collecting these assessments it was supposed to be under and in execution of an order of General Grant, then commanding the troops in that department. But it appears from the papers filed that General Grant disavowed the construction put upon his general orders by the local officers, and declared the purpose and intent of his general order to be that reprisal should be made by way of levy and assessment in case of raids within our lines like the one at Henderson only to repay such losses as the Government might sustain in its property thereby, and he refused to recognize the right of private claimants to reimbursement by such levy and assessment; and on the 23d day of January, 1863, ordered the proceeds of such assessment and collection to be turned over to the provost-marshal-general. And it appears by the papers filed that his action in denying the right of private claimants to reimbursement for losses sustained by the raid out of this fund was approved by the Secretary of War, on the report made thereon by General M. C. Meigs; which report maintains the law to be that the power existed to levy and collect an assessment to pay private losses in the discretion of the general commanding; but as against such general's construction of his own order and purpose, no right whatever could accrue to a private claimant for reimbursement.

The logical sequence from these facts, and this declaration and construction by General Grant of his orders, seems to be that the subordinates, in the execution of the orders of the commanding general, should have made an assessment only for the losses sustained by the Government, namely:

For cotton burned belonging to the United States	$1,900
Arms and camp equipage belonging to the United States	3,180
Total	5,080

Had the Government rebuilt or repaired the injury to the railway property, as an essential for their use of it, that also should be included as a proper item for assessment; but the evidence shows that the railway company repaired their injuries at their own expense.

Deducting this amount, for which the assessment was authorized, from the total amount collected, there remains a balance of $22,271.26 taken from the petitioners under a misconstruction of the order of the commanding general, as certified to by his own action and the evidence of an officer of his staff.

This committee have maintained, and still adhere to the doctrine, that no nation is liable for the willful torts of its soldiery.

But was this assessment a tort, within the meaning of such well-established doctrine? It is submitted that this wrong is clearly without the rule, because this assessment was collected by an officer of high rank, commanding a military district, in the execution of an office giving him colorable authority, to say the least, to do the act he did; and that act was ratified by the general commanding, impliedly at least, by not ordering restitution where the excessive assessment came to his knowledge.

But if the reasoning on this point may be deemed questionable, there is upon the facts another and complete answer to the application of this principle. The proof shows to an absolute certainty that of the money so collected $23,325.16 was applied by the United States to its use, knowing the source from whence it was derived, and the remainder of the sum, $4,026, by all reasonable presumption, was likewise applied to the use of the Government. And the committee is so constrained to hold, as a contrary conclusion would compel us to impeach the integrity of a gallant officer, who fell before Vicksburg without a stain upon his citizen or soldier life.

The law of the case, then, may be stated to be, that if the officers, agents of the Government, committed a tort originally, it was approved by the principal, the Government, when it knowingly accepted the benefits of the tortious act. And no proceedings by way of confiscation or condemnation have ever been had to divest the persons so assessed of their right in the surplus fund.

Hence your committee are constrained to hold that the claims of the petitioners to the amount collected of them ($22,271.26) in excess of the requirements of General Grant is valid, and that the Government ought in right to refund the same, and report herewith a bill redistributing the same to the persons who paid the same ratably, in proportion to the sums originally paid by each of them respectively, and recommend its passage.

Mr. Chairman, I can not concur in the foregoing in so far as it holds these claimants responsible for $1,900 for cotton burned belonging to the United States, for the evidence is conclusive that the Government had no cotton, that it actually belonged to Stephen L. Ross, one of the beneficiaries, and was temporarily seized by the commander of the military forces at Henderson to be used as breastworks.

Therefore the question upon these premises suggests itself, is it right longer to deny relief? The case stated is this: A military board of questionable jurisdiction in 1862 levies an assessment upon parties within the Federal lines who were peaceful, submitting without resistance to the authority of the United States, and in no wise connected with the military, for the purpose of indemnifying the Government in her losses. The order was exceeded and a large surplus collected. Nineteen years after the cessation of hostilities we find this fund in the Treasury of the Unite States unappropriated. A committee of this House by their report declare that it must so remain. Is it right, I ask? To whom does this money belong? Can the Government honestly retain it?

Other parties are demanding that a large amount of this fund be paid them; and in report No. 74 (the case now being considered with this) the committee so recommend, holding that he had cotton destroyed, and that the levy was made for his benefit.

The officers by law intrusted with the adjudication and settlement of such matters have determined that these cotton speculators were not entitled to this money by reason of any loss they sustained, and this decision has been approved by the proper authority. If they are not entitled to it, and no one contends that the Government is, it follows that Hiram Johnson and others who paid it are entitled to be refunded. The Government can not take advantage of the mistake and misapprehension of orders and make for itself a gain. In discussing the modern laws of war governing the seizure and appropriation of "enemies' property," Chancellor Kent says "the rule may now be regarded as excluding in general the seizure of the private property of pacific persons for the sake of gain."

That the House may understand, I herewith submit a communication from General M. C. Meigs, Quartermaster-General, to the honorable Secretary of War, December 2, 1871, in which he clearly and unequivocally states that the Government is not responsible to the speculators, and that the fund collected from these claimants is in the Treasury:

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 2, 1871.

SIR: With reference to the claim of W. N. Arnold and others, for cotton destroyed at Henderson Station, Tenn., by rebel troops, referred to this office, November 20, 1871, for report as to the liability of the Government for payment of these claims, having reference to the statement of claimants that the cotton was seized while in transit to Memphis, and used for breastworks and fortifications, and while in possession of the United States the cotton was captured and destroyed by rebels, &c., I have the honor to report:

As regards the question on which the opinion of the Quartermaster-General is called for, i. e., liability of the United States for the cotton, I find that the cotton is alleged to have been taken possession of and placed in breastworks for defense of the post of Henderson Station, and to have been destroyed by the enemy when the garrison was captured by the rebel forces.

I think that the United States is not liable for the destruction by an enemy of property thus temporarily used. The cotton piled in breastworks cannot be held as actually appropriated to use of the United States. Like any other bulky packages which could be left out of doors and used in case of danger as a shelter from behind which to fire at the enemy, it would, had it been successfully defended, have been ultimately restored to the owners. The cotton does not appear to have been confiscated, seized as forfeited, or appropriated to the United States.

By law and general orders relating to captured and abandoned property, all property coming into possession of the Army was to be reported, and unless needed for military uses was to be finally turned over to the Treasury agents, charged with such expense of transportation as had been incurred by the Quartermaster's Department. But no officer of the Army had authority to pay for such property.

Cotton used for breastworks is not quartermaster stores. The proper material for breastworks is earth, with sod or wood revetment, and the provision of material for this purpose belongs to the Engineer Department, and cannot be paid for by the Quartermaster-General as quartermaster stores under the law of the 4th of July, 1864.

The destruction was the act of the enemy. The United States lost largely while guarding this property, and I do not see that the United States became liable for its destruction by using the property itself as a means of protection while defending it.

General Grant, then commanding, ordered a war levy upon neighboring rebels, and the full value of the United States property and of the cotton (private property) destroyed appears to have been collected. Colonel Hillyer states that the money thus collected exceeded the amount which General Grant had intended to have collected, and that General Grant refused to permit it to be applied to the payment of private losses and damages.

Part of the contribution or levy appears to have gone into the military railroad department, being that which represents the value of public property destroyed.

Part of the remainder, namely, $30,000, went into the hands of the quartermaster, Col. C. A. Reynolds, as appears from his accounts on file at the Treasury.

In settling the accounts of officers of this department at the Treasury, all these military collections, levies, rents of abandoned or captured buildings, &c., are, if their proceeds have been used in the operations of the Quartermaster's Department, charged against the regular appropriation of the Quartermaster's Department, and the amount is placed in the Treasury by transfer warrant to the credit of these irregular funds.

While it was within the military authority and power of a general in the field to levy and collect moneys as fines; and while he might have paid the proceeds to those who had been injured by the enemy, it appears that General Grant refused to do this, and I know of no law by which any officer of the United States can now take this money from the Treasury and apply it to the payment of these losses and damages.

I am of opinion that the parties have no claim in law, and no officer, so far as I know, has power to relieve them.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. C. MEIGS,
Quartermaster-General, Bvt. Maj. Gen. U. S. A.

Approved.

WM. W. BELKNAP, Secretary of War.

APRIL 16, 1872.

To the honorable SECRETARY OF WAR,
Washington, D. C.

The commanding general of the military forces of the United States has repeatedly, through his subordinates, declared that his army was not an insurance company to indemnify cotton speculators for losses in their operations, and that no part of this money rightfully belonged to them; that he did not intend that any assessment should be made in excess of an amount sufficient to indemnify the Government; and that his orders had been misunderstood and exceeded. This is a controlling fact, that the subordinate officers acted under a misapprehension of the orders of the commanding general, as evidence of which the following from Col. W. S. Hillyer, provost-marshal-general of the Department of Tennessee, is submitted:

NEW YORK, July 15, 1870.

MY DEAR SIR:

* * * * * * *

In November or December, 1862, or January, 1863, General Sullivan was commanding at Jackson, Tenn. At that time a bridge was fired and some damage done to Government property by guerrillas. A Union woman extinguished the fire and saved the bridge. It was represented also that about the same time a large amount of private cotton was destroyed by these guerrillas. General Grant directed General Sullivan to make assessments and collect the same from rebel sympathizers in the neighborhood sufficient to make good the Government losses and pay a reward of (I think) $500 to the woman who extinguished the fire.

General Sullivan collected a much larger sum than was required for these purposes and reported the excess to General Grant, with a statement that parties who had had cotton destroyed by guerrillas claimed that he, General Grant, intended their losses should be made good to them out of this fund. General Grant in reply stated that it was not true that he so intended; that the Army was not an insurance company to indemnify cotton speculators for losses in their operations, and that no part of this money rightfully belonged to them nor should be paid to them. That he did not intend that any assessment should be made in excess of an amount sufficient to indemnify the Government and reward the woman, and that his orders had been misunderstood or exceeded.

* * * * * * *

Yours, respectfully,

WM. S. HILLYER.

General T. M. VINCENT,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Washington, D. C.

Upon General Grant's attention being called to this letter he wrote, February 25, 1882, to the Senate committee as follows:

General Hillyer's letter as printed above is no doubt entirely correct. I certainly never intended any collection for the benefit of cotton purchasers.

U. S. GRANT.

General Grant has refused repeatedly to appropriate the fund to Arnold and others who claimed it as an indemnity for their losses, and denied their application. Again, Colonel Hillyer, as early as September 3, 1863, makes the following statement in respect to the application of these cotton speculators, and its rejection by the commanding general:

[Extract.]

NEW YORK, September 3, 1866.

MAJOR: So much I got from the record from my recollection. Outside of the record I would remark that one of the claimants for indemnity for cotton lost by the rebel raid applied to me by letter at Memphis, stating that he had purchased cotton, which was his private property, and which had been destroyed by the rebels on the raid near Henderson Station, and claimed that he was entitled to be indemnified out of a fund assessed and collected from rebel sympathizers by the commanding officer for that purpose.

I consulted General Grant about the claim, and under his instructions disallowed it, General Grant at the time stating that the Army was not there for the purpose of protecting cotton-buyers, that he had never authorized subordinate commanders to make assessments upon rebel sympathizers (except) to make good damages done to Government property with one further exception, and that was to reward two Union women who had saved a railroad bridge from fire. That there was an assessment to which those from whom it was collected might have some claim, but not the speculators whose profits were regulated by the risks and whose accumulation of cotton often tempted raids which resulted not only in the destruction of their own cotton but a loss of Government property and the lives of our soldiers.

WILLIAM S. HILLYER,
Late Provost-Marshal-General, Department Tennessee.

Maj. GEORGE K. LEET,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Headquarters Army United States.

But we are not left merely to conjecture, Mr. Chairman, as to the object and intention of General Sullivan in making these assessments. As evidence, and a complete answer as to the intention of the order, I herewith submit and ask to be read the sworn testimony of General Jeremiah C. Sullivan, who issued the famous Order No. 15, under which these assessments were made, in which deposition it will be seen that he most emphatically contradicts the inference even that this money was raised to reimburse cotton speculators or for private purposes, but states specifically his object and the circumstances of the case. The understanding was that those men had to pay the money or be taken from their homes as prisoners, with the further understanding and agreement that the money was to be returned in the event of a cessation of raids.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
City and County of San Francisco, ss:

Jeremiah C. Sullivan, being duly sworn, deposes and says as follows, to wit:

I am the General J. C. Sullivan who was in command of the Department of West Tennessee when Special Order No. 15, December 12, 1862, was issued. I believed that by issuing that order guerilla raids upon my depots and outposts would be checked. During the command of my predecessor great annoyance had been caused by such raids. Upon investigation I found such raids were made by young men, who, leaving the rebel army on furlough, would visit their homes within my lines. After they had recruited their health and horses, gathering at some selected point they would make a dash on some outpost or depot and securing the spoil and destroying the property, gallop off to the army. An attack of this kind was made shortly after I took command. I did not have force enough to establish a guard in each town or at each cross-road.

I reasoned that the best way to check these raids was as far as possible to make the parents or prominent people near where these raids took place responsible for the good behavior of these young men when they came home. I did not believe that I could secure my object by imprisoning the parties referred to, knowing that the separation from their families and friends would imbitter feelings I was anxious to allay, but I knew the love of money was all-powerful in the human breast, and that if I exacted such a penalty I would have ever present with them a powerful monitor to warn them against such future attacks. On or about the 25th day of November, 1862, a raid was made upon the post of Henderson, Tenn., resulting in the destruction of a large amount of property then at said post. Upon the report of the attack at headquarters I issued Order No. 15, a copy of which I have no doubt is on file among the papers of the claimants, who ask to be reimbursed the money paid by them under that order.

Owing to the fact that all my books and papers relating to my military transactions are now in the East, and to the lapse of time, it is impossible for me to give a statement in detail of the result of Order No. 15. I can only say, in a general way, that I sent for a number of the leading and substantial citizens of the surrounding country, and having inquired into the standing and circumstances of each, I levied assessments upon a large number of such persons in proportion to the standing and ability of each, and gave them the option either to pay the respective amounts or go to Alton, with the distinct understanding between those persons and myself that the money so collected was to be held as security for the peaceful conduct of their neighborhood, and that if no more raids occurred the money was to be returned to them. A large number of the persons thus assessed consented to pay and did in fact pay the amounts assessed upon them.

After so great a lapse of time and in the absence of my books and papers, I can not from memory give the names of the persons who paid the assessments, nor the amounts paid by any of them. I know, however, that many thousands of dollars were collected, a careful and accurate record of which was made and preserved, and all the money so paid was then, to the best of my recollection, sent by me to the United States subtreasury at Saint Louis, and placed on deposit under such circumstances, to the best of my recollection, as would have enabled me to withdraw it and refund it to the parties at the proper time, but in the spring of 1863 I was relieved of the command of the Department of West Tennessee and placed on General Grant's staff.

Order No. 15 was not directed against parties who had been tried and convicted of complicity in the raid, but as against those whom I believed could control and discourage future raids; such parties as I believed to be influential and were interested in keeping the department quiet were selected and made to put up a money security, the amount based upon their ability in proportion to the loss sustained.

It was not intended that such money so collected should be used in any way to reimburse any person or individual who claimed a loss by such raid. That would have been insuring cotton-buyers against war risks.

What I was trying to do was to preserve quiet in my department, using as few troops as possible. I did not believe that the parties from whom I collected this money participated in the raid. I issued order No. 15 to prevent further raids by compelling the co-operation of these parties with me in my endeavor to do so. My order was a perfect success. In my opinion, the relief asked for should be granted, as this money was simply a bond for good behavior and compulsory assistance in helping me maintain order and quiet.

Cotton purchasers were not looked upon with favor in General Grant's command, and no officer would have dared make innocent parties pay their claims. I most positively state that it was in no manner intended by me to pay or adjust any such claims.

JEREMIAH C. SULLIVAN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 3d day of March, 1884.
[SEAL.] JOHN E. HARVILL, Notary Public.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. The object of his celebrated order, as explained by his deposition, was legitimate, and, extraordinary as it may appear, has the sanction of usage and of modern civilized warfare.

Order No. 15 was for a specific purpose and the general issuing the same repudiates the interpretation given it by the Committee on War Claims. Mark the language, Mr. Chairman:

I sent for a number of the leading and substantial citizens of the surrounding country. I levied assessments upon a large number of such persons in proportion to the standing and ability of each and gave them the option either to pay the respective amounts or go to Alton, with the distinct understanding between those persons and myself that the money so collected was to be held as security for the peaceful conduct of their neighborhood, and that if no more raids occurred the money was to be returned to them.

Order No. 15 was not directed against parties who had been tried and convicted of complicity in the raid, but against those I believed could control and discourage future raids.

General Sullivan, as an honest soldier and gentleman, further states in his sworn statement:

It was not intended that such money so collected should be used in any way to reimburse any person or individual who claimed a loss by said raid. That would have been insuring cotton buyers against war risks.

Again he says:

Cotton purchasers were not looked upon with favor in General Grant's command, and no officer would have dared make innocent parties pay their claims. I most positively state that it was in no manner intended by me to pay or adjust any such claims.

It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that this deposition, in connection with the letters of General Hillyer and the statement of General Grant, is incontrovertible as to the intention, and that the Government is but the trustee for these parties upon whom assessments were levied. But my friend Judge GEDDES insists that the memory of Generals Grant, Hillyer, and Sullivan is unreliable. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that every officer of the Government who had anything to do with this assessment and collection of this money has stated, as General Grant does, that no intention of the kind governed them at the time. The deposition—not statement, as my friend from Ohio calls it—but the deposition of General Sullivan contradicts most emphatically the inference that the money was raised to reimburse cotton speculators or for private purposes. He states specifically the object of the proceeding and the circumstances of the case.

The laws of war justified such a proceeding as explained; and the law of justice and common honesty now demands that that pledge made to these citizens by the General be fairly consummated. Be it said to the honor of General Grant, the great military commander and genius who wielded the armies of the Union so successfully, that he would scorn to issue an order with the construction placed upon it by this committee. The officers who had charge of this matter knew what they were doing; they had a warrant for it. Yet to-day this committee by their report pervert the meaning of that order, and propose to do just what General Grant said he did not intend. The money is in the Treasury and should be paid these claimants, the cestuis que trust of the Government.

I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the honorable gentleman from California, Judge TULLY, is personally acquainted with General Sullivan, and that he regards him as a man in every way reliable. This being true, and his statement accordingly, orders were misconstrued and an excess collected, and upon the indisputable facts presented I can not imagine how any unbiased mind can gainsay the rights and equities of Hiram Johnson and others to this fund. Mr. Chairman, the evidence clearly shows that they were wholly innocent of the contemplated raid on Henderson, and were ignorant of the military operations in that vicinity until after the capture of the town. They have proven a negative and branded as infamously false the accusation that they planned the capture, which is corroborated by the testimony of General Sullivan, for he states that they were not guilty of complicity in the raid.

The affidavit of the commander of the confederate forces, his guide, and a part of the command sustain the fact that these claimants were in no wise connected or responsible for the raid on Henderson. The lines of the Union Army at that time extended south of this locality, and that country was never again during the war under the control of the confederates, and these parties were law-abiding citizens, quietly remaining at home in the peaceful pursuits of life.

Let it be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that when this demand was made upon them they were within the Union lines, amenable to the Government, not participants in the rebellion, and a number of them advanced in life, and by this extraordinary proceeding have been financially embarrassed and deprived of many of the comforts of life, necessaries in declining years, while this great and opulent Government, with hundreds of millions in her Treasury, refuses to refund their own money so unjustly detained.

The proposition that the Government should withhold and keep this fund is monstrous and unconscionable, and I do not believe the American Congress will be a party to any such iniquitous legislation.

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the claim of one of these cotton speculators, in their report, to accompany bill H. R. 3937, insist that "the Government having received this money upon account of the claimant's property, ought in justice to pay him the amount of his loss."

This assumption is untrue. The Government did not receive the money on account of his losses, and the assessments were not made for that purpose. So says Generals Grant, Hillyer, and Sullivan. Then if it was not it should be returned to the rightful owners, for the committee will doubtless concede that the Government should not retain it and thereby make a gain.

Mr. Chairman, while it is foreign to my purpose to unnecessarily assail any one, yet duty compels me to invite the attention of the committee to a statement made by Colonel Hurst, who was a bitter, intense Unionist, who was acquainted with all these parties, and who raised and commanded a regiment of cavalry in the Union Army. He negatives the theory that this party had the cotton. Colonel Hurst in his statement, among other things, says:

I have been familiarly acquainted with the claimants for more than forty years. I know them to be honorable, just, and good men, who were at home in the peaceful pursuits of life when the assessment and collections were made. I know of no gentleman whose character for goodness is better than that of the claimants. I think they are as justly entitled to that money as I am to reap the reward of my daily labor. And again, as to Willis N. Arnold, who interposes some objections to the relief sought by claimants, and setting up some sort of claim to the money as having been collected for his benefit, I must say Mr. Arnold was a very poor man at the commencement of the war in 1861. He certainly had no money to pay for cotton or to enter into any other speculation upon. He was esteemed a villain and an outlaw before the war, and was living on a small and very poor farm in Henderson County, adjoining this.

As to his loyalty, it was manifested by his being what I called a camp-follower and a thief, who ran the blockade and dealt in cotton and confederate money in a small way. I can't think he ever was the owner in his own right of as much as ten bales of cotton at any one time during the war. I have lived among this people for the last forty-seven years; know them, know their antecedents, and that I can speak correctly of their merit and demerit I feel confident. I raised and commanded a regiment in the Federal Army, and claim to know of what I speak. While I wish every man to have his just dues, I would injure no man in the least to right another's wrongs. Hoping that justice will be awarded to claimants,

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FIELDING HURST,

Late Colonel Sixth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers, U. S. A.

Following this is a statement from one of our judges in Tennessee, who was also a strong Union man, and for outspoken opinions was incarcerated in the confederate prisons. He says he knows the claimants, and that not one of them would be willing to defraud the Government. He further says:

I am satisfied their claims are just and correct, and believe it is and would be nothing but an act of justice that the United States should refund the money. And I am further satisfied that each and every good, law-abiding, honest citizen, without distinction of party, in this community, who knows the facts, would rejoice to know the Government had passed the bill and that the claims had been paid to the parties as named in the bill, and were I in the House I would not only vote for but would urge the immediate passage of the bill for the relief of these most just and honorable claims of the parties.

This gentleman has, as shown by the record, the indorsement of the chairman of the Republican executive committee of Tennessee. But I do not purpose referring specially to the proof further than to remark just here, that the principal witness to support the assumption of the committee as to the complicity of claimants in the matter, one Freeman, was afterwards convicted of burglary and served a term of years in the penitentiary of the State of Tennessee.

Again, there is no legal proof on file that Arnold ever owned any cotton, save perhaps his bare statement, unsupported, and the finding of the military board, presumably based upon his individual representations, made shortly after the capture of Henderson.

Mr. Chairman, as to the law of the case, and as to the view of it evidently taken by the Committee on War Claims, I controvert most seriously the right of a military commandant, upon complaint merely, to levy and enforce assessments upon supposed hostile communities in his own country by way of reprisal to indemnify private injuries and redress private grievances, and such reprehensible conduct can not be justified, and to retain money thus acquired, as the Senate committee clearly states it, "from those who paid it under duress, finds no sanction in the laws of war or the forum of public morals."

The legal remedy of these cotton speculators who followed the Army for protection and individual gain, was against the parties who destroyed their property, and was unembarrassed in the courts of Tennessee.

The claimants under this bill were not, and by no special pleading or hypothesis of reasoning can be, morally, legally, or equitably responsible for the torts of other parties in the absence of collusion. Put it upon broad constitutional grounds, and these claimants should be refunded their money, so unjustly extorted from them by threats of imprisonment, for the organic law expressly provides that—

No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

If, then, property can not be taken for public use, the conclusion is apparent it can not be impressed for private use or be appropriated to individuals for private purposes. The conclusions of the committee, and the declaration that in the States lately declared in insurrection under the strict rules of international law, the Government incurred no liability for property taken, used, damaged, or destroyed when occasioned by the necessary operations of war, is to me surprising in the light of legal precedents and carrying the right of the Government to the extremity.

That a government has the authority under peculiar circumstances to destroy property I do not controvert, but that power is coupled with implied responsibility, and its arbitrary exercise of the same is not necessarily followed by immunity from damages. A contrary doctrine saps the foundation of all law, and strains the Constitution to an unwarranted significance, and renders nugatory that safeguard which says "the citizen shall have due compensation." That the Government, through the agency of a commander of the Army, has a right to adjust private grievances and differences, and take from one citizen his property and give it to another without compensation, is a monstrous declaration indeed.

I concede, Mr. Chairman, that in time of war, the Government has a right to impress and use property and make assessments in cases of emergency or military necessity from its friends or enemies, but this right implies an obligation upon the part of the Government of restitution to the parties damaged, and when hostilities cease she is morally and legally bound to pay for such property.

The property of an enemy within the lines is subject to the same regulations, and although the Government may in time of war use or destroy it for the purpose of bringing enemies under subjection, or in the necessary operations of war, still she has no right to take such property and donate it to private purposes, or to individuals, especially camp-followers, cormorants upon the country, and speculators, who are endeavoring to gain from the exigencies of the times and the necessities and misfortunes of the people.

But this remarkable report extends the rule and promulgates the doctrine that the Government can levy assessments to be paid in money, and impress private individual property of its subjects, for the purpose of repairing damages committed by a belligerent with whom they are supposed to be in sympathy. I assume it will not be controverted that if the property destroyed belonged to the Government the forces against whom war was being waged had a right, under the laws of war, and it was expected under the regulations governing belligerents, to destroy it, for it is well settled that an hostile army has a perfect right to destroy property belonging to the opposing party and thereby cripple its efficiency.

No rule goes so far as to insist that the Government can then seize upon individuals' private property to indemnify them. Citizens can not be responsible for such proceedings; if so, those living in the vicinity of great battles would be liable for arms, ammunition, camp equipage, and property destroyed in such conflicts. If held to account for this, by the same reasoning they would be held to an account for all the lives lost, although it was impossible for them to avert the carnage or loss of property. Establish such a rule, and you annul the fundamental law and break down every barrier and bulwark to the encroachment of arbitrary power, established for the protection of personal rights and security in a state of war, and destroy the foundation upon which rests the liberty of the people.

This Government can not deny these claimants their rights and maintain her honor, for it is perfectly consonant with the obligations of the United States; it is equitable and strictly just to relieve as far as possible the unfortunate victims and sufferers from the misconduct or mistakes of her officers; for private rights should be inviolate, and unaffected by conquest or prowess of arms, and modern usage will sanction this humane provision.

When practicable, property should be restored to the rightful owners, and when this is impossible its value, and in all instances of unjust assessments under misconceived instructions or in excess of orders, the money should be returned. The United States can afford and as far as possible should be just and generous and restore these people, and not shelter behind a technical subterfuge and hackneyed phrase, that, although harsh, yet it can not afford to make the waste places green again that suffered by the ravages of war.

I would, Mr. Chairman, that all these homes and places made desolate and waste by the ravages of war could be made happy and prosperous again, and insist that it is the imperative duty of a wealthy and benign Government to contribute as far as possible to this end by dealing justly and promoting the happiness and welfare of its subjects, which will always command their love and respect.

Again, Mr. Chairman, it is a well-established fact, attested by proceedings in the Department here, that some of these claimants have so satisfactorily established their loyalty to the Union that the Government has compensated them for other property seized by the military forces of the United States. The committee turn a deaf ear to all these facts, and insist upon an application of the fund to other parties. Upon what principle of law or common fairness can this be justified? All that these claimants demand is that their own be returned to them; that the Government treat them justly and as citizens, and not as alien enemies or outlaws entitled to no respect.

It is quite impossible to right all the wrongs committed during the late war, yet when it is possible, and the Government is the trustee holding the funds impressed, as in this case, it should be done without delay. Rather restore all the parties claiming in these cases than deny simple equity to one party. Legislation shows that millions are annually appropriated for public purposes and the amelioration of the people, costly improvements made, and exorbitant expenditures, and that we have a redundant Treasury; and let it be remembered that the redundancy has been, and is swelled by some $28,000 of the hard-earned money of the citizens named in the bill who reside in the eighth Congressional district of Tennessee.

I have too much confidence in this Congress to believe for a moment that they will at this late day by their votes legalize this military proceeding and longer deny my constituents their rights under the law.

One important fact has certainly been overlooked by the Committee on War Claims, and that is that, prior to this time, Johnson, Rogers, and others, the claimants, as appears from the petition on file with the original papers, had voluntarily appeared before the proper authority or tribunal and reiterated their loyalty by taking and subscribing to the oath of allegiance as required by executive proclamation, and were conforming to its requirements, as fully shown by the circumstances at the time of the occurrences detailed in these proceedings.

With a brief summary of the case, Mr. Chairman, I shall conclude. This money was collected from claimants in 1862 for the alleged purpose of reimbursing the Government in losses sustained at the hands of a confederate raid. The losses of the Government are stated at a specific amount. The collection was in excess of what the general in command directed or contemplated, some $23,000 or more. This is undoubtedly shown from the statements of Generals Hillyer, Grant, and Sullivan, the officers above all others who can know the meaning of their action without the aid of interpretation.

This money collected from claimants is to-day in the Treasury of the United States unappropriated. General Grant and his subordinates declare that orders were exceeded, and that his army was not an insurance agent for cotton speculators. General Sullivan says that the understanding was this money was to be returned if similar raids did not occur, and that there was no more of them.

The railroad corporation is not claiming any part of this fund, and can the Government take the advantage of their liberality and fairness and thus make a gain? Should the United States deny the rights of claimants further? She can not indemnify for private losses, and I insist that in good conscience the money should be returned, and the Government freed from such a foul aspersion. I say foul aspersion, for upon what principle of right or justice can the Government retain this excess after having repaired her losses?

It should be remembered that in modern war such military assessments are never imposed on particular individuals, unless they themselves are the offenders, and certainly this arbitrary power can not be rightfully enforced in favor of private individuals to redress private injuries, "not inflicted by those upon whom the assessment is imposed and for which they could not be held civilly responsible," as insisted in the able and exhaustive report of the majority of the Senate committee. In this report, submitted by Senator JACKSON, April 24, the majority further say:

> The extent to which the commanding general might lawfully enforce assessments upon one portion of the enemy community to make good the losses caused by strangers to other members of the same community, when both by "intendment of law" occupy toward the Government the same relation, is a question by no means free from difficulty.

The Senate committee in the conclusion of their report in regard to an amount heretofore paid out to other parties, say, "But as that much ($7,795.08) of the fund has been already paid out, a majority of the committee consider that the Government should not refund that sum to the present claimants." This position is certainly untenable. If the Government, as trustee for these parties, holding this fund (their money), wrongfully appropriate the same, she should be responsible and account therefor. Why not? This rule of law applies to persons in their individual capacity, and why not to Government? If a trustee misappropriates funds in his hands in such capacity he and his bondsmen are liable for damages. It is no fault of these claimants that this part of the fund has been illegally or wrongfully paid out. They are guilty of no laches, for they have been demanding reimbursement for a number of years.

Discriminations should not be made against these claimants and they made to bear the burden of reimbursing all the losses to the Government caused by the casualties of war, and also to pay an excess of some $23,000 in round numbers to other parties.

The bill I introduced, Mr. Chairman, is equitable and meritorious, and it will be against equity and good conscience to deny the relief. I do not believe Congress will indorse the recommendation that these claimants pay for the fund wrongfully expended by the Government. Let us do right. Rather than rob one citizen, the United States can afford to lose this amount.

Let justice be done impartially and these citizens reinstated and reimbursed.

Just here, Mr. Chairman, as the recollection of General Sullivan has been attacked, and the truthfulness of his sworn testimony, let me say that since commencing my remarks I have been informed by another gentleman from California [Mr. GLASCOCK], who says he is personally acquainted with General Sullivan and knows him to be a gentleman in every respect, that anything he says can be implicitly relied upon.

I have listened with interest, Mr. Chairman, to find out what the gentleman from Ohio proposes to do with the amount over and above what he says should be paid to Arnold, but the Almighty and himself only know, for nothing in his report and no expression in his speech indicates his intention or that of the committee.

I was also forcibly impressed, Mr. Chairman, by the extraordinary liberality of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on War Claims, in proposing to give these parties a check upon General Early for some assessments that he made in Pennsylvania during the war. I insist that my friend should not have made an allusion of that kind. It is unfair and intended to prejudice this case. Let this case rest upon its own facts and circumstances. All we ask is that law, justice, and equity be administered; that the intention of Generals Grant, Hillyer, Sullivan, and of every officer that had anything to do with the impressment of this property and the collection of this fund be carried out, and that the money taken from these parties some twenty years or more ago be refunded to them.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope I may have the attention of the committee for a little while, because while this case does not involve a very large sum of money it involves a very large principle and is deserving of the serious attention of members of this House. It will not take me a great while to bring the salient facts before the committee.

Tennessee was one of the States that seceded from the Union, so far as a State can secede. In the spring and summer of 1862 by a series of military operations and great battles the Union forces obtained possession of West Tennessee, and held thereafter so much of it as was within the picket lines of the Union forces. In West Tennessee thereafter there was no organized rebel army, but scattered all over that portion of the State were strays from the army, home on furlough, who occasionally organized themselves into little bodies and destroyed property or lines of communication.

Colonel Haynie, an eminent soldier of Illinois, and a more eminent civilian, and not a robber, was in command at the little village of Henderson. My friend and colleague [Mr. MORRISON] will resent, as I do, the charge that when Colonel Haynie made any assessment he did it either as a robber or in ignorance of his legal rights, because he was as eminent for his knowledge of law as he was for his justice.

In West Tennessee about that time it became necessary to use some severe method to prevent the breaking of our communications. Different methods were adopted. I recollect of one adopted by myself, then serving in that section of the country. Between Jackson, Tenn., and Bolivar was a railroad. We occupied both of those points by our forces; and every little while between those points the railroad would be cut and our communications destroyed. We sent down into the neighborhood and arrested a number of the leading citizens, brought them to Jackson, and compelled them to give a bond that they would pay any damage done to that road by these irregular forces. And when they objected to me that it was a compulsory bond, obtained under duress, and therefore not collectible, I told them that we would take care of the collection; that they would give the bond or go to jail; and if the bond was not complied with it would be enforced. Thereafter there was no cutting of our communications in that vicinity.

In November, 1862, a force nowhere near any rebel army, a force that could not have come through that country organized, suddenly springs up and destroys Government property and private property in the village of Henderson. Colonel Haynie, then commanding at that post, took the responsibility of appointing a commission to ascertain the amount of injury done both to the United States and to individuals. A commission of officers of the Union Army, and of his own regiment, the Forty-eighth Illinois, proceeded to ascertain those facts and report to him. Therefore Colonel Haynie, not General Sullivan or any other general, but Colonel Haynie selected out of the leading rebel citizens thereabouts a number, and assessed the amount of twenty-six thousand and some hundred dollars upon them. What for? To reimburse the amount of damages done by this raiding force as ascertained by his commission.

Shortly after that, according to my recollection, Colonel Haynie was made general and the command devolved upon Colonel Sanford, of the same regiment. He went forward to enforce that assessment; and here came in General Sullivan ordering that the money be collected. Now, Colonel Haynie, in making this assessment, was strictly within the line of international law and the laws of warfare. He had just as much right, by all the authorities, to make this assessment and collect this money as the Army had a right to forage off the country, to seize corn, and wheat, and oats, and other provisions, to take possession of buildings, to seize cotton, to do anything with the property of the enemy in the enemy's country.

And the assessment and collection of this money for war purposes and by virtue of the war power were only another exercise of authority the same as the exercise of authority by the Union Army when it seized any other property. General Sullivan comes in twenty-two years afterward and undertakes to say what he did, when he did not do anything about it—it was Colonel Haynie—who undertakes to say this money was collected to be paid back, when he had not anything to do with making the assessment, when the assessment was made on the basis of injury and made for the purpose of paying the damage as shown by the record.

And the single question between these two bills is whether or not, the war power having been exercised, money collected and paid into the Treasury for the benefit of the parties concerned, and whether now in this Forty-eighth Congress we are going back upon the exercise of that power and restore to the rebels the property taken from them?

That is the whole question before us in these two bills. The money was collected, a portion was paid over to Colonel Webster, provost-marshal-general, to pay damage done to the United States, and another portion was paid over for the benefit of individuals, and the rest of the money was paid into the Treasury of the United States. In 1875 $9,600 was taken out of the Treasury by act of Congress and paid over to Aldridge and Patterson, those despised cotton speculators we hear of. I say, by act of Congress, approved by the President in 1875, Aldridge and Patterson, men from whom these damages were assessed, were paid $9,600. That bill passed the Senate and the House, and was approved by President Grant.

Now, this bill not only proposes to take out of the Treasury the money levied and collected on them for the benefit of the United States, but to take the $9,600 more out of the Treasury that has once been appropriated to the party upon whom it was assessed. That is what it does.

I wish to call the attention of the gentleman on the other side of the House to this fact: there is not a particle of difference between this and any claim set up by disloyal citizens for property taken. If you pay this claim by act of Congress then you ought to pay every man who lived in the South for every dollar's worth of property taken by the Government of the United States.

I say again there is not a particle of difference between this bill reported as a substitute for Johnson and others than any bill to pay any disloyal citizen of the South for anything taken by the Union forces. When we went into Tennessee and sent out our foraging parties for corn and wheat and oats and hams and chickens and everything else an army needed off the confederate forces, and while we were taking it in accordance with the war power conceded to all nations, we thought we were accomplishing a double purpose: that we were saving money to the United States Government for forage and we were crippling the enemy at the same time.

When General Butler took possession of New Orleans and found the war had made a great many poor people in that city, he sought out a number of wealthy ladies and gentlemen who had a few days before subscribed to a fund the sum of $30,000 to defend the city of New Orleans against him, and he levied an assessment upon each one of these individuals in proportion to the amount subscribed to the confederate defense fund, and he collected that assessment and expended it in taking care of the poor of New Orleans. He was a pretty good lawyer and knew what he was doing. It was the same thing Colonel Haynie did in this case precisely, and if you pay this money back to Johnson & Co. then you ought to pay Mrs. Slocum and all her confederates in New Orleans the thousands of dollars General Butler collected off them and expended, not for the benefit of the United States, but for the poor of that city.

If you pay this money back, then you will have to pay back to every man in West Tennessee around Bethel and Henderson and Corinth, and all that section of country. You ought to pay them for the corn we took to feed our Army. I say there is no difference between the propositions, and I wish gentlemen to understand that this is an entering wedge to pay the rebels for damages. It is a plain, simple, unvarnished proposition. It is a proposition that whenever the Union Army took anything off the people who were not actually engaged in the army it was highway robbery. I heard it said by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR], and I heard it suggested by one or two others around me asking questions, that if we committed an act of robbery ought we not to pay it back? Wherever the Union Army went, wherever it lived off the country, wherever it foraged off rebel citizens who were not in arms, then it was robbery, as I hear from gentlemen who come up from the South.

I say it was not robbery. I say it was in pursuance of lawful authority. I say to you it was a legitimate and proper mode of warfare; and, Mr. Chairman, when gentlemen from the South accepted the issue of war and appealed to the arbitrament of arms they at the same time accepted the laws of warfare and whatever results might follow to them in pursuance of such law; and it is pleading the baby act for them to come now into this House asking that this Government shall reimburse them for the damages resulting from their own acts.

The reason, Mr. Chairman, that I speak earnestly upon this question is because it goes further than the mere payment of the $26,000 covered by the bill to the twenty or thirty rebel gentlemen down in Tennessee, an assessment upon whom, according even to General Sullivan, worked like a charm.

In other words, just as soon as the scouting boys, who thought it fun to destroy property, found that their fathers or their brothers or their families were likely to be compelled to pay the damages, they ceased to scout around away from the main army; they ceased to do damage of that character, where there was no army making a movement, and the order worked like a charm to prevent such acts. The result was most wholesome.

Now I come to this proposition. This assessment was made in pursuance of a well-recognized principle necessarily involved in the power to carry on a war. Nobody will controvert it. It was legally made by Colonel Haynie, of the Forty-eighth Illinois Regiment. This money was collected in pursuance of an assessment made for a specific purpose. The amount assessed was determined by the amount of damage done to the Government, to the railroad company, to Aldridge and Patterson, and to Arnold. I heard a gentleman reading a letter from Colonel Hurst, in which he says that the parties referred to in the bill are a set of very elegant gentlemen. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have often met gentlemen whom I fought against during the war, and found them to be very elegant gentlemen myself. But, sir, I remember something about Hurst.

I remember of having read a letter addressed to the Quartermaster-General's Department at Washington in regard to a man named Jarrett, in West Tennessee, in which he said that he did not own a dollar's worth of property on earth and that he was a violent rebel; and yet the man, it was ascertained afterward, and admitted by Hurst himself, owned one of the finest plantations in Tennessee, was a man of high standing, was a pensioner of the war of 1812, and a loyal and true man. And when Hurst got over his anger he admitted that he was an honest, good man, and filed his letter in the Department saying that because he was mad at another man named Jarrett he would do anything he could to hurt him, and thought he was the other Jarrett.

Here, then, is in the Treasury of the United States $6,000 of money assessed and collected by virtue of lawful authority for the benefit of a man named Arnold, a loyal citizen of West Tennessee then and a citizen of West Tennessee now, whose property had been destroyed by the rebels. Now, gentlemen of the committee, let me ask you to remember that this town of Henderson is not far away from that historic town of Corinth. It is not far from the graves of the battlefield of Shiloh. It is not far away from those scenes where vast armies met in terrible conflict, and the people thereabouts were nearly all of them either in the confederate army or had sons or parents in that army. All of the county governments were under the confederate control.

The authority of the General Government was nowhere acknowledged except within the picket lines, and continued so for a long period. By presumption of law every citizen there, then, was an adherent of the enemy. By presumption of law his property was subject to be assessed, whether it be his goods and chattels, the use of his land, or his money. This property was assessed for a specified sum. It was paid over to the authorities. Aldridge and Patterson came before the American Congress and received this $9,600, which was assessed for them. Here comes Arnold and asks his $6,000, being the money collected for damages done to him by irregular troops of the enemy. And here we get a substitute in the shape of the Johnson bill, that says the Forty-third Congress made a mistake of $9,600; that the President of the United States made a mistake of $6,000; that $9,600 is in the Treasury and we will appropriate to these men the whole $26,000. We will not pay Arnold anything, but will make the Government pay for this mistake of $9,600, and we will do it because the men were rebels all the time, because we collected it from them because they were rebels, and now the time has come to change the rule and we will put in the entering-wedge here by which we will commence to make a precedent to pay all of these rebel claims. You will have no trouble, gentlemen of the committee, in getting rid of the surplus revenue in the Treasury in that manner. You will have no trouble in increasing the number of bonds the Government will have to issue; you will enlarge the list of claimants that the Government will have to pay; you will have no trouble in depleting the national Treasury and doubling the national debt if you pay this bill. All you need to do is to pass it and then follow the precedent that you will make thereby.

I only want gentlemen to understand exactly what they are voting for. When they go back on this committee's report in favor of Arnold and vote for the substitute they are voting simply, plainly, and unquestionably to pay for rebel claims by rebel citizens, claims for money that they were lawfully compelled to pay.

I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JONES].

Mr. PETERS. Before the gentleman from Illinois resumes his seat I should like to ask him a question. As I understand, this substitute is for the payment of Hiram Johnson and others. Now, I want to know whether as to Arnold the evidence was conclusive of his ever having been the owner of this cotton?

Mr. ROWELL. Why, certainly. It was found by a commission of three officers of the Forty-eighth Illinois Regiment after taking evidence, being on the ground in November, 1862, that he was a citizen there, that he lived there, and they found that he was loyal, that his property was destroyed, and that he was the owner of that property.

Mr. PETERS. How did he obtain this property?

Mr. ROWELL. That I do not know. We have the result of the investigation by the commission in their report, but not the evidence they took.

Mr. PETERS. Is there any evidence he was a cotton speculator.

Mr. ROWELL. No, sir; there was not. I will say right here that that is not very much of a cotton country. There is considerable cotton raised round there, but it is not so much of a cotton country as farther south and farther west. Grain and cotton are both raised; but there was considerable cotton there in the summer of 1862.

Mr. PETERS. I am frank to say I am opposed to paying any money for the losses of cotton speculators in war times.

Mr. ROWELL. Arnold was living there, and was not a camp follower.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I wish to ask my friend from Illinois whether the proof does not show that Arnold was a cotton speculator? Is not that shown by the statement of Colonel Hurst?

Mr. ROWELL. I do not take Colonel Hurst's statement as to that, after having examined the records of the War Department, and in view of what I have already stated about him in regard to the Jarrett matter.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I do not know anything about that. But I understand the gentleman from Illinois to say that these parties were all rebels. Do not the records of the War Department show that a number of these persons so satisfactorily proved their loyalty to the Government that they have been paid for property taken from them as Union men?

Mr. ROWELL. My best answer to that question is that I find there are a great many people in that section who twenty years after the war are able to prove their loyalty, while in 1862, when there with the Army, I never could find a white man at home.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. Would not that statement apply equally to Arnold?

Mr. ROWELL. It would but for the fact that a board of officers of the regiment, then on the ground, where all the testimony could be taken, found that Arnold was unquestionably a loyal man, while Colonel Haynie, being there on the ground and knowing what he was doing, picked out these men and assessed this levy upon them.

I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin. I do not intend to discuss at any length the questions involved in this bill and the proposed substitute. I fully agree with the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Illinois who has just taken his seat, and believe that this substitute should not be adopted.

I will only call attention to one point which has not yet been discussed. It appears from the official orders, which may be regarded as the record of these proceedings, that this assessment was made upon rebels, and that it was made for the benefit of loyal men, as well as for the benefit of the Government.

Some pretense has been made in this discussion that the assessment which was made by the officers in command at Henderson, Tenn., was made simply to compensate the Government for damage to its property. In order to give color to such a claim letters have been read, many loose surmises have been indulged in. But it is a significant fact that these letters and statements were prepared more than twenty years after the happening of the events to which they relate. They are worthless as testimony, no matter from how respectable a source they come. They are worthless because we have another class of evidence which we must all recognize as infinitely more reliable.

Some of us are lawyers. We know very well that if we were going to ascertain what were the opinions of a court, whether civil or military, twenty years ago, we would not ask the judge of that court, however reputable he might be, or however eminent as a judge. We would go to the record of that court for its decision. Now we have the record of this military court. We find in the record of these proceedings, from the written and printed orders of the officers in command, and from the finding of the military commission, what was the real purpose of collecting this money from the men who were found disloyal. These levies were made upon men who were then found to be giving aid and comfort to the rebellion. The records and orders show that they were made for the benefit of loyal men in that neighborhood whose property had been destroyed by rebel raiders, and also to repay the Government for its losses suffered at the same time. Any man who will take the trouble to read this abstract of the evidence which I hold in my hand will have no doubt upon this subject.

Our committee had before it, when this question was discussed, the authorities, showing very clearly that such a proceeding is within the power of the Government, and that it is within the power of officers in command of military forces in the country of an enemy engaged in open warfare. The right to exact contributions from an enemy to compensate for losses suffered by government or by loyal citizens is recognized in every treatise upon international law.

It is an exercise of the war power which may be called harsh and stern, indeed; but no harsher or sterner than the burning of cities, the destruction of private property, or the slaughter of armies. The only question for us to consider is this: Was there such a proceeding conducted according to the rules of war and the laws of nations? In arriving at a conclusion, I assert that we should scan the orders and the records of that time. They are the best evidence. While they exist they are the only competent evidence.

I therefore regard as idle all this talk about the letters of General Sullivan and about the letters of General Grant twenty years after these transactions. I take the orders; I take the finding of General Haynie, wherein he says:

I have levied upon each of the within-named persons held liable a tax, &c.—

Stating the amount. And he adds that the assessment was—

To make up the loss sustained by the United States Government and by Union citizens—

Naming them and giving the amounts to be paid by each and to each one severally.

There is the solemn record; and all these letters and all the gossip and all the loose talk that may be brought forward ought not to have a feather's weight against it.

I shall conclude by saying that whatever this committee may do it ought not, in my judgment, to adopt this substitute paying some $25,000 back to these disloyal men. There is no pretense that they were loyal. The military commission in 1862 found them disloyal. They were compelled to pay this $25,000 or thereabouts as a part of that penalty which disloyalty is always liable to be compelled to pay to loyalty. To pay it back is to inaugurate a policy which we can ill afford to adopt. It is not merely this amount which is involved. It involves the question whether at this distance from the war we propose to reopen and scan the validity of all those proceedings which took away the property of rebels.

There have been letters read during this discussion which give a certificate of character to these claimants. It is said that they are worthy and reputable men, highly esteemed in the community where they reside. These letters also belong to that class of testimony to which I have referred. They would be excluded in any court. They ought not to have been read here. But, sir, assume that they are true. They do not deny that these men turned against their Government. We can not compensate those men who were not loyal to the Government in its hour of peril. No matter how heavy their losses, no matter how worthy they now may seem, no claim of good character, no consideration of any kind can plead loudly enough to call upon this Government to restore to disloyal men the losses they sustained in rebellion. Before the Government can do that it must call the dead from their graves. It can not adopt that policy of paying indefinite and unknown sums until it is ready to ransack and deplete the Treasury. We can not remit the penalty which rebellion had to pay, and ought ever to pay, unless we are willing by enormous taxation to check the tide of national prosperity.

While I have but little interest in the fate of the original bill, I am quite certain that if the House shall understand the real meaning of this substitute it will be rejected. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, understanding that he desires to soon limit the time for debate.

Mr. GEDDES. I entirely concur in the suggestion that perhaps it is the general wish of the Committee of the Whole that this debate shall soon be closed. I am informed, however, that the time of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] was not entirely consumed by him, and that he wants to yield some portion of it to some gentleman near him.

Mr. ROWELL. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK].

Mr. HOUK. If the committee will give me their attention, I will try to occupy even less than the five minutes so kindly yielded to me. It seems to me that several gentlemen who have advocated the pending substitute, in opposition to the bill originally reported by the Committee on War Claims, have done so under a misapprehension of the facts—a misapprehension of the origin and circumstances of the assessment and collection of the money now in the Treasury and proposed to be paid out. It was assessed and collected for a specific purpose, the order therefor originating with Colonel Haynie, commandant of the post at Henderson, Tenn.

More than one gentleman has argued as though the original assessment in this case was founded upon some action by General Grant, whereas General Grant never heard of it for months, and perhaps for a year, after it took place. What are the facts? It seems to me that there can be little chance for gentlemen to differ as to what their vote should be when they come to understand what the underlying facts are.

To boil them down they are these: The Union troops were in possession of the village of Henderson, in West Tennessee. In that town and in the depot of that town there was some Government property, and there was some property there belonging to private citizens, loyal citizens, as was determined by the commandant of the post after legitimate investigation. While the Federal troops were thus occupying the station a rebel raid was made; the town was captured by the rebel forces and some property belonging to the United States was destroyed, together with some property belonging to private individuals. This is the beginning point.

Colonel Haynie, not General Grant; Colonel Haynie, not General Sullivan, but Colonel Haynie, who was in command of the post, in the exercise of what he believed to be his right under the laws of war, as the commandant of that force issued the original order organizing a military commission, which was instructed to ascertain, first, what did the Government lose, and, second, what property did the loyal private citizens lose by this rebel raid. This military commission, acting under orders, sat there, heard the proof, investigated the facts, and made their decision, finding that the Government of the United States had property destroyed there to the amount of so many thousand dollars, and that a number of loyal private citizens, among them Willis N. Arnold, for whose benefit the orignal bill now pending was reported, had property destroyed by this raid. Arnold lost property of the value of $6,000, and Aldridge and Patterson lost property of the value of $9,600, and other parties also lost property, making in all over twenty-six thousand dollars' worth of property which was destroyd by that raid.

Now, after it was ascertained how much had been lost by the Government and by private individuals, a specific number of citizens of that place, enemies of the United States, rebel sympathizers, or supposed to be (but that is immaterial upon this question), were selected by name and assessments were made against them to an amount covering the damage done to the Government and to the private citizens.

The CHAIRMAN. The five minutes yielded to the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GEDDES. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes of my time.

Mr. HOUK. As I was saying, this assessment was made upon the individuals selected, and the amount was collected of them. Gentlemen bring in here an affidavit of General Sullivan. I have compared that affidavit with the original record in this case, and I state, what any other man will find if he will compare it with the record, that the affidavit is not sustained by the record. It proceeds upon the idea that General Sullivan made the original order for this assessment, and he says he did not intend thus and so, but he did not make the original order.

Now, what is the fact? All that he ever had to do with it, according to the record that comes here from the War Department, was this: After the order had been issued and the assessment had been made General Sullivan made an additional order increasing the amount which certain men were to pay, because enough had not been collected to meet the original assessment, in consequence of some against whom the assessment was made being then off in the rebel army, and, therefore, failing to pay their particular share. Instead of General Sullivan having issued the original order, all he ever did was to interpret it, and to interpret it so as to show it was for the purpose and should have the effect for which it is clear Colonel Haynie had originally issued it, and which clearly justifies the passage of the original bill for the payment of $6,000 to Willis N. Arnold. The only order Sullivan ever issued in the matter contradicts his affidavit.

It has also been argued here as though General Grant had issued this order. All that General Grant ever had to do with it was to simply order that this money should be turned over into the Treasury of the United States. For what? Why and for what purpose did he order this? If you will look to the record you will find that General Grant says it should be turned over to be used for the purpose for which it had been collected. What was that purpose? Colonel Haynie's order was that it should be used to reimburse the Government and to reimburse Willis N. Arnold and other parties for property which had been destroyed by this rebel raid.

Now, if you pass the substitute here proposed, what will be the effect of your action? I beg gentlemen to remember that a large portion of this original sum has already been paid out. To whom? Paid out to parties for whose benefit it was collected. Aldridge and Patterson, parties who stood precisely as Arnold now stands, received $9,600, and the bill authorizing that amount to be paid to them was approved by General Grant. Now, if General Grant did not intend that any of this assessment should be used to reimburse private citizens, why did he as President of the United States approve a bill authorizing the payment of $9,600 to Aldridge and Patterson for that specific purpose?

It seems to me that this whole matter turns upon a legal proposition. When the question was submitted to me for my consideration, both as a member of this House and as a lawyer, I acted upon it according to the facts and my views of the law. Had Colonel Haynie the right to issue that order under the laws of war? I decided that he had. I think every lawyer will so decide. If he had, then the money collected under that assessment is subject to the purpose for which he collected it. One purpose was to pay the $6,000 mentioned in the original bill here to Willis N. Arnold for cotton of his which had been destroyed by the rebels on this raid. It seems to me there is very little ground here for dispute.

I do not get scared about paying rebels in the South. I would rather a few of them should be paid something than to swindle all the loyal people there out of their just dues.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOUK. I hope some gentleman will give me one minute more.

Mr. GEDDES. I have but five minutes of my time remaining.

Mr. ROWELL. I will yield the gentleman one or two minutes more.

Mr. HOUK. One minute will be enough. I did not intend to make a speech, but the matters keep coming to me.

I am not scared about the Treasury being depleted by paying out money where it is right that it should be paid; but I want gentlemen to stop and think what will be the effect of the passage of this proposition to pay back this money to these parties from whom it was originally collected.

I know that the policy of this Government has been against confiscating one dollar's worth of property after the conclusion of peace; but the substitute now brought into this House proposes to reopen this question and pay back this money which was confiscated to the use of the Government during the war. If this proposition be passed it sets a precedent for paying back to the rebels every dollar that was confiscated under one condition of circumstances or another during the whole war. That is what the substitute means. It reopens this whole controversy and proposes to reverse the policy of the Government in regard to the question of confiscation as settled at the close of the war, and now proposes to restore to the enemy that which was taken from them under the rights of war, leaving the friends of the Government the only losers in the hazardous experiment of breaking up the Union.

Mr. GEDDES. It is suggested to me, Mr. Chairman, that general debate may be limited by unanimous consent without the necessity of having the committee rise; and it is also suggested that fifteen minutes additional will be enough, ten minutes in favor of the amendment and five minutes which I desire to occupy myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, that general debate on this bill terminate in fifteen minutes, ten minutes to be occupied in favor of the amendment, and five in opposition to it? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, upon some propositions connected with this bill there is no controversy. It is admitted on all hands that there was collected from citizens in the neighborhood of Henderson, Tenn., more than $20,000 in excess of the losses caused by depredations of the confederate soldiery upon the property of the Government; and the question here is, what shall be done with that surplus? There is not a man on this floor, so far as I have heard, who says it is right for the Government of the United States to retain it. If there is such a one he has not yet opened his mouth. Then the question comes up whether this money shall be paid back to the parties from whom it was taken, or shall be turned over to those who are alleged to have sustained loss by the depredations of the confederates.

The gentleman from Ohio as authority on this question has read from Halleck on the Elements of International Law. I turn two pages beyond where he read, and desire to present to the consideration of the committee some comments there made upon a subject which I think is pertinent to this question. Speaking of the power of the Government to levy contributions, this author says, on page 214:

> It alone (the government) has such claims against the enemy as will authorize the seizure of his property. The military forces who make seizures are merely the instruments of the state, employed for this purpose. They do not act on their individual responsibility or for their individual benefit.

Here I may say that if they could not on their own individual responsibility, or for their own individual benefit, do this, they could not do it for the benefit of another party besides the Government.

> They, therefore, have no other claim to the booty or prizes which they may make than their Government may see fit to allow them.

Now, upon what principle can you enforce the collection of this money and pay it over to any other party than the Government? It is not right, it is not equitable to do so. General Grant says that he never intended it. The officer who issued the order says that he never intended it. The statement of both these officers is corroborated by the fact that the money was not turned over, as it would have been if they had so intended.

Now, what shall we do with this money? Give it back to the parties who paid it. It is not claimed by anybody that they contributed to the destruction on account of which this levy was made. No one has been rash enough to claim this. I say, therefore, there is no justice in making any other disposition of this property than that proposed by the amendment of my colleague.

Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman understand the fact that the Government has already paid over the greater part of this money?

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not.

Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin. Such is the fact.

Mr. McMILLIN. It has paid, it is true, a portion—a small portion; but the largest part of this fund is still in the Treasury. Seventeen thousand dollars in cash is there; and for one—let others do as they may—I will never prostitute the powers of Government for the purpose of robbing one citizen to enrich another. That is the question involved in this case.

Mr. GEDDES. Mr. Chairman, as I view this question the only possible doubt that has been or can be thrown over the early and plainly written history of the case grows out of the late letter—letter in form—verified by General Sullivan. I have already endeavored to show to this House how seriously his memory is at fault in regard to the question whether the money when assessed was sent by him to Saint Louis. I desire now to call the attention of the House to three distinct facts, either of which must satisfy any man on this floor, if he will sit down and examine the matter, that General Sullivan is grossly in error when he says that this original assessment was made as mere security, the purpose being that the money should be refunded and not disbursed. What are these three facts? Now, what are they? I say three. The assessment was for $26,751.36. What sensible man would fix a bond of indemnity in that form? Is not that enough alone? But go one step forward. Look at the form of assessment authorized by the authority at that time, showing the intent of the military—the reassessment, I mean, for there was an assessment which was not sufficient, and a reassessment was ordered.

> The parties who this amount not collected is assessed against are in the rebel army, and have no property at home that can be made pay the amounts they are assessed. To make this amount good on the original assessment I ordered the deficiency to be assessed on those persons who had not been assessed, but who were equally liable as rebel co-operators and sympathizers, which was done, and some $1,500 of it has been collected. Shall I return this amount to the persons from whom it was collected and take up the receipts given, or shall I pay it over to Lieut. Col. M. Smith? The balance not yet collected can be got in a short time, as the persons who were assessed have most all made their arrangements to get the money.

> Capt. F. H. HARRIS, A. A. G.,
> Headquarters District of Jackson.

If they had collected $23,000 as a mere indemnity would they order a reassessment on those at home because some were in the rebel army?

But I must hurry on. I have here the form of the order of the United States to the parties assessed:

SIR: You are hereby notified that pursuant to Special Order No. 15, from district headquarters, Brig. Gen. Jer. C. Sullivan commanding, you have been assessed to pay the sum of —— dollars, the same being your proportion of the damages resulting to the Government of the United States and to the property of loyal citizens by the late rebel raid on Henderson Station. You will pay the amount to Capt. W. J. Stephenson, commanding at Henderson, within ten days from this date, and take duplicate receipts for said money. One you will forward to headquarters, post of Bethel, Tenn., the other you will keep.

By order.

WILLIAM J. STEPHEN,
Captain, Commanding Post, Henderson Station.

——— ———,
Assistant Adjutant.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. You admit that none of the parties who were assessed were in the confederate army?

Mr. GEDDES. I believe the record shows that they were not, except——

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. Then what does the gentleman propose to do in this report with that amount of money assessed for the benefit of a railroad?

Mr. GEDDES. I will leave it where this House left it when it gave Aldridge $9,000. I would leave it where they left this man Arnold's money.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. That is, the Government ought to keep what does not belong to it.

Mr. DIBRELL. They would take this money unjustly assessed against these men and give it to Willis Arnold who, Colonel Hurst says, had no money and was in jail. My friend from Ohio would not have what Colonel Hurst said about this man read. Here it is:

He certainly had no money to pay for cotton or to enter into any other speculation upon. He was esteemed a villain and an outlaw before the war; he was in our county jail for prosecuting false claims against the Government before the war. I think he begged and paid out some two years before the war commenced, and was living on a small and very poor farm in Henderson County, adjoining this.

The question is whether you will take the money out of the Treasury and give it to this kind of a man, who has been denounced as a scoundrel, a villain, and who had been in jail for forgery. You propose to give it to him instead of paying it back to the men from whom it was unjustly taken.

My colleague [Mr. HOUK] made a report against Hiram Johnson and others when he was chairman of the Committee on War Claims, but before it was acted on he had a change of heart, having become penitent, and he wrote the letter I ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. HOUK. Is that in my handwriting?

Mr. DIBRELL. It is.

Mr. HOUK. There has been some forgery of my letters.

Mr. DIBRELL. Let the Clerk read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., March 5, 1883.

DEAR SIR: I authorize you to say to your friends and the parties interested in West Tennessee that I am in no wise responsible for the failure of Congress to take action on the bill for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others at the late session.

It is true I made an adverse report on the bill, but afterward, when additional and explanatory evidence was brought to my knowledge, I told Mr. Atkins that my opposition had ceased. For many days before the adjournment I urged the friends of the bill—those who had championed it from the beginning—to take it up and I would explain my connection with it, and show that new testimony had thrown a different light upon it, and that it should pass.

As it is now presented I see no good reason why the money should remain in the Treasury. On the contrary, it appears to me that it should be returned to those to whom the proof shows it to belong, and at the next session of Congress I shall not hesitate to vote to do justice to these parties. So far as you are concerned, you have all along shown great energy and capacity in the conduct of this, as you always do in the conduct of the claims business both before Congress and the Departments.

Very respectfully,

L. C. HOUK.

Maj. R. M. THOMPSON.

Mr. DIBRELL. Now, the only question is whether you will give the money to Arnold or to Hiram Johnson and the others, as my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] recommended; and I say to this committee to vote the surplus, taking the amount already paid out back to Johnson and others pro rata, is the proper thing to do. That is the only question with which we have to deal. It is the question to be determined by this committee. General Sullivan said that the order was never intended to apply to private individuals. General Grant says the same thing, as the testimony shows. All of the officers connected with the matter said that it was not intended to be applied to private individuals. Then, as a matter of right and justice, these people should be paid the money pro rata that is remaining of this fund. I do not want to detain the committee. I think we have had enough of debate upon this proposition, and I hope now that we can get a vote upon it.

Mr. HOUK. I hope the gentleman will give me a minute.

Mr. DIBRELL. We want to take a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes and a half remain in favor of the amendment.

Mr. HOUK. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment. You would not deny me the right of an explanation of what might seem an inconsistency?

Mr. DIBRELL. You do not deny that that is your signature to that letter.

Mr. HOUK. Of course I do not deny it, but I want to state why that letter came to be written.

Mr. DIBRELL. I have no objection to my colleague having the opportunity.

Mr. HOUK. If the gentleman will read my letter in the light of the facts existing and the surrounding circumstances at the time when it was written, and the trouble I went to in order to get at the bottom facts by comparing the new evidence, so called, with the original record, he will see that I am perfectly consistent in opposing the substitute and urging the original bill.

After the report was made by me as chairman of the Committee on War Claims Mr. Thompson, the attorney of Hiram Johnson, and others came to me at a time when I was very much engaged, and produced some letters from General Sullivan, which on their face seemed to change the aspect of the case. At that time I had not an opportunity of reinvestigating the subject. I did write this letter then at Mr. Thompson's request and under those circumstances, and I am willing now to stand by that letter, or I would have been willing to stand by it, if Sullivan himself was sustained by the record, if his letters, which were shown to me, were sustained by the record. But, when I took Sullivan's letters and affidavit and re-examined the whole question, comparing all of the papers, I found additional testimony and very many reasons which were sufficient to satisfy me that my impression, created by the Sullivan letters, at the time when that letter of mine was written, was erroneous. I found additional reasons why Hiram Johnson and the others should not be paid, and reasons which sustained my original conviction why the Arnold bill should stand upon its own merits, and the Johnson bill be defeated.

Mr. DIBRELL. There is not a single sentence or word in the record showing that Arnold lost one bale of that cotton.

Mr. HOUK. Furthermore, this was a private letter, written at my private office, with no thought that it was to be used for the benefit of these claimants in the prosecution of their claim, and it has been slipped in here by the attorney of these claimants for a false purpose, though I would write it again under the same circumstances. Now, I think I have fully explained the letter, for it only shows that I was willing to do these claimants justice, and vote for their bill if Sullivan's statement was sustained by all the facts and circumstances of the case, when I should have opportunity to re-examine it and compare this new testimony with the original record. I have since carefully compared it, and find that Sullivan is not only not sustained, but contradicted by the record, including his own orders.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If the committee should vote to strike out the enacting clause, would it carry the substitute or amendment with it?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to strike out the enacting clause takes precedence.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. But would it kill the substitute if adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. It would.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Then I make that motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. STORM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STORM. I wish to ask whether a motion to strike out the enacting clause is in order at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. General debate having been concluded, it is in order after reading the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. STORM. In the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. In the committee.

Mr. DIBRELL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The motion, as I understand it, is to strike out the enacting clause of the Willis Arnold bill?

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to strike out the enacting clause takes out both the bill and the substitute.

Mr. HAMMOND. A sort of horizontal lick.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be taken on the motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. HAMMOND. Which enacting clause?

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 71.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause was not agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I now desire, Mr. Chairman, to offer this bill as a substitute for the other. I will state to the committee that the bill I offered——

Mr. ROWELL. Has not the other bill been already offered and is pending as the substitute?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. The bill I offered this morning, I understand, does not relieve the cotton money in the hands of the Government. The bill I now send to the desk as a substitute reimburses the Government entirely. The Government does not lose a penny by this bill.

Mr. HOUK. How about the moneys already paid out—the $9,000 paid to Aldridge and Patterson? I wish to ask, if your substitute shall pass, whether it leaves Government money in the Treasury?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. It does.

Mr. HOUK. Then what becomes of the $9,600 paid to Aldridge and Patterson?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. This bill makes specific provision for the different parties to the extent of $22,271.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute will be first read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the respective sums of money as hereinafter provided, to the respective persons named herein, or to their heirs or legal representatives, namely:

To H. Johnson, $659.86.
To Stephen M. Johnson, $659.86.
To D. J. Franklin, $130.48.
To Josiah Franklin, $156.60.
To Nat Buckley, $261.20.
To John Tull, $313.49.
To Elias Bray, $391.92.
To Dr. G. Johnson, $156.60.
To Harrison Trice, $261.20.
To Jeremiah Crook, sr., $522.41.
To Willis Arnold, $5,213.89.
To Arch McCorkle, $391.92.
To G. L. Ross, $1,306.91.
To S. L. Ross, $1,306.91.
To John M. Hart, $522.41.
To William A. Brummer, $801.69.
To John D. Smith, $261.20.
To A. B. Crook, $261.20.
To Daniel McCollum, $261.20.
To Jeff Jones, $130.48.
To Thomas McGill, $156.61.
To James Ledbetter, $156.61.
To William Ozier, $522.41.
To Elijah Bond, $261.20.
To John L. Cawthon, $522.41.
To William Hall, $522.41.
To Carroll Beaver, $522.41.
To John West, $659.86.
To James Clifford, $261.20.
To O. F. Hendrix, $784.04.
To Frank Cawthon, $313.49.
To James Cawthon, $130.49.
To S. E. Grider, $130.49.
To Silas Grider, $130.49.
To John Robinson, $240.34.
To Hugh McKnight, 200.25.
To John G. Smith, $79.96.
To Caleb McKnight, $200.25.
To James Thomas, $200.25.
To William P. Walker, $120.06.
To A. S. Rogers, $341.55.
To Tison G. Maness, $561.02.
To William H. Bond, $120.06.
To F. M. Ballard, $240.34.
To Stephen Messengill, $120.06.
To William Shrink, $440.82.
To Keton M. Jones, $361.15.
In all, $22,271.26.

SEC. 2. That in the event any of the foregoing parties have died, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the amounts so stated to the legal representatives of said deceased parties.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I desire to make a point of order against the proposed substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It is not in order to offer a bill pending before the House as a substitute for another bill by way of amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that there was an agreement this morning that the two cases, the Arnold and Johnson cases, should be considered together. They stand so related that the one bill may be properly offered as a substitute for the other.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. As I understand, there was a different bill presented as a substitute; this is now still another bill which is presented as a substitute.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] is asking the committee to allow him to substitute this bill for the substitute he offered before.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman from Tennessee withdrew the other bill which was then pending as a substitute and presented this one; and upon it I raised the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana raises the point of order on the bill just read which is offered as a substitute. The original substitute has not been withdrawn. This is offered as a substitute for that substitute. The Chair sustains the point of order under the rule which requires that "no bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House." The question is on the first substitute proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

The question being taken, the chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 62.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. TAYLOR, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. JONES.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 61.

Mr. DUNHAM. I insist on the point that a quorum has not voted.

The tellers resumed the count and reported—ayes 77, noes 66.

Mr. GEDDES. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee finding itself without a quorum, the Chair directs that the roll be called.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following gentlemen failed to answer:

Adams, J. J.	Davis, L. H.	Keifer,	Ray, G. W.
Aiken,	Deuster,	Kelley,	Reagan,
Anderson,	Dockery,	Kellogg,	Riggs,
Atkinson,	Dorsheimer,	Ketcham,	Robertson,
Belford,	Dowd,	Lamb,	Russell,
Belmont,	Dunn,	Le Fevre,	Ryan,
Bennett,	Elliott,	Lewis,	Singleton,
Bingham,	Fiedler,	Libbey,	Smalls,
Bisbee,	Finerty,	Lore,	Snyder,
Blackburn,	Foran,	Lovering,	Spriggs,
Blount,	Gibson,	Lowry,	Stewart, Charles
Bowen,	Goff,	McCoid,	Stewart, J. W.
Boyle,	Graves,	McKinley,	Strait,
Brainerd,	Greenleaf,	Milliken,	Struble,
Breitung,	Hanback,	Mills,	Sumner, D. H.
Brumm,	Hancock,	Money,	Talbott,
Buckner,	Hardy,	Morse,	Taylor, E. B.
Budd,	Harmer,	Moulton,	Thompson,
Burleigh,	Hart,	Muldrow,	Valentine,
Calkins,	Hepburn,	Muller,	Vance,
Campbell, Felix	Hewitt, A. S.	Murphy,	Wadsworth,
Campbell, J. M.	Hill,	Neece,	Wakefield,
Cannon,	Hiscock,	Nelson,	Warner, A. J.
Clardy,	Hoblitzell,	Nutting,	Washburn,
Clay,	Holmes,	Oates,	Wemple,
Collins,	Holton,	O'Ferrall,	Wilkins,
Connolly,	Hooper,	O'Hara,	Wilson, W. L.
Converse,	Howey,	O'Neill, Charles	Winans, John
Cook,	Hurd,	Paige,	Wise, J. S.
Covington,	Hutchins,	Payson,	Wood,
Culberson, D. B.	Jones, J. H.	Pettibone,	Worthington,
Curtin,	Jones, J. K.	Phelps,	Young.
Davidson,	Kasson,	Potter,
Davis, G. R.	Kean,	Randall,

The committee thereupon rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX, of New York, reported that the Committee of the Whole House, while engaged in the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, found itself without a quorum, whereupon he caused the roll to be called and he now reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the names of the absentees.

The list of absentees was read.

Mr. LOWRY. I desire my name to be taken off the list of absentees.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present in the committee when the roll was called?

Mr. LOWRY. I was in the Committee on Elections.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I desire my name to be taken off for the same reason.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen can not be recorded now as present. The list which has been read is the list of gentlemen absent from the call of the roll in the Committee of the Whole House. From the roll-call it appears one hundred and thirty-five members were absent and one hundred and eighty-nine were present. More than a quorum being present, the committee will resume its sitting under the rule of the House.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum having appeared, the tellers, the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. JONES, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. TAYLOR, will resume their places.

The tellers resumed the count, and reported—ayes 89, noes 79.

So the substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended by the adoption of the substitute was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HIRAM JOHNSON.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the next bill on the Calendar, which was reported by the Committee on War Claims with an adverse recommendation, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1477) to pay Hiram Johnson and other persons herein named the several sums of money herein specified, being the surplus of a military assessment paid by them and accounted for to the United States in excess of the amount required for the indemnity for which it was levied and collected.

Mr. HOUK. I understand that that bill has already been adopted as a substitute for the Arnold bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think that bill should be allowed to stand on the Calendar where it is till the next meeting of the committee. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to, there being—ayes 119, noes 8.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed

the chair, Mr. COX, of New York, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3937) for the relief of Willis N. Arnold, and had directed him to report the same back to the House for favorable consideration with an amendment.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOLLETT, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back without amendment the bill (H. R. 6656) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I desire to state that during the session of to-day the members of the Committee of Elections have been absent by leave of the House, engaged on business of the House.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. SPRINGER. The House can meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow and continue in session until fifteen minutes before 1.

Mr. HAMMOND. We will do little or nothing to-morrow, on account of the ceremonies which are to take place at the unveiling of the statue of Chief-Justice Marshall.

Mr. SPRINGER. That will give us nearly two hours here.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. HAMMOND; and upon a division there were—ayes 112, noes 30.

Mr. LOWRY. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were 5 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. LOWRY. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is not the point made too late?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not; the Chair had not announced the result of the vote.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HAMMOND and Mr. LOWRY were appointed.

Mr. LOWRY (one of the tellers). In view of what seems to be the general desire of members present, that the House shall adjourn over to-morrow, I will withdraw the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is withdrawn. On the question of adjourning over till Monday next, the ayes are 112, the noes are 30.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the liberty of stating to the House that a resolution was passed two or three days ago providing that the House of Representatives take part as a body in the ceremonies attending the unveiling of the statue of Chief-Justice Marshall at 1 o'clock to-morrow. The Chair will request members of the House to meet in this Hall at 15 minutes before 1 o'clock to-morrow for that purpose.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 231) providing for the distribution of the Congressional Globe; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 239) to fill vacancies existing in the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. YAPLE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2093) to provide for the appointment of an acting Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution; and Joint resolution (S. R. 81) filling an existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

RELIEF OF SUFFERERS BY FLOODS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, with inclosures, recommending an additional appropriation of $100,000 for the relief of the sufferers by the floods in the Lower Mississippi Valley; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GOFF, for four days from May 10.

To Mr. JAMES, for six days from May 9.

To Mr. DORSHEIMER, until Friday next, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOUSEMAN, for ten days from and including Monday next.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of reports heretofore made from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The bill coming over from Friday last as unfinished business was the bill (H. R. 3935) to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] to commit this bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 48, noes 65.

Mr. CRISP. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. MATSON. I ask my colleague to withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If the Speaker will allow me to amend by substituting a motion to take a recess——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to change his motion.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House that the hour of meeting this evening be changed to 8 o'clock.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] moves that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, the session of this evening to be for the consideration, under the previous order of the House, of business reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WELLER. Must not the other matter be first disposed of?

The SPEAKER. What matter?

Mr. WELLER. The matter of adjournment.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn has been withdrawn, and the question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] will preside as Speaker pro tempore during the session this evening.

The result of the vote on the motion of Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, was then announced; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order of the House under which the session of this evening is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

That until the further order of this House, on each Friday the House will take a recess at 5 o'clock until 7.30 p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall be considered.

Mr. MATSON moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House the committee resumes the consideration of pension cases on the Private Calendar.

W. J. LEE.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill first under consideration is the bill (H. R. 1073) granting a pension to William J. Lee.

Mr. MATSON. I ask by unanimous consent that that bill be passed over and the committee proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4825) for the relief of Rosina Heineman.

Mr. BAGLEY. When the Lee bill was up before it was objected to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], and he has authorized me to say he will withdraw his objection. He is now present.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask that case be passed over. This man Lee was not enlisted, and it has been the custom to pass over all such cases.

Mr. BAGLEY. Two or three weeks ago this bill was laid over. Since then two or three scout bills have been passed. In view of that fact I hope this bill will be considered in its regular course. Discussion has been had on it. I do not wish to consume time, however.

Mr. PETERS. I hope there will be no objection to going on with the Lee bill. It is a meritorious case.

Mr. MORRILL. Was this man wounded?

Mr. BAGLEY. He was not, but he was disabled by disease contracted in the service, from which he will probably never recover. When the bill was being discussed, letters were read from General

Grant and General Sharpe and other officers recommending this as a meritorious case.

Mr. PETERS. I believe it was shown this man was thrown from his horse and injured his back.

Mr. BAGLEY. That was not this case.

Mr. McMILLIN. The reason I have opposed this class of cases is this: It is impossible to trace the service of a man of this kind like one whom the Government has the right to command at all times. It has not been the policy of the Government to pension those who never enlisted in its service. This man had the right to make himself the servant of the Government and thereby get all the benefits accruing therefrom. He had the right to serve in the regular way, but he took the consequences of irregular service. I hope the gentleman will not insist on going on with that bill.

Mr. BAGLEY. I do not wish to consume time and will not insist on going on with it, as there is objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection and the bill is passed over.

ROSINA HEINEMAN.

Mr. MATSON. I move to take up the bill (H. R. 4825) for the relief of Rosina Heineman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rosina Heineman, mother of William Heineman, deceased, formerly a member of Company I, Second Regiment New York Mounted Rifles.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. BAGLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following report:

It is evident from the papers in this case that Wilhelm Heineman was mustered into the service of the United States as a private in Company E, Second New York Mounted Rifle Volunteers, on the 29th day of January, 1864.

It is also shown in an affidavit made by George F. Kohl, of Whitefield, N. Y., and Christine Weiser, of Buffalo, N. Y., that in February, 1865, one Conrad Schmidt (now dead), who was a member of Heineman's company, came home on furlough and met affiants at Tonawanda, N. Y., and told them that as he went through the general hospital at City Point, in ward 12 he was hailed by the soldier, who was there sick with typhoid fever. Soldier requested Schmidt to tell his parents of his situation. Witnesses state that they took the message to soldier's parents, who then went and saw Schmidt. Schmidt was a man of veracity.

The petitioner, the mother of Heineman, makes a statement similar to the above, and also says that she had a letter from her son dated June 7, 1864, at which date he was well. She did not hear from him again till she saw Schmidt, February 17, 1865. Then she sent a letter by Schmidt to the soldier, but when Schmidt came home from discharge he told her the sick were removed from City Point, Va., during his furlough and he did not see him after; that her son has not since been heard from, and that she can furnish no more direct proof of his death. He left no widow or child.

Claimant's husband died September 28, 1872. She was greatly dependent upon her son for support. She has no means, except ten acres of land at Johannesburg, N. Y., worth $300, and which her son bought for her, for a home. He sent her money while in the Army—at one time $50.

The claimant made application for a mother's pension, but it was rejected because of her inability to furnish proof of her son's death.

This is one of those inexplicable and mysterious disappearances so numerous in the history of the late war, and can only be accounted for by the fact that many of the sick and wounded while in transit from one hospital to another died and were buried without any record being kept of such death. This, it is fair to assume, was the case with Heineman. He was probably hastily buried, and this is the only way to account for the deficiency in the war records as to his death. This man was a dutiful and loving son, contributing to the support of his mother, and it is a far-fetched presumption to say that he is probably yet alive. The petitioner is now 64 years old, and is in very indigent circumstances. She is a subject for sympathy—almost an object of pity.

In view of all the facts presented, the committee think she should have a pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH MANZ.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4974) for the relief of Sarah Manz.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah Manz, mother of Christian G. Manz, deceased, formerly a member of Company H, Sixty-seventh Regiment New York State Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. BAGLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following report:

Christian G. Manz, son of the petitioner, enlisted as a private in Company H, Sixty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteers, under the name of John Stephens, but the records establish his identity, and his death is proved as occurring at Fortress Monroe from wounds received at the battle of Fair Oaks, May 31, 1862, and that "he is buried at Cypress Hill Cemetery, New York."

The husband of the petitioner is still living, but is so disabled with rheumatism that for many years he has been unable to support his family.

The Pension Office rejected the claim on the ground that at the time of soldier's death he did not contribute to the support of the family. It is shown, however, by the mother's affidavit that the son's earnings were used for said support, and that while in the Army he sent her sums varying from $5 to $25.

The mother is now living on a place of about ten acres, which is assessed at $250, and the cash value is not over $465. The income has not been since 1861 over $60. The place is now mortgaged at $200.

The petitioner claims now to be in indigent circumstances and barely getting a living.

A. S. Coleman, special examiner, who was detailed to look into the case, in his report says:

All concur in one thing, that they have always been very poor and barely lived. Most every one says they do not see how they have lived; also, that the husband has been lame with rheumatism ever since the war broke out, and before, as near as they can remember. Their house shows now extreme poverty, barely furniture enough, and very poor at that, and the very poorest kind of clothes.

Your committee are of the opinion that this mother lost her principal support when her son was killed in the service; that she is very poor, and is entitled to a pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill accompanying.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. JANE YOUNG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2432) for the relief of Mrs. Jane Young.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Jane Young, mother of Henry Young, alias Frank Lowe, late a member of Company G, Sixteenth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. BAGLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following report:

The records of the Adjutant-General's Office show that Henry Young, alias Frank Lowe, was mustered into the service as a private on the 17th day of August, 1863, to serve three years or during the war, in Company G, Sixteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers; that he was captured at Bristow Station, Va., October 14, 1863; confined in Richmond, Va., October 23, 1863; sent to Andersonville, Ga., March 18, 1864; admitted to hospital there August 6, 1864, where he died August 29, 1864, of scorbutis.

The reasons for Henry Young assuming another name, that of Frank Lowe, is given in a statement made November 5, 1878, by Mrs. Young, and is as follows:

"To explain the reason my son Henry Young assumed the name of Frank Lowe, I heard him say he would like to be a soldier in this war. I told him if ever he enlisted I would follow him wherever he would go. He says, 'If I take another name you could not find me;' and I would have followed him if I had to lose my life; he knew I would if it was possible. I told him many a time what I suffered during the revolution in France in 1848. I left France January 8, 1861, and arrived in New York January 24, 1861, on board the steamship Rego, Captain Lyons. My husband was on the Fulton, running to Port Royal, when he got cold and sickness, and my son Henry went several times on the steamer with his father. He left the steamer and volunteered and parted from me and assumed another name to deceive me. My husband lost his health in the war and likewise I lost my son, and I am left a broken-hearted widow and mother; and what he earned he gave to me."

In an affidavit Mrs. Young says that she found out by a man named Morris of her son's taking the name of Frank Lowe, who sent by Morris letters to her, addressing her as his mother.

The mother filed her application for a pension February 12, 1878, and it was rejected in the following language:

"The assumption by soldier of the name Frank Lowe is explained by claimant in affidavit. From the evidence filed it appears the claimant's husband had no appreciable disability at the time of the soldier's death in 1864, as he was then, and had been from 1863, and continued until the summer of 1865, employed as water-tender on the United States steamer Fulton. The claim is therefore rejected on the ground that at the time of the soldier's death the claimant's husband was physically able to and did support her."

Claimant's husband died in 1874, of Bright's disease of kidneys. Several affidavits are produced showing that he was seriously disabled by rheumatism, so that he worked only a part of the time, and that he did not earn sufficient for the support of the family.

The claimant testifies that her son for four or five years prior to enlistment contributed about $5 per week toward her support, and this fact is corroborated by D. Roberts and Francis Savage in affidavits made by them, who know positively of said contributions being made. One of the soldier's letters refers to money sent to his mother.

The widow is now said to be in needy circumstances. She swears that she is in want of the common necessaries of life. The committee are satisfied that this claimant's son died at the prison in Andersonville, Ga., as alleged, and that he contributed largely to her support before enlistment, and that were he now living he would or could so contribute. They believe her to be entitled to a pension for his loss, and therefore recommend the passage of bill H. R. 2432, which places her on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. This report does not show whether this sergeant left a widow.

Mr. BAGLEY. That is an omission, but he was young when he enlisted, and did not leave a widow.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PHILLIP WIGGINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5374) granting a pension to Phillip Wiggins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Phillip Wiggins, late a private in Company F, Thirty-fifth United States Colored Troops, and wounded at the battle of Olustee, on the 20th day of February, 1864, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. J. S. WISE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following report:

This applicant was undoubtedly enlisted, was wounded at Olustee, Fla., in an engagement, and honorably discharged. Some technical difficulties arose in his case owing to the fact that he did not go to the post hospital, and that the surgeon who attended him can not now be found. But that he was wounded, and is still incapacitated for arduous labor, is positively stated by Representative O'HARA, who is personally cognizant of the facts, and we recommend the passage of the bill, amending it by striking out the amount. The wound was a gun-shot wound in the hip.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out these words:

And pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. KATHARINA T. WUNSH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 583) granting a pension to Mrs. Katharina T. Wunsh.

The bill was read.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following report:

We find that Katharina T. Wunsh is the widow of Frank Wunsh, who was a private in Company D, One hundred and twenty-sixth Indiana Volunteers, and who enlisted December 20, 1863, and was discharged September 19, 1865. Wunsh filed a claim for pension May 7, 1880, and a week later died. His widow then filed an application for pension, which was rejected on the ground that his death was not the immediate result of the injury received in battle.

The soldier was wounded at the battle of Franklin, Tenn., November, 1864, by a shell from the rebel artillery fracturing two or three of his ribs, on account of which he was sent to hospital at Nashville, Tenn., but no record of the treatment can be found. Dr. B. F. Swafford, a member of the medical staff of said regiment, says he treated a man of said command for such an injury of the ribs, but does not know the man's name. The first lieutenant and orderly sergeant of the company testify to the wounds received by the soldier in battle.

The proof is full and conclusive that when he returned to his home at Terre Haute, Ind., he was disabled, and was never able to perform manual labor during his residence in that city, which he left in 1869.

Three citizens of Atchison, Kans., state under oath that they were well acquainted with the soldier from the time he came to Atchison, in 1869, to the time of his death in 1880, and that he was an invalid all the time, and was unable to perform any kind of manual labor. Dr. James M. Lindley, who attended him in his last illness, testifies that he was suffering from malignant disease of the esophagus, near the stomach, from which he died May 15, 1880, and that he is convinced that his fatal disease was the result of the injury received in battle. Dr. Bryning also treated claimant in his last illness, and testifies to the same facts.

The presumption is strong that the soldier's death was hastened and probably caused by the injuries received in battle. His wife and child are in indigent circumstances.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment striking out all after the word "month," in the eighth line.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask by unanimous consent to report that back with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table and the Senate bill (S. 316) be taken up instead of it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the House bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it lie on the table, and Senate bill No. 316 will be laid aside with a recommendation that it pass. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate bill is as follows:

A bill granting a pension to Mrs. Katharina T. Wunsh.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mrs. Katharina T. Wunsh, widow of Frank Wunsh, late a private in Company D, One hundred and twenty-sixth Regiment (Eleventh Cavalry) Indiana Volunteers, on the pension-roll, at the rate of $8 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

JOSEPH M'INTOSH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2085) granting a pension to Joseph McIntosh.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph McIntosh, late of the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers (claim in Pension Office numbered 1345).

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred bill H. R. 2085, having considered the same, beg leave to report:

That Joseph McIntosh was mustered into the service of the United States on the 5th day of October, 1861, as a private in Company F, Thirty-ninth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, and discharged for disability May 17, 1862.

We find that at the time of his enlistment he was 45 years old; and we find from the testimony of his captain, first lieutenant, and other witnesses that at such time he was a strong, healthy, vigorous man, with good eyes and sound body.

Upon the 17th day of May, 1862, he was discharged upon this certificate of disability, made by the surgeon of his regiment, who was then in charge of general hospital at Strasburg, Va.:

"I certify that I have carefully examined the said Joseph McIntosh, of Captain Kennicott's company, and find him incapable of performing the duties of a soldier, because of general debility, resulting from old age and exposure during the past winter. Said McIntosh is now so feeble that he is totally unfit for any service whatever."

We find that almost immediately after reaching home Mr. McIntosh made an application to the Government for a pension, alleging as reason therefor disease of the lungs and malignant sore eyes, and in support of his application, with other evidence, he filed January, 1863, the testimony of an examining surgeon, who certifies that he finds the applicant totally "incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor," and he says he thinks, from the condition of the claimant and from other evidence, "that the said disability occurred in the service aforesaid in the line of duty," and he says the "disease, inflammation of both eyes, with granulations; eyes very red and painful at this time; can see but little; is compelled to keep indoors; has not done an hour's work since his discharge; ought to be relieved within a year from his discharge."

The testimony further shows that from such time to the present his eyes have grown worse instead of better, and in March, 1883, the board of examining surgeons at Topeka, Kans., certifies that the pupil of claimant's "left eye is contracted and does not respond to changes of light; there is also opacity of cornea with cicatrix, result of ulceration; right eye has a conical cornea with slight opacity; vision of left eye entirely destroyed; right eye can see No. 32 test-type. No physical or objective signs of disease of lungs;" and they rate him, upon their examination, as follows:

"Rated on total blindness, left eye, one half; rated on partial blindness, right eye, three-eighths; rated on disease of lungs, nothing." And they conclude by saying that "from the condition and history of claimant, it is our opinion the disability was incurred in the service, as claimed, and that it is not aggravated or protracted by vicious habits. We find the disability as above described to entitle him to seven-eighths' rating."

The testimony also shows that about the 1st of April, 1862, the claimant was taken sick with pneumonia, and about the 15th of the same month, becoming convalescent, he went on duty in the general hospital at Mount Jackson, Va. That during the retreat of General Banks he assisted in caring for the sick and wounded, and from almost constant labor and exposure brought on a relapse about the last of April, 1862, and with the relapse came inflammation of the eyes—first commencing in the right eye and then extending to both; and growing worse, they assumed a granulated chronic form, rendering him nearly blind, when on the 17th day of May he was discharged, as heretofore shown. The evidence is very clear that, from almost the day of his discharge to the present, he has suffered greatly with his eyes, and has been almost totally incapacitated from work; that they have baffled the skill of physicians, and now in his old age he is in penury and want, and almost totally blind. The testimony shows the claimant to be an honest, temperate, reliable man, but from some cause the examining officer of the Pension Office thought the testimony did not clearly show the disease of the eyes to have been contracted in the service, and finally rejected his claim in 1883.

We think the claim a meritorious one, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. As I understand, this is simply an appeal from the Pension Bureau. The claim seems to have been rejected there, not on account of any technicality, but upon the ground that the evidence did not satisfy the bureau that the disease of the eye was contracted in the service. As I understand, however, the committee believe the testimony strong enough to show that fact, and therefore report the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

WILLIAM B. KEITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3892) granting a pension to William B. Keith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Intertor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name William B. Keith, late second lieutenant of Company E, Tenth Regiment of Kansas Volunteer Infantry, said pension to commence from the date when his name was dropped from said roll.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3892) granting a pension to William B. Keith, submit the following report:

The claimant enlisted as a second lieutenant in Company E, Tenth Kansas Volunteers, August 19, 1861, and was honorably mustered out August 18, 1864. On the 23d of December, 1872, he filed his application for a pension, alleging disability "from bloody piles, the result of diarrhea contracted in camp in Benton County, Arkansas, October, 1862, after a severe engagement at the battle of Fort Wayne; the diarrhea continuing about two months."

On the 23d day of December, 1873, pension was allowed by the Department, but a few months later it was suspended, one Ellis claiming that it was improperly granted, and an investigation by a special examiner was ordered. The evidence shows clearly that a very bitter feeling existed between claimant and certain parties on account of the active part claimant had taken in political contests.

The special examiner seems to have fallen into the hands of these parties and to have made the mistake of supposing that he was sent for the special purpose of preventing claimant from receiving a pension instead of that of making a full and thorough investigation of the case, and of ascertaining the exact truth in the matter. The substance of the evidence adverse to claimant seems to be that certain parties had heard claimant complain of piles before entering the service. Not one of the witnesses claimed to know anything further than that claimant had stated at certain times that he was suffering from the piles. On the other hand, a large number of witnesses who were intimate with claimant testify that he was a strong, hearty man, able to do hard labor, and that they never heard him intimate that he was thus afflicted. Dr. Holaday testifies—

"That he was claimant's family physician for years before he enlisted, and knows of his own personal and professional knowledge that when he enlisted he was a sound, healthy man."

Capt. J. F. Broadhead, commanding Company E, says:

"He knows of his own personal knowledge that claimant while in the line of duty, October, 1862, in Benton County, Arkansas, in consequence of a forty-eight hours' forced march and an engagement with the enemy at Fort Wayne, was taken with diarrhea, from which he suffered for about two months, and which brought on piles."

P. Gould Parker, regimental surgeon of Tenth Kansas Volunteers, testifies—

"That he knows of his own personal knowledge that claimant, while in the line of duty, October 22, 1862, in Benton County, Arkansas, had been subjected to a forced march of two days and nights, which was followed by the battle of Fort Wayne, when claimant was taken with diarrhea, which continued upon him for about two months and resulted in piles, for which affiant repeatedly prescribed while he continued in the service."

Dr. M. F. Holaday, who had been claimant's family physician before he entered the service, testifies that—

"He saw claimant soon after his discharge, in August, 1864, and he was then afflicted with the piles, for which affiant prescribed for him then and has done so repeatedly since; that he has continued to be afflicted with said disease from his discharge to the present time, December 23, 1872, and that he has not aggravated or prolonged said disease by intemperate or other bad habits."

Some of his comrades testify to the same facts. There is no question but what the attempt to deprive him of his pension grew out of political differences, which finally degenerated into bitter personal feuds. But admitting without question all of the evidence tending to show that claimant had been at times afflicted with piles prior to enlistment, we can not see that it affects this case. The evidence is conclusive that he was sound when he enlisted; that the disease did not exist at that time. That the disease for which he now claims pension did originate in the service, and has since continued, is fully and clearly shown. There is, however, very strong evidence to show that the testimony in relation to prior disability is wholly false and malicious.

Your committee, after a very careful examination of the evidence, which is very voluminous, conclude that claimant was unjustly deprived of his pension, and therefore recommend that the title of the bill be amended to read: "A bill to restore to the pension-roll the name of William B. Keith," and that the bill be passed.

The following amendment, reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read and agreed to:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to restore to the pension-roll the name of William B. Keith."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN A. SHUCKERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2105) granting a pension to John A. Shuckers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, instructed and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John A. Shuckers, late a private in Company B, First Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2105) granting a pension to John A. Shuckers, submit the following report:

Claimant enlisted September 5, 1861, in Company B, First Ohio Light Artillery, and was discharged July 22, 1865.

October 24, 1878, he made application for a pension, which was rejected February 21, 1881, on the ground that there is no record of the alleged disease of lungs. Claimant avers that he was taken sick at Bridgeport, Ala., about July 1, 1865, with intermittent fever and cold, which settled upon his lungs, and that his lungs continued weak and sore until they became diseased with consumption, which still continues. The Adjutant-General says:

"The company morning report book, July 13, 1865, reports him absent, sick at post hospital, and does not show his return to the company."

John M. Long and G. W. Powers testify that—

"They knew him before enlistment, and that he was a sound, able-bodied man, and that they never heard of his being troubled with any disease of the lungs previous to enlistment."

The record shows that he was about 20 years old when he enlisted. They also testify—

"That they saw him in July, 1865, immediately after his discharge, and found him much debilitated from the diseased state of his lungs, and saw him often, as neighbors, from that date till 1871, when he removed to Kansas, and that during all that time he was wholly unable to gain a support by manual labor for himself and family, and that he had a constant cough, and was confined to his room much of the time."

Claimant avers that from 1865 to 1866 he was treated by Dr. R. S. Clark, of Cleveland, Ohio, who has since deceased. Other witnesses testify as to his condition till 1879; that he was in a feeble condition, only able to do light work, and that he was afflicted with a cough, which was aggravated by laborious exertion. During this time he was treated by several physicians. In January, 1879, he was examined by Dr. John Logan, United States examining surgeon at Carlinville, Macoupin County, Ill., who certifies:

"I find him totally incapacitated from obtaining subsistence by manual labor, from disease of lungs. The disease is permanent. One-half of left lung is hepatized. There is a dull, solid sound on pressure, and no respiratory murmur given through the stethoscope."

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES CLARK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4694) granting a pension to James Clark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Clark, late of Company A, Seventh Kansas Regiment.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4694) granting a pension to James Clark, would submit the following report:

We find that this soldier enlisted in Company A, Seventh Kansas Cavalry, August 31, 1861, and was discharged September 29, 1865, after four years and one month of service, during all of which time he had an excellent record. He made application for a pension, alleging rheumatism and piles contracted at Corinth, Miss., in 1863, which was rejected on account of there being no record of medical treatment and inability to furnish any. Claimant swears that he was treated by Assistant Surgeon J. S. Martin, and that he sent to said Martin's post-office, as given by the Pension Department, a blank and $1 to pay expenses; that he received no reply, and the letter was not returned.

Capt. B. C. Landers, commanding Company A, testifies:

"That at Corinth, Miss., on or about —— day of May, 1863, James Clark, of said company and regiment, was taken with rheumatism in both legs from hips down, and in November following was taken with piles, all of which was caused by exposure while in line of duty."

He further says he knows this because he was personally present. Two of his comrades testify that they were present with him at Corinth, and know that he was taken down with rheumatism and piles, and that he then received medical treatment, this being at the time above named. Testimony of neighbors is conclusive that he has been able to do but little labor since.

September 27, 1881, he was examined by Dr. W. W. Shaw, United States medical examiner, who reports:

"Around the patella the tissues seem to have shrunk away, and there are constrictures and depressions; above the right patella there is a roll of muscle and integument across the thigh. The symmetry of the knees is lost and the veins of the leg are enlarged."

Also reports piles, and adds disability probably of life duration. Dr. Charles F. Stewart, United States medical examiner, says, May 7, 1883:

"I find him suffering with hemorrhoids of an aggravated form; tumors quite large, of a dusky and livid color; I think $14 would be a fair rating."

The witnesses in this case are men of good character and high standing. The evidence seems to be full and complete, except that he has no hospital record. It seems a great hardship that this soldier, after his long service of over four years, should be deprived of the arrears which his more fortunate comrades obtained simply because he could not get the evidence of the assistant surgeon.

Your committee would recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARIA C. M'PHERSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5336) granting a pension to Maria C. McPherson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria C. McPherson, widow of Daniel McPherson, late a private in Company C, Twenty-fourth Michigan Infantry, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5336) granting a pension to Maria C. McPherson, widow of Daniel McPherson, late a private in Company C, Twenty-fourth Michigan Infantry, report:

That Daniel McPherson, husband of said Maria C. McPherson, enlisted August 9, 1862, at Plymouth, Mich., under Captain Crosby; served faithfully with his regiment, Twenty-fourth Michigan Infantry, two years, and was discharged for disability. During his service he was three times wounded, namely: at Gettysburg, in the hand and shoulder, whereby he lost the forefinger of his right hand, and injuring the second finger; and at the second battle of Bull Run in the left hand, losing the second finger, and was thereafter discharged.

He died April 16, 1880, having never applied for a pension, and his widow is not able to prove by medical testimony that the disease of which her husband died, to wit, rheumatism and lung disease, was the result of his military service, owing to the fact that the physicians who treated him after his discharge, to wit, Drs. Brown and Mowry, of Milford, Mich., are both dead. She, therefore, can not receive a pension under the pension laws.

The testimony submitted amply establishes the fact that prior and at the time of enlistment he was a sound, healthy man, and that after his discharge, till his death, he was never strong, but subject to frequent severe illness, rheumatism, kidney and lung disease. This is proven by the several affidavits of J. C. Leonard, A. J. Armstrong, Thomas Curdy, and N. B. Armstrong, and John H. Predmore and seven other witnesses, whose character as credible, reliable men is certified to by the supervisor and justice of the peace of the township in which they reside; and it is further set forth that said soldier was a proud man, and refused to apply for a pension for his disabilities, on the ground that he would not accept a pittance for serving his country.

The widow is poor. The small farm left her is mortgaged to its full value, and is being sold on foreclosure. She has striven these four years to keep her children (seven in number) around her, and raise them to be reputable citizens, hoping to save for them a home.

Your committee think, from the evidence, the soldier was clearly entitled to have received a pension on application therefor, and his failure to do so should not deprive the widow of what she is in need, and in equity entitled to receive. We therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARGARET DAILY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5735) granting a pension to Margaret Daily.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret Daily, widow of Thomas H. Daily, late captain of Company D, Twenty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5735) granting a pension to Margaret Daily, having considered the evidence, beg leave to report:

That Margaret Daily is the widow of Thomas H. Daily, who enlisted as a private in Company D, Twenty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, on the 6th day of July, 1861, and served through all the intermediate grades to that of captain of said company, which position he held at the time of his honorable discharge from the military service of the United States, September 14, 1864.

On the 3d day of September, 1881, the claimant filed her application for a pension, on the ground that the said Thomas H. Daily, while in the military service of the United States and in the line of his duty, contracted hemorrhoids, superinducing fistula in ano, resulting in his death, which occurred on the 3d day of May, 1881. This claim was rejected June 29, 1882, on the ground that the disease of which the soldier died was not contracted in the military service of the United States.

The records of the Adjutant-General's Office show that Thomas H. Daily was mustered into the military service of the United States as second lieutenant Company D, Twenty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteers, June 30, 1862; July and August he is reported present, and so borne to October 31, 1863; November 25, 1862, mustered as first lieutenant; February 28, 1863, as captain; December 31, 1862, detailed on General Jeff. C. Davis's staff, and so borne to April 30, 1863; May and June, 1863, present for duty; July and August, 1863, not on file; September and October, 1863, on detached service on General Davis's staff since July 2, 1863, and so borne to August 31, 1864.

General Jeff. C. Davis, commanding first division, Twentieth Army Corps, in accepting the resignation of Captain Daily, August 1, 1864, says:

"This officer has won his promotion from the ranks, and has often distinguished himself in battle. He has served on my staff at different times with credit to himself. He seems now to have thoroughly made up his mind to resign from the service, and urges his resignation. His health has not been very good since the battle of Stone River."

Anthony R. Ravencraft, captain Company I, Twenty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteers, says—

"That Capt. Thomas H. Daily, by exposure and fatigue at the battle of Chicamauga, brought on piles; visited him at General J. C. Davis's headquarters soon after the battle, and found him very much prostrated from the effects thereof. Captain Daily was then on General Davis's staff; met him frequently afterward; he had not recovered, and frequently complained of fistula."

Alex. M. Rutherford, private Company D, Twenty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteers, corroborates the statement of Captain Ravencraft, and adds:

"That said affection continued until said soldier was mustered out; subsequently resulting in fistula, from which he suffered until his death, May 3, 1881."

Dr. Samuel M. Work, of Hot Springs, Ark., says:

"Capt. Thomas H. Daily came under his professional treatment in December, 1864; had a severe case of hemorrhoids, both internal and external, which continued until January, 1877; thinks fistula developed about 1867; that he never recovered from fistula in ano."

Dr. William F. Work, of Jeffersonville, Ind., treated Captain Daily for said affections from April, 1877, to 1879.

Dr. James E. Oldham, of Charleston, Ind., was Captain Daily's family physician from January, 1879, to the time of his death, May 3, 1881. He says:

"That in January, 1879, soldier applied to him to treat him for hemorrhoids and fistula in ano, but his general health was so bad that he did not deem it advisable to recommend any but palliatives and tonics for his general condition; that about November 25, 1879, there were well defined evidences of cerebro-spinal softening, which continued until and was the immediate cause of his death; that it is his (affiant's) opinion that hemorrhoids and fistula in ano, by their depreciating effects upon the vital force, acted as prime causes in the production of the cerebro-spinal troubles of which he died."

Your committee find, from the evidence as given above, that the disease contracted by this soldier in the distinguished military service rendered resulted in his death, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM R. BROWNE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1751) for the relief of William R. Browne.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That an act to amend an act approved February 7, 1879, granting a pension to William R. Browne at the rate of $22.50 per month, be amended so as to grant him a pension of $30 per month; that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of William R. Browne, late a volunteer lieutenant commanding in the United States Navy, and grant him a pension of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension of $22.50 per month now allowed him, said increased pension to begin on the date of the approval of this act.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1751) granting an increase of pension to William R. Browne, having considered the same, beg leave to report:

That the bill in this case increases the pension of $22.50 per month, now being paid William R. Browne in pursuance of an act of Congress approved February 7, 1879, to $30 per month.

It is shown by the records of the Navy Department that William R. Browne was appointed acting master in the Navy May 13, 1861, on board the Water Witch, and on the 6th of November, 1862, he was placed in command of the Restless. He was promoted to the position of acting volunteer lieutenant February 6, 1864, and assigned to the command of the Pursuit, and was honorably discharged September 16, 1865.

While in active duty in the naval service of the United States, and in command of the ship Restless, in December, 1863, he contracted hemorrhoids, as is shown by the testimony of George W. Fletcher, who testifies that he was steward of the Restless while commanded by William R. Browne, and that the said Browne was a sound man at the commencement of said service on board the said ship, and so continued until the destruction of Saint Andrew's, Fla., at which time Browne complained of being sick, and he continued to suffer from hemorrhoids until the witness left the ship. Witness shows Browne's habits to have been temperate.

Merritt A. Baker testifies to his acquaintance with Browne since 1855, and that he was ship's nurse from March 18, 1863, to May 26, 1864, on the Restless. In the latter part of December, 1863, and after the town of Saint Andrew's, Fla., had been destroyed, he heard of Browne's illness and the officer speak of his disease.

William B. Browne, a son of William R. Browne, occupied the same house with his father while on shore, and never knew or heard he was troubled with piles until his return from service in the Navy, and then heard him frequently complain of severe pain, and knows that he continued so to suffer from said disease. This statement is fully corroborated by Leda G. Browne, wife of William R. Browne, and by Mary E. Galibrat, his daughter.

The sound bodily health and freedom from disease of William R. Browne prior to the time of his entering the naval service of the United States are fully shown by a verified copy of a medical examination for a policy in the Connecticut Life Insurance Company, October 31, 1859.

At the close of his active service as a volunteer officer William R. Browne applied for admission in the regular Navy. The board of examination of volunteer officers for such admission, in their published proceedings, say, under date of January 14, 1867:

"Late Acting Volunteer Lieutenant William R. Browne reported, but was found not physically qualified to perform the duties of an officer, being affected with hemorrhoids; he was, therefore, discharged."

The Pension Office board of examining surgeons, to whom William R. Browne's case was referred by that office in his application for pension by reason of his disability, on the 20th of April, 1876, reported, "hemorrhoids and total disability," fixing the rate of pension at $30 per month. But the claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground of failure to furnish the evidence of a naval surgeon, showing the incurrence of the disease while in the naval service of the United States. The absence of record evidence is explained by proof of Browne's knowledge of the practice of medicine and his ability to treat his own case without the intervention of the ship's surgeon.

The existence of hemorrhoids and the nature and extent of the suffering of the said William R. Browne are shown by the testimony of M. L. Julehus, who says: "The rectal veins are largely disturbed and relaxation of the membrane is of a serious character."

Horatio R. Bigelow, M. D., certifies, under date of February 2, 1880:

"That Capt. W. R. Browne is suffering from grave complications, which, grave in themselves, become the more alarming when viewed in the light of his advancing age. To a condition of aggravated hemorrhoids there is rectal prolapsus which surgical interference may not remedy. The condition of the membrane is so relaxed and the veins so strangulated that fatal bleeding may occur at any time. There is some intestinal ulceration, discharging very offensive pus. After each passage from the bowels the rectum has to be restored."

In his opinion the disability is total.

Thomas Owens, M. D., assistant sugeon United States Navy, says, after a careful examination of Captain Browne:

"That there is rectal prolapsus, with a chronic hemorrhoidal condition, which, in my opinion, in his advanced age, is liable to prove serious at any time, while any attempt at physical exertion would hasten such a termination. He is, therefore, totally disqualified or disabled for any manual labor."

Alex. Y. P. Garnett, M. D., says "the case seems to be an incurable one," and certifies to the correctness of the statement of Dr. Bliss.

D. W. Bliss, M. D., brevet colonel, late surgeon United States volunteers, says, January 28, 1884:

"I certify that I have been personally acquainted with Capt. William Ross Browne since 1877. I have carefully examined him, and he is at present under my professional care for chronic hemorrhoids, ulceration, and prolapsus of the rectum. The disability above described renders him incompetent for manual labor, and requires constant care and support to enable him to walk about."

It is shown by the wife of William R. Browne, in her memorial to this committee, that during the long service of Captain Browne in the Navy, and consequent neglect of his private interests, he lost almost an entire fortune, and on his return home at the close of the late war found himself not only broken in health by reason of his faithful and arduous service in behalf of his country, but very greatly reduced in fortune.

In view of the faithful service of Captain Browne and his total disability, incurred in the line of duty, your committee unhesitatingly recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I wish to inquire whether the pension which this bill proposes to grant is the amount which this man would receive under the general law?

Mr. MATSON. It is; and the reason a special act is required is that a former special act fixed the pension at $22.50, so that the pension could not be increased without another special act.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MRS. ALICE T. SHERWOOD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1970) for the relief of Mrs. Alice T. Sherwood.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Alice T. Sherwood, and pay her a pension at the rate of —— dollars per month, from and after the passage of this act, and to pay her the arrears of pension accruing from the 6th day of December, 1878, the date of the death of the soldier.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred bill (H. R. 1970), have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report as follows:

That Joel F. Sherwood enlisted in Company A, Twenty-eight Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, as second lieutenant, on the 1st day of July, 1861. That on the 20th day of October, 1861, while in an engagement with Jeff Thompson's confederate forces between Pilot Knob and Fredericktown, Mo., he was thrown from and kicked by a horse on various parts of his body, and entirely crushing and severing the cap of the left knee, all of which injuries he received while in the line of his duty.

That as soon as he was again sufficiently recovered to assume his duties he was promoted to the captaincy of said company for meritorious and gallant conduct. On the 16th day of November, 1861, he joined his command with the rank aforesaid, but owing to his wounds becoming troublesome, unfitting him from assuming personal command of his company, he tendered his resignation to his colonel, Conrad Baker, commanding the brigade, and late governor of Indiana, on the 10th day of July, 1862, and dated at Clarendon, Ark., in a letter which is also on file.

In reply Colonel Baker writes:

Captain Sherwood is an efficient and competent officer, and I greatly regret the necessity for his resignation, fearing it will be disastrous to the company. I can not refuse to recommend its acceptance, but would greatly prefer his remaining if he could be relieved from the more arduous labors of his position. Indeed I do not know how his place can be supplied.

CONRAD BAKER,
Colonel First Regiment Indiana Cavalry,
Commanding Fourth Brigade.

That Captain Sherwood went to his home, in Evansville, Ind., so disabled that he was unable to perform any kind of manual labor, and continued a disabled man until the day of his death, which took place at his home in Evansville, Ind., December 6, 1868.

That on the 28th day of August, 1863, he applied for and soon thereafter received a pension for three-fourths disability.

That at the time of his death there was no physician in immediate attendance, but a few hours afterward Dr. J. B. Johnston gave a burial certificate defining the cause of death as a complication of diseases aggravated by symptoms of pneumonia. Dr. Edwin Walker, Dr. George B. Walker, Dr. A. M. Owen, and Dr. S. C. Bridwell, now mayor of Evansville, and a large number of the most credible citizens, all declared by affidavits that death resulted from the injuries received in the service.

That Alice T. Sherwood, his widow, who survives him with five children, was married, as shown by marriage certificate, August 6, 1846, and continued in said marriage relation with Captain Sherwood until his death.

Your committee, after considering the very voluminous proof offered in behalf of the claimant, and all the surrounding circumstances, have concluded that the wound contributed to his death, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill, and that Alice T. Sherwood be placed on the pension-roll as widow of Capt. Joel T. Sherwood aforesaid.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If I correctly heard this bill read, it ought to be amended. In the first place, it seems intended to grant a pension in a specific sum, but the blank has not been filled. In addition to that, the bill I see provides for arrearages, which have not been given heretofore and which I presume the committee do not intend to give hereafter.

Mr. MATSON. There was an oversight on the part of the committee.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The bill should therefore be amended so as to give this lady a pension subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. MATSON. I was about to submit an amendment. I move that the bill be amended by striking out all after the words "from and after the passage of this act." I move further to amend by striking out the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of —— dollars per month," and inserting "widow of Joel F. Sherwood, late captain of Company A, Twenty-eighth Indiana Volunteers."

Mr. WOLFORD. Before the question is taken on this motion to strike out I wish to say a few words. There is an important principle involved here.

It was understood when the soldiers went into the Army of the Union to fight the battles of the nation that they were to be protected in case of sickness, protected in case of wounds, protected and cared for by the Government in disaster and misfortune of every sort and character. Every soldier believed that; and they had a right to believe it; they had a right to expect it from one of the best governments that was ever established upon the earth. They had a right to believe it from uniform experience of our country for all time in its treatment of those who had served it faithfully. They had a right to believe while they loved the country and were ready to die for it, that the country would love them and would take care of them in their old age when by reason of their service they were helpless; that it would love their children if they were left orphans, and would guard and protect their widows in their helplessness. They had no right to believe that anything but ample provision would be made for them and that that provision would be honestly, faithfully, and conscientiously carried out to the letter.

Now, sir, another word before I advance a few words of argument that I propose to address to the committee on this occasion. I want to say that limitation laws are only made for the purpose of guiding Departments who are not lawmakers, and for the purpose of being a rule to them. Law is itself a rule of action and a rule of conduct. It is a rule that binds the judge and binds the Department to which it is addressed. But what are we here? We are lawmakers ourselves. That is our function. We rise above the level of the judge; we rise above the level of the man that is eternally talking about precedents. We rise to the justice or the injustice of the thing according to what our action may be. We rise above the Departments of the Government and the rules fixed for their guidance.

Now, sir, here is an individual case in which it is shown that this widow, who was perhaps not so fortunate as others in making her application within a limited time, shall be debarred of the right of arrears. It is proposed that she shall be deprived of what other people have obtained, the bounty of the Government, and who deserved it no more than she.

This widow comes here and says injustice has been done her. But you turn a deaf ear to her complaint. You, the very law-making power of the nation, who can make or unmake limitations, you say it is true we have the power to give it to you; it is true and it is right that you should enjoy the bounty of the Government; it is true that you should be made equal to the widow of every other soldier in the land, but unfortunately you did not come in time and now you can not get it. I believe that the people can not have very much faith in a law or in lawmakers who would place such a restriction upon one person as that. The soldier himself, or in this case the soldier's widow, must regard this as want of good faith on the part of the Government when you deprive her of her rights and refuse her relief under the fair and honest circumstances of her claim.

But what is your response to this applicant? Why, it is true we believe in the justice of your case, but in the Department there is law. These ministers of ours, these creatures of our Government, these men to whom we can not delegate our legislative powers have established a rule which will exclude you. We have said to them, You shall not go beyond a certain boundary. That is all right and proper enough. Who is there to say that Congress shall obey this rule and shall not go beyond that limit in doing the justice that this Government promised to do to its soldiers? Does it say to you that you shall not obey that sense of justice and that impulse of your heart to do right, and which will impel you to take steps to place these people upon an equality, and to do justice in each individual case? You are above the jurisdiction of a judge; you are above the jurisdiction of the law. The law is binding upon them; it is binding upon the heads of the Departments. But you are here making the law, and it is your duty to make it operate equally upon all.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me, I would like to make a suggestion.

Mr. WOLFORD. Certainly.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I presume there is no gentleman in the committee who disagrees with the gentleman from Kentucky as to the rightfulness of arrearages of pensions in all of these cases. But these are the facts: There are already on the pension-rolls from 2,000 to 2,500 pensions to whom arrearages have been denied. In other words, every person that has been pensioned by a special act of Congress has been pensioned without receiving the benefit of the arrearages act. And the committee propose that there shall be no arrearages in special cases——

Mr. STEELE. Except in Mrs. Blair's case.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Hoping that Congress will see fit and proper at some time to put all of these classes of pensions upon the same footing.

Mr. WOLFORD. I am thankful to the gentleman from Indiana for giving me the statement, although I knew the fact to which he referred before. But it was that very injustice that I was arguing against. I am arguing against this stifling of our consciences by refusing in one case what we have granted in others. Do you not think it right to grant it?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. No; I do not think it is right to give it here and deny it in other cases.

Mr. WOLFORD. But is it the giving of it in this case that is the wrong, or is it the denial of it in the other cases that constitutes the wrong? Now come up like a statesman and give it to those who are deserving of it.

I have read, Mr. Chairman, in a good old book, the Bible, of the heathens that had no law, of those who were a law unto themselves. Now, we must either go back and place ourselves in that position and say that we have no law here, or else we must make a law that will be just and equitable and bear equally upon all. You are the representatives of the sovereign people of this nation. You have nothing to bind you but the Constitution of the United States and your oath to obey its mandates. That commands you to do this very thing; to do justice to all people. I would not refuse to do justice even if I had no law for it. But I would be like the heathen, and I would go back and make a law to myself, and say that if I can not make a general law to cover all cases I will make a law in this case. Come up and say like statesmen you will do right in every individual case. I have said all I want to say; you gentlemen can all do as you please.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON], which will be again read.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable reccommendation.

MRS. CHARLES B. CADDY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 392) granting a pension to Mrs. Charles B. Caddy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles B. Caddy, late of the —— Indiana Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws. This act to take effect from and after its passage.

The following amendment was reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

In line 5, strike out "the —— Indiana Volunteers" and insert in lieu thereof "Company E, Eighty-third Ohio Volunteers."

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

Charles B. Caddy was a private in Company E, One hundred and eighty-third Ohio Volunteers, and as such served from August 27, 1864, to June 21, 1865. His company was engaged in battle at Franklin, Tenn., on the 30th day of November, 1864. He alleged, in an application filed by him for pension on the 27th day of December, 1877, that he was wounded in the left breast in said battle late in the evening, and was left upon the field, our forces retreating, and he was made a prisoner.

He was unable to prove by either officer or comrades the fact that he was so wounded, because of the retreat, as aforesaid, and his claim for pension was rejected upon that ground.

He has since found one comrade of his company, who was taken prisoner at the same time, and under similar circumstances, who fully corroborates the statement of the petitioner.

The confederate records show that he was admitted to the hospital at once after his arrival at Andersonville, where he remained a prisoner until April 29, 1865. The examining surgeon discovers the results of the wound alleged. The captain of his company testifies that he was in said battle, and was reported as missing in battle immediately afterward. He has clearly shown his physical soundness prior to enlistment, and the fact of his sufferings, attributable to his wound since, is shown by medical testimony.

The committee do not hesitate to recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendment: Strike out the words "the Indiana Volunteers" and insert instead the words "Company E, One hundred and eighty-third Ohio Volunteers."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. MATSON. The amendment of the committee does not correspond with the report. In the amendment are the words "Eighty-third Ohio Volunteers." The report shows that this soldier was a private in the "One hundred and eighty-third Ohio Volunteers." That is correct. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "One hundred and" before "eighty-third."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LOUISA J. THOMPSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5307) granting a pension to Louisa J. Thompson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Louisa J. Thompson, widow of William L. Thompson, late a first lieutenant in the One hundred and fifteenth Indiana Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The following amendment was reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

In line 6, strike out the words "first lieutenant in the One hundred and fifteenth" and insert in lieu thereof the words "private in Company H, Fourteenth."

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

Louisa J. Thompson is the widow of William L. Thompson, who died November 25, 1875. He was a private in Company H, Fourteenth Indiana Volunteers, and served nearly two years as such. On the 17th day of September, 1862, he was severely wounded by a minie-ball in the upper third of thigh, injuring sciatic nerve, shattering the bone, and causing paralysis of leg before his discharge, which occurred on the 2d day of April, 1863. The certificate of disability given him at the time of his discharge states these facts as to the manner and extent of his disability. For some years after his discharge his wound suppurated and pieces of bone were discharged therefrom.

A year or so previous to his death the wound had healed over and the discharges ceased, and he was then attacked with a cough, which resulted in consumption. The physicians who attended him in his last illness, Dr. W. G. Sinex and Dr. John W. Smith, attribute his death to the wound; but the medical officers of the Pension Office reject the widow's claim upon the ground that the wound was not the direct cause of the soldier's death. This committee believe there is shown by the papers in the case a direct connection between the wound and the soldier's death, and that the wound was the cause of it, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: Strike out the words "first lieutenant in the One hundred and fifteenth Indiana Volunteers" and insert the words "a private in Company H, Fourteenth Indiana Volunteers" instead thereof.

The amendment reported by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELLA STOLZ.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3171) granting a pension to Ella Stolz.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ella Stolz, widow of William Stolz, deceased, late a private in Company I, One hundred and thirty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that she be paid full pension and arrearages from the date of the discharge of said deceased.

The following amendment was reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

After the word "volunteers," in line 8, strike out the words "and that she be paid full pension and arrearages from the date of the discharge of said deceased."

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

William H. Stolz was a private in Company I, One hundred and thirty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers. His term of service was short, and he was discharged on account of incipient phthisis pulmonalis. The physician who gave him the certificate of disability upon which he was discharged stated therein that the disease existed prior to enlistment. This is the only evidence of that fact, and the Pension Office, adhering to a rule laid down by the Secretary of the Interior, that such a record could not be impeached after a lapse of years, rejected the claim notwithstanding the proof, which is strong, that he was sound at enlistment. He died on the 19th day of May, 1881, of the disease, which is shown was contracted in the service.

Immediately after he entered the service his regiment was engaged in the hard marching and fighting occurring about the time of the battle of Antietam, and he was prostrated immediately thereafter. The proof of the continuance of the disease is clear, and the only question is as to the origin of it. It is not difficult to believe that it was brought upon this soldier by the sudden change of the manner of his life upon entering the Army, and particularly in the arduous service referred to. He was a tailor before enlisting, and the shock and sudden change probably produced the disease. His widow is represented as a good woman, working for years before his death to support the family, and now left with five small children to support.

In view of the foregoing facts we recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: Strike out all after the word "volunteers," in line 8 of said bill.

The amendment reported by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable reoommendation.

WALTER H. CROW.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6084) to restore the name of Walter H. Crow to the pension-roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to restore the name of Walter H. Crow, late a sergeant of Company K, Thirty-third Indiana Volunteers, to the pension-roll.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred a letter of the honorable Commissioner of Pensions, under the provisions of the joint resolution approved May 29, 1830, recommending that an act be passed to restore the name of Walter H. Crow, late a sergeant of Company K, Thirty-third Indiana Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report as follows:

The following is a copy of the letter referred to:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1884.

SIR: Under the provisions of the joint resolution of Congress, approved May 29, 1830, I have the honor to forward herewith the papers in the case of William H. Crow, late sergeant of Company K, Thirty-third Indiana Volunteers, certificate 117419, to consider the propriety of restoring pensioner's name to the pension-roll by special act of Congress, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, for the reason that his claim for restoration appears to be meritorious and deserving, but can not be allowed under the existing law.

It appears that Mr. Crow was originally pensioned June 27, 1871, for total blindness, at $8 per month, from September 20, 1864, the date of his discharge; at $25 per month from November 29, 1867; and at $50 per month from June 4, 1874, which rate he received until December 6, 1875, when payment was suspended pending an investigation as to whether he was sound and free from disease or injury of the eye at enlistment; and upon the evidence adduced by special examiners, his name was subsequently dropped from the pension-roll on the ground that some form of eye disease had existed prior to enlistment.

In view of the soldier's helpless condition, no expense has been spared to afford him every opportunity of establishing his claim under the general law, and thorough and exhaustive examinations of numerous witnesses have been conducted by special examiners, and it is believed that the true history of the case has been reached; and from an examination of the various reports I am convinced that Mr. Crow's case is a proper one for equitable relief through the medium of your honorable body. He was a soldier for three years, and there is nothing in his war record adverse to soldierly conduct, and he has been totally blind since 1867.

I therefore invite your attention to the papers, and submit the same to your consideration, with my recommendation that his name be restored to the pension-roll by special act of Congress.

Very respectfully,

W. W. DUDLEY, Commissioner.

Hon. C. C. MATSON,
Chairman Committee on Invalid Pensions, House of Representatives.

This committee can not understand why he was dropped upon the mere fact that some form of disease of eyes existed prior to enlistment, when the Government accepted his services for three years, and he did the duty of a soldier so faithfully and well; but such seems to be the fact. We unhesitatingly recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee who reports this bill what would be the effect of restoring this soldier to the roll; whether or not he would draw his pension from the time he was dropped, or merely from the time he is restored? It seems he was dropped from the roll in 1875, nearly ten years ago. If he draws pension from the time he was dropped he would draw for most of that time $72 a month; pretty nearly all that time, I think.

Mr. MATSON. I am unable to answer the question of the gentleman from Alabama. I suppose it depends on the construction given to the act by the law officers of the Department of the Interior. The act itself provides the man's name shall be restored to the pension-roll. That, I think, is no more than simple justice. If the Department of the Interior construes the act as having the effect of restoring from the date he was dropped, there will be nothing wrong in this case, because it seems to me a clear case of wrong was committed in dropping him from the roll. I am at a loss to understand why he was dropped, and also why the Commissioner of Pensions did not restore him. My impression is, however, the case was appealed to the Secretary of the Interior and all legal remedies had been exhausted; and for that reason the Commissioner of Pensions found himself powerless to act, and he sent the case voluntarily to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I apprehend the form of the bill is just as it should be.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. This soldier was dropped from the roll because upon an investigation the Commissioner of Pensions came to the conclusion that his blindness or the disease of his eyes did not originate in the service; in other words, that it originated prior to the time when he entered the service. Now, if that be the fact, then under the law he was not entitled to a pension—I mean under the general law. It may be under the equities he ought to have a pension. But clearly if the Commissioner of Pensions be right he was not entitled to it under the general law. And now this soldier occupies the same position so far as his pension is concerned as others do who apply for pensions upon equitable grounds. In none of those cases, however meritorious they may be, have we granted arrears of pensions.

In all such cases we grant the pension from and after the passage of the act. If we pass this bill restoring this soldier upon equitable grounds alone—because if the Commissioner of Pensions be right in his view of this matter then it is upon equitable grounds merely that we restore him to the roll—if we merely restore him to the roll and stop there he will draw his pension back for ten years and get over $8,000 from the Treasury, and I think you would be doing great injustice to others if you do that.

Now, if this was a case where the blindness originated in the service and for that reason the party was entitled to a pension under the general law, and ought not to have been dropped from the rolls, and the Commissioner of Pensions did wrong in dropping him from the rolls, that would present a very different case, and the applicant would be entitled to a pension from the time he was dropped from the rolls. But unless the case is one of that kind I do not think he should be restored to the rolls with a pension from the time he was dropped. I therefore move to amend the bill by adding to it the words, "and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. WOLFORD. I only want to say a word. I never could in my life find out how it is that my distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] would do two wrongs in order to make one right. He admits that this man should have a pension now. Will he have the goodness to tell me what time it was when he was without his pension that he ought not to have had it.

Now, for lack of eyesight, for the lack of that which is one of the greatest blessings conferred upon man, this applicant was granted a pension. By a misunderstanding of the law relating to pensions some officer strikes him off the pension-roll. He has been laboring all these years to get restored, and all these years he has been living without his just rights. And now we are asked to put him back on the pension-roll and say to him: "We did wrong in striking you from the roll, but because we did that wrong we will do another wrong for fear that we may do somebody else wrong." Sir, I will not argue the question further.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT], which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Add to the bill the words, "And pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act."

The question was taken by a viva voce vote, and the chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I call for a division.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Yes, I do.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 2, noes 27.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. No quorum has voted.

Several MEMBERS. Do not make that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. MATSON, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. HEWITT.

Mr. MATSON. It is unnecessary to appoint tellers, for there is no quorum here, and we of course all know that. I appeal to the gentleman from Alabama not to insist upon his amendment. I do not know how the Secretary of the Interior will construe this act, but I presume the chances are that he would construe it to go into effect from and after its passage.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Then my amendment will not hurt it.

Mr. MATSON. It will not help it at all. For myself I am inclined to leave it to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. In ordinary cases of granting a pension I would not make the point, but here is a proposition which in my opinion will give this soldier arrears of pensions to the amount of some $8,000.

Mr. BAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] to let this bill be reported to the House, and there let it go over until the yeas and nays can be taken on it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. No; let it take its chances with the other bills.

Mr. PETERS. I suggest that this is a different case from the other cases to which the gentleman refers, because this is one where the right to a pension has been once established.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Yes; but the Commissioner of Pensions now holds that this man was wrongfully on the rolls from the beginning.

Mr. MATSON. Oh, no!

Mr. PETERS. That can not be the case, for we have here his letter recommending that he be restored to the rolls.

Mr. MATSON. I think if I can be allowed a moment I can explain this matter. This case was determined some ten years since in the Pension Office, it being determined there that this pensioner ought not to be on the pension-rolls, and his name was dropped. Since then, upon further investigation of the case, the Commissioner of Pensions voluntarily brings the matter to the attention of Congress, for the reason, I have no doubt, that all the legal remedies have been exhausted.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If the man was rightfully on the rolls in the first place, and was dropped from the rolls without due cause, then the Commissioner of Pensions under the general law had the power to restore him to the rolls without coming here at all.

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman would be right if the matter had not been passed upon by the Secretary of the Interior. Had that not been the case, then no doubt the Commissioner of Pensions would have the right to restore his name to the rolls.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Then a higher authority than the Commissioner of Pensions has decided that this man was not entitled to be put on the rolls.

Mr. MATSON. That is true, but that decision was made ten years ago. Upon further investigation of the matter the Commissioner of Pensions voluntarily brings the case here and recommends it to our favorable action. There was no bill introduced here by any one for the relief of this party, but the attention of Congress was specially invited to the case by the Commissioner of Pensions, who now states that a wrong was done this man by dropping his name from the rolls.

I wish to say to the gentleman from Alabama that I reported this bill in such shape as to leave the matter entirely within the discretion of the Commissioner of Pensions and the law officers of the Interior Department as to the effect of the bill and as to the time when the pension should be restored, taking into consideration all the equities of the case. Had it been otherwise, I do not know that I should have any objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside informally; and before next Friday night inquiry can be made as to how the Commissioner of Pensions would construe this act.

Mr. MATSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. In ordinary cases I would not make objection; but this bill involves a large sum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] asks that this bill be laid aside informally. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

WILLIAM PRINTZ.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2660) granting a pension to William Printz.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Printz, late of Company F, Sixty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2660) granting a pension to William Printz, have had the same under consideration, and report as follows:

The committee find that William Printz enlisted July 4, 1861; mustered July 22, 1861, in Company F, Sixty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, at Pittsburgh, Pa., and discharged at Gaines's Mill, Va., June 1, 1862, by reason of necrosis of the bones of the left leg, which has existed for several years, and now renders him lame.

Affidavit of Edward S. Wright, late captain Company F, Sixty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, shows that William Printz was a member of affiant's company in the war of 1861–'65; that he did faithful and good service until the time of the battle of Hanover Court-House, Va., about the 27th May, 1862, when he was sent back in ambulance from that point, and from some cause, he does not know how or what, said William Printz became disabled for service and was discharged soon after on surgeon's certificate of disability, and that he was the captain of Company F, Sixty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Also the affidavits of John Clark and Henry Hassinger that William Printz worked at shoemaking in the year 1859; that they never knew him to be sick—he did not complain either—and that he was a sound man and able-bodied, excepting a weak ankle, that caused a little lameness.

And the affidavit of James W. Dean that William Printz worked for him during the year 1860; that he was a stout and able-bodied young man, and that he also knew him during the years 1857, 1858, and 1859, and he considered him stout and able-bodied.

Affidavit of William Sharwood, late captain Company F, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers; that he knew William Printz for some twenty-five years; that he knew him before the war; that said Printz was an able-bodied man, to the best of his knowledge; that he knew him in the Army; that he saw him frequently in 1861 and 1862; there seemed to be nothing the matter with said Printz; he was doing duty of all kinds, same as the other soldiers; that the affiant did not belong to the same regiment, but their respective regiments were frequently thrown together, so that he had abundant opportunity of seeing said Printz, and did see him, and does know that Printz was able to perform the duties, and did perform the duties, of a good and faithful soldier, same as other soldiers.

Also the affidavit of John R. Wilson, late first lieutenant Company F, Sixty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; that he well knew William Printz, of his company, and that the said William Printz, while in the service and line of his duty at battle of Hanover, Va., on or about May 27, 1862, stepped in a hole and seriously injured the bone of his left leg. He was so seriously injured that he was unable to perform any further duty, and he was discharged for disability June 20, 1862. Affiant's knowledge is obtained from actual personal observation, having been personally present.

The committee reports the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

FREDERICK WILHELM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1396) granting a pension to Frederick Wilhelm, late a sergeant of Company L, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frederick Wilhelm, late a sergeant of Company L, Fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions having considered the bill (H. R. 1396) granting a pension to Frederick Wilhelm, submit the following report:

The petitioner enlisted August 9, 1861, and was honorably discharged August 7, 1865.

In May, 1864, while in the line of duty at Weldon Railroad, Virginia, his horse fell with him and severely injured his right side, breaking some of his ribs, which have never properly reunited, and so making it difficult for him to perform manual labor. This occurred while his command was making a raid, and during a very dark night, which accounts for but one of his comrades seeing the circumstance. He was, however, sent to the hospital-boat immediately afterward by Dr. Haney, assistant surgeon of his regiment, who died before petitioner made an application for pension. From the hospital-boat petitioner was sent to Chesapeake Hospital, where he was treated.

Lieut. William Wilhelm testifies that petitioner received an injury to right side, as described, and he knows the fact from being present when the petitioner was injured. Two witnesses testify that they have known petitioner for seven or eight years, and that he has been compelled to quit work frequently on account of exhaustion, produced by injuries received in the military service. The records of the Adjutant-General's Office show that he was reported sick in the hospital in May, 1864. The records of the Surgeon-General's Office show that he was in the hospital in June, 1864, with gunshot wound in left side, and that there are no regimental records on file in that office. The gunshot wound evidently refers to the injury received by the petitioner from the falling of his horse, and not from a gunshot wound.

The board of surgeons say that there is no cartilaginous union, and that no disability is entailed.

The pensioner is a coal-miner by trade, and is unable to work. This fact is clearly shown. He makes perfectly manifest his disability by his affidavits, and the records of the War Department circumstantially corroborate his statements. His fellow-workmen fully sustain his allegations. He is in poor circumstances, with a family of children, and unable by reason of his disability to work for their support. The evidence presents a clean-cut, clear case, without contradictions, and excepting only the statement of the board of surgeons the evidence shows that he can not do manual labor, which is better than the theoretical conclusion of the doctors.

The committee therefore report the bill back to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES I. DAIL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5176) for the relief of James I. Dail.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of James I. Dail, late quartermaster of the Second Tennessee Cavalry, on the pension-roll, subject to the rules and regulations of the Pension Office.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred bill H. R. 5176, beg leave to submit the following report:

Claimant filed his application for pension April 3, 1871, which was rejected February 2, 1881. The proof is clear and strong that he was and is greatly disabled. His military record shows that he was discharged from the service on account of injuries received near McMinnville, Tenn., by his horse falling on him when engaged in a raid after John Morgan's cavalry, in May, 1863.

A large number of officers and comrades testify as to his injuries. Medical officers of the Army and citizen physicians give the same evidence. It would encumber this report to attempt to set out anything more than the substantial effect and logical and legal conclusions to be drawn from the elaborate testimony.

It shows that after receiving injuries as aforesaid his wounds and bruises so affected him that a large abscess or carbuncle formed on the right side of lower body and right thigh, by reason of which, as already stated, he was honorably discharged from the military service. A long chain of both professional and lay testimony shows that from these original injuries were developed piles, fistula, and hemorrhoids.

Official medical examination shows him to be wholly disabled, or virtually so, from these identical causes. A large number of skillful and reputable physicians bear positive testimony to his disabled constitution, and assign the same causes.

And still his claim "was rejected on the ground of no record of alleged disability" and that "the records show that he was discharged for a different disability from that alleged, and inability to furnish medical testimony showing the existence of alleged disability." Such is the record of rejection. This conclusion must have been arrived at by the naked assumption that the abscess and carbuncle resulting from the injuries received by his horse falling with and upon him were in no way connected with and superinducive of the other disabilities mentioned. Yet the proof shows that they existed the one right after the other, coupling themselves together so as to form one continuous disability, and originating in the same cause. He is certainly shown to have been disabled in the service of the United States. Your committee are clearly convinced that claimant was injured and disabled while in the line of his duty, that he is entitled to a pension, and therefore report back bill H. R. 5176 with a single amendment, inserting the words "first lieutenant and" before the word "quartermaster," and recommend that the same do pass.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to insert before the word "quartermaster" the words "first lieutenant and" was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

RICHARD G. SHARP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4282) granting a pension to Richard G. Sharp.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Richard G. Sharp, a private in Company C, First Regiment Tennessee Light Artillery Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred bill H. R. 4282, beg leave to make the following report:

Claimant made application for pension to the Pension Office, and it was rejected on the ground of no record of alleged wound of hand and claimant's inability to furnish testimony showing injury was received while in line of duty.

Notwithstanding the Pension Office assumes claimant's inability to establish that he was injured while in the line of duty, your committee are of opinion that the proof on file in the Pension Office makes a clear case within the law.

Claimant states that he was detailed to hunt up and return certain deserters to their commands, and that while on this duty a house in which he was at the time was surrounded by unknown parties and he was shot and wounded in the hand, and that amputation of the right-hand little finger became necessary; and while it is not so stated in words, the facts show that amputation took place at the joint which couples the finger to the palm of the hand. No witness testifies to having been present and seen the wound inflicted. But the captain testifies that he detailed him and sent him out after deserters and that he returned wounded, and gave a circumstantial account of the affair.

His statements seem to have been accepted as true by his commanding officer and comrades, for several of his company besides the captain and lieutenant corroborate his statements. The proof is absolutely conclusive that he was detailed and left camp under that detail and returned wounded. No other theory, except as explained by himself and accepted by his commanding officers, seems ever to have been thought of until the Pension Office raised the doubt by rejecting his claim. It will not do to presume he was not injured as he alleges, especially when he has sworn to it himself and is corroborated by a conclusive set of circumstances. Your committee believe that he was injured as alleged; that he was in the line of duty at the time; and that he is entitled to a pension; and therefore report back bill H. R. 4282 and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I wish to ask the gentleman who reported this bill whether this wound—the loss of a finger, I believe—disabled this man?

Mr. HOUK. It evidently does. From the testimony one finger has been taken off. But the question of the disability is by this bill left wholly to the Department. The extent of the disability will be decided by an examination of surgeons. This bill does not put the man on the pension-roll except subject to the provisons and limitations of the pension laws.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY L. WELLS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5472) granting a pension to Mary L. Wells.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll of the United States the name of Mary L. Wells, of Loudon County, Tenn., widow of George W. Wells, deceased, late a private in Company I, First Tennessee Infantry, to date from the — day of ——, 18—, and to continue during life or widowhood, at the rate of —— dollars per month.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred bill H. R. 5172, beg leave to submit the following report:

It appears from the record filed in the pension office that George W. Wells, Company I, First Tennessee Infantry Volunteers, made application for pension during his lifetime, which application and the proof to sustain it were very informally, inartificially, and imperfectly prepared.

This application was rejected. On October 5, 1875, the soldier died. Afterward the widow, Mary L. Wells, renewed the application in behalf of herself and certain minor children. This application was also wanting in professional skill and legal application and force of statement, and was likewise rejected, but the reason therefor does not appear in the record, except from the letter of notification that it was "rejected on the ground that the disease of which the soldier died was not the result of his military service."

In answer to this ground of objection we collate the following testimony: The captain and first lieutenant of his company testify that he had the measles at Camp Dick Robinson, Kentucky, in October, 1861; and that in February, 1862, at Cumberland Ford, Kentucky, he was attacked with jaundice and sent to a private house to be treated. Dr. R. P. Eaton testifies that he treated the soldier after discharge for jaundice, said to have been contracted in the military service; that he saw him frequently from discharge until death, and believes his death was caused by the disease he had at the time of his discharge; that he not only had jaundice, but diarrhea, resulting from diseased liver and lungs; that he continued to prescribe for him up to the serious illness which resulted in his death; and that he is convinced that the soldier's death resulted from these organic troubles, originating in the service, he having no other disease. Dr. J. J. Harrison and Dr. T. H. Murray substantially corroborate the evidence of Dr. Eaton. These are reputable gentlemen and skilled physicians. The proof is conclusive that the soldier was sound when he entered the service.

Considering the circumstances and connecting facts tending to establish the disease and its origin in the service, there can scarcely be any doubt—certainly not of such a reasonable character as to authorize the rejection of this claim—there is, in fact, no doubt—that the soldier died from disease contracted in the military service of the United States while in the line of duty.

Your committee therefore report back bill H. R. 5172 with amendments, and recommend that the same do pass.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to strike out at the end of the bill all after the words "First Tennessee Volunteers" and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the general laws governing such cases" was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE W. WICKWIRE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3909) granting a pension to George W. Wickwire.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby directed to place on the pension-roll the name of George W. Wickwire, who enlisted as a messenger-boy on the United States receiving-ship Alleghany, at Baltimore Harbor, November 18,1862, and was discharged September 16,1863, for disability occasioned by injury received while in the line of his duty on the United States gunboat General Putnam, and pay him a pension under the provisions of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. HOLMES) was read, as follows:

Mr. HOLMES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following report (to accompany bill H. R. 3909):

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3909) granting a pension to George W. Wickwire, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report thereon:

George W. Wickwire, the claimant, enlisted as a first-class messenger-boy on the United States receiving-ship Alleghany, at Baltimore Harbor, in November, 1862, and was discharged September 16, 1863, for disability.

The record of this claimant shows that after his enlistment he served for a time on board United States receiving-ships, and was then transferred to the gunboat General Putnam, cruising at that time in Chesapeake Bay and Yorktown Harbor. While the ship's crew, including claimant, were drilling at the guns, under command of Ensign William Jennings, the said Wickwire was seriously injured by the dislocation of his wrist. The injury to claimant occurred while engaged in carrying cartridges from the magazine to a gun during the drill on said gunboat Putnam. As he was returning to the magazine for more cartridges, and while stepping over a rope attached to some part of the gun in use, which was slack when the seaman approached, was suddenly tightened by the gunners just as claimant was stepping over it at a very rapid pace.

In consequence, claimant was tripped and fell with great violence on his left hand, which came in contact with the bed of the brass pitman, by which his left wrist was dislocated and turned backward. At the time of the accident, and for some time afterward, there was no surgeon on the gunboat Putnam; and Ensign William Jennings testifies that after receiving the injury Wickwire remained on the boat several days, Ensign William Jennings superintending his treatment and care as best he could; that Wickwire became worse, and was sent on board the flag-ship Mahaska, on which there was a surgeon. He was admitted to the invalid hospital at Norfolk, Va., on January 5, 1863, from which he was discharged April 17, 1863, as unfit for service.

Captain Hotchkiss, who commanded the Putnam, has long been dead; but Ensign Jennings and other evidence fully sustain the statement of claimant as to the origin and character of his disability, as well as his unimpaired health and physical soundness prior to the injury referred to. Examining Surgeon Charles H. Lathrop states, October 19, 1869, that he (Wickwire) has a dislocation of the lower end of the ulna backward, the wrist is stiff, and he is unable to use the hand freely. He was injured while on duty at a gun by falling on a hawser. His disability is one-half. R. M. Huntington, M. D., late assistant surgeon, United States Army, and examiner for pensions, certifies to chronic dislocation of the lower end of the ulna backward.

Dr. Theo. De Tau testifies to the same effect, and further says that claimant presents no evidence whatever of scrofulous or tuberculous disease.

Opposed to this evidence there is only the hospital memorandum of the United States assistant surgeon at Norfolk, who states that the patient had erysipelas of the left hand, which left it in its present condition, and further that there was no evidence that his disability originated in the line of duty. As the surgeon who makes this statement was quite distant from the place at the time the accident occurred, and did not see claimant for several weeks afterwards, it is very difficult to see how the surgeon had any personal knowledge of the matter more than hearsay; and the very explicit statement of the occurrence made by Ensign Jennings, under whose eye it occurred, as well as the evidence of the physicians who have decided it to be a dislocation by personal examination, would seem better evidence than the memorandum at the hospital. There were witnesses to the injury as well as the record evidence of the physicians who examined his injury afterwards.

The Pension Office rejected the application for pension on the ground that the alleged disability did not originate in the service. It is quite probable that erysipelas resulted from the injury, and it, perhaps, might have been averted had there been a surgeon on the gunboat Putnam at the time referred to. The bill for the relief of this claimant passed the Senate during the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress, and was almost reached on the Calendar of the House when Congress adjourned. The rate of claimant's disability by the surgeon is one-half, and the injury is pronounced permanent. It appears that the claimant is named on some of the reports during the service as George Wickwire, leaving out the middle letter of his name, but his identity is fully established.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill pass, with an amendment thereto, providing that said pension shall be granted under the limitations and provisions of the pension law, and to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to insert after the words "provisions," in the eleventh line, the words "and limitations," and to add at the end of the bill the words "to take effect from and after the passage of this act," was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARIA L. HAMMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1977) for the relief of Maria L. Hammer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be paid to Maria L. Hammer, as a nurse in the service of the United States in Government hospitals during the late war, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, arrears of pension at the rate of $10 per month, to commence from the 20th day of July, 1863; and that the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of Maria L. Hammer on the pension-roll.

The report (by Mr. HOLMES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1977) granting a pension to Maria L. Hammer, having had the same under consideration, report thereon as follows:

Maria L. Hammer, in November, 1862, was appointed and duly sworn in as a nurse in the United States military hospital service by James E. Yeatman, president of the Western Sanitary Commission, acting under orders from Miss D. L. Dix, general superintendent of the nurses of military hospitals of the United States, who had authority so to do. Before entering this service her health had been good, and was at the time she commenced her duties as nurse.

Miss Hammer was assigned to duty as hospital nurse at Corinth, Miss. After remaining there for some time she was ordered with the sick to La Grange, Tenn., where she was assigned to college and seminary hospitals. Here she remained on hard and continuous duty in the hospitals until the 20th of July, 1863, at which time, from overwork, long continued, she was compelled to quit the service. She is shown to have been almost constantly on her feet over the sick and wounded, scarcely taking time to eat her meals. She was attacked with swelling of the feet and limbs to a phenomenal degree, and attended with very great pain, during which she could not stand upon her feet, and could not even bear the weight of anything upon the affected parts. This was attended with other diseases peculiar to the female sex, and which has wholly broken her down and destroyed her health. She has no means of support, and has several times tried to earn her living by manual labor, but has been obliged to give it up each time. She is now 64 years old, and has no parents living and no home of her own. Her only refuge has been with a widowed sister, whose husband was also a soldier.

Senator Kirkwood, late Secretary of the Interior, has spoken strongly in her favor as to her desert and needs.

Peter A. Day, State railroad commissioner of Iowa; Mrs. Wittemyer, Iowa State sanitary agent, together with soldiers in the service, and a large number of her neighbors, and prominent men in the State, give their indorsement and support as to her merits that few cases of this class receive.

H. W. Crawford, M. D., chief of hospitals at La Grange, Tenn., on her leaving there, gave her a letter, in which he says, among other things:

"Miss Maria L. Hammer has been on duty as chief lady nurse in these hospitals for the last eight months, and has earned the everlasting gratitude of not only the sick and wounded soldiers, but all others who have witnessed her untiring labors in this wide field of humanity. No lady I know has earned a brighter record, and her name is in all the hospitals. She now wishes to retire for a season to recuperate her failing health," &c.

Your committee regard a case of this character as being as much entitled to their support and favor as any other branch of the military service, and therefore report the bill back with recommendation that it do pass, after amending the same by striking out the words "the twentieth day of July, 1863," commencing in the eighth line, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "and after the passage of this act;" also, strike out in the seventh line the words "arrears of;" also, in the eighth line, strike out the word "ten" and insert "twelve" in lieu thereof.

The following amendment, reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read:

Strike out the words "the 20th day of July, 1863," commencing in the eighth line, and insert in lieu thereof the words "and after the passage of this act."

Strike out in the seventh line the words "arrears of."

In the eighth line strike out the word "ten" and insert "twelve."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorbly to the House.

WILLIAM J. SAWYER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1998) for the relief of William J. Sawyer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to have the name of William J. Sawyer, late first lieutenant of Company F, Sixteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, placed on the pension-roll, at the rate of $15 per month, from the date of his discharge from the military service of the United States.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1998) for the relief of William J. Sawyer, having had the same under consideration, make the following report:

William J. Sawyer entered the service as first lieutenant Company F, Sixteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered into the service February 17, 1863. He was honorably discharged March 25, 1865, on expiration of his term of service.

Claimant avers that on July 5, 1864, while constructing foot-bridges across Nicojack Creek, in Georgia, during the night he slipped and fell astride a log, causing a rupture. He was not treated in any hospital. He alleges in his declaration June 29, 1880, rupture of the right groin.

W. G. McCohn, M. D., testifies February 5, 1881, that on October 5, 1880, he found claimant suffering from strangulated scrotal hernia.

Joseph L. Phillips, M. D., also testifies that he found claimant suffering from inguinal hernia of the right side.

It is alleged by claimant that the only person having knowledge of his disability at the time was Lieut. M. K. Laird; that he, Laird, was acquainted with the circumstances, but died, as nearly as claimant can state, in the year 1866. The evidence in this case shows conclusively that the claimant is laboring under a very serious disability. At the time the disability was incurred it was not of a very serious nature, and did not disable claimant from performing military duty. The rupture did not become disabling until June, 1865. At that date, while the claimant was pitching hay from a wagon into a mow, the hernia came out and became strangulated. The reduction of the hernia was accomplished by W. G. McCohn, M. D., by manual operation after giving anæsthetics.

The only question upon which there can be any doubt is the fact whether or not the injury originated in the service. He is shown to have complained of its existence in 1865, after he came out of the service. Other witnesses speak of his statement concerning it shortly after it was alleged to have been received.

In view of the fact that this is a disability that would not naturally be paraded before the public, or shown unless it was necessary, and in view of the strong corroborative evidence to that of claimant, your committee are disposed to recommend the passage of the bill. His disability under the pension law is shown to be one-half by the examining surgeons.

Your committee therefore recommend that, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the claimant be granted a pension, to take effect from and after the passage of this act, and with the bill so amended recommend that it do pass.

The amendment report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to strike out at the end of the bill all after the words "pension-roll" and insert the words "subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, to take effect from and after the passage of this act" was agreed to.

Mr. MCCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, since I have been in official position it has fallen to my lot to have considerable to do with the claims of soldiers who are applicants for pensions. It has always been a pleasure to me to have the opportunity to aid them in any honorable way to secure their just dues.

In calling up these claims it has always been a matter of pain and regret to me, by way of reply of the Pension Department to these calls in giving the status of the case, to read that "this claim was rejected" at such a date for lack of a single link in the chain of testimony, or for some apparently insignificant cause.

Another fact in the consideration of these claims has seemed to me to work an injustice to the claimant, and that is the requirement of proof that he was a sound man, free from all physical disabilities, when he entered the service. I hold, Mr. Chairman, that if he was deemed able after the proper examination by the examining officers of the Army to enter the service and fight the battles of his country, and thus help to save the life of the nation, he should not be required by any law to go back of that examination to prove that he was a sound man when he entered the service of his country, and it does seem to me to be a humiliating and an unfair requirement of him on the part of the Government.

It has also been an unpleasant thing to me, Mr. Chairman, to sit in my seat in this Hall and witness the opposition to the passage of special acts for the relief of these brave men, or their widows and orphans, based simply on some slight technicalities or want of a precedent, while it is indeed a matter of great significance to the needy, suffering ones who have periled their lives to save the country. I do not object to proper investigation and proper discrimination between just and unjust claims, but it is no reproach to this great country and this Government, if it errs at all, to err on the side of mercy to those who saved the life of the great Republic.

Our memories can easily reach back, Mr. Chairman, over the past to darker periods in our country's history, when dread uncertainty prevailed and the destiny of the nation hung trembling in a balance; when war with its discords and carnage was shedding the best blood of the land; when a fierce and mighty struggle was going on for national existence and the integrity of national union and honor.

The history of our country tells us that for great principles our forefathers fought and shed their blood on many a sanguinary field in the war of the Revolution, and for the maintenance of those same principles recollection assures us with the reminders of these claims that come before us for our consideration to-day that the gallant sons of the North fought and thousands yielded up their lives as a sacrifice in a fresh baptism of blood on the numerous battlefields of the late civil war.

It was their loyalty, their decision, their courage and determined action in defense of the rights of men that gave to us the peace, the harmony, and the prosperity we enjoy to-day.

With them principle was of vital significance. The poet Campbell has well said:

> The patriot's blood is the seed of freedom's tree.

While Mr. Emerson only emphasizes the same truths in the declaration—

> 'Tis only the triumph of principle that gives peace.

Kindred and home and friends were dear to all these heroic defenders of the Union, but above the strong ties of kindred and home and loved ones they recognized their country's call and their country's claim to their devotion and service, and voluntarily went forth beneath the folds of the banner of unity and freedom to battle for the right. They were not prompted by the glory and the pomp of war to leave their homes, for they were lovers of the pursuits of peace; nor were they driven serf-like into the Army, but moved by a patriotic impulse, under a sense of the nation's peril, they left all that heart holds dear to take up arms in defense of the principles they loved, and they marched under the banner of the free, and, marshaled in battle array, they followed where the old flag led until their brave and bitter foes were prostrate in the dust, and liberty, loyalty, and patriotism proclaimed perpetual union beneath the glorious folds of the old Star-Spangled Banner.

However important may have been the work of the statesman, the politician, and the man of military training in our national struggle, they could not have maintained our existence as a united Republic. The citizen soldier, inspired by a love of home that generously expanded into the wider love of country, bore the burden and heat of that terrible struggle. From the free homes of the North farmers, mechanics, merchants, citizens by the hundred thousand as a mighty stream poured forth, bore the brunt of the terrible shock and strife. Such patriotism was then essential to the salvation of the nation, and such pure, unsullied patriotism will ever be necessary to secure the purity and permanency of our free institutions.

Terrible and effective is the work of thinking bayonets, that either find the way for freedom, justice, and right, or make it in a pathway of blood through the ranks of their foes. Though nearly a score of years have gone by since our national life-struggle ended, the wounds have not been healed in many stricken hearts. Many bowed and crippled forms are seen among us as the result of hardships and privations of camp life, the marches, the imprisonments, and the dreadful storm and shock of battle. The light and pride of many a household, too, went out to do battle for the right to return no more forever.

Memory will still delight to linger round their cherished forms as they were in the life of the long ago; and when memorial days roll round with fleeting years, tears mingled with wreaths and flowers will fall on their graves all over the land. The strong arm of husband and father no longer protects or supports the widow and the orphan. How many of those dear ones, too, whose quiet resting-places are unknown! How many lie buried thus in the sunny Southland whose graves will never be known or marked by mortal man; nor mother's nor sister's loving hand shall strew their graves with flowers!

> But the finger of glory shall point where they lie;
> And far from the footstep of coward and slave,
> The Spirit of Freedom will shelter their graves.

Fondly let us cherish their memory and the noble cause in which they died. And we will not forget the living. A nation's gratitude will ever be due to these brave men. How fitting that they revive the memories of other days in their memorial services and their reunions, and bring to mind the triumph of arms in glorious victory that gives us peace in all our borders. They are falling here and there. Ere they go hence let them have the assurance that a nation's obligations to them are met in a noble, generous way.

Let no narrow, parsimonious statesmanship dole out grudgingly, with meager, sparing hand, a mere pittance for the valuable services they rendered, but such a liberal support as will make them feel an honest pride in their declining years in the noble generosity of the nation whose life they saved. Mr. Chairman, imagination could not picture what our condition might have been had not these grand, heroic men, taking their lives in their hands and thrusting themselves into the breach between insurrection and Union, saved the nation's life.

But what do we see as the result of their exalted heroism? A government restored on a basis of perpetual union, human slavery wiped out, peace and harmony in all our borders. Men in the vocations of life are driving the wheels of active industry in peaceful pursuits. Agriculture, manufactures, and commerce have assumed wonderful proportions. The facilities for the mental and moral development of the people are becoming grand in their effectiveness and widening extent, and all the interests of a free and mighty people assure us of the fact that we are in the enjoyment of a great prosperity. With a Treasury full to repletion, and all our national interests thus prosperous, we should as the nation's legislators make liberal provision for the orphan and widow and for these brave men in their declining years.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN A. HASSELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6085) granting a pension to John A. Hassell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States the name of John A. Hassell, late saddler in Company M, Third Iowa Cavalry, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the application of John A. Hassell for pension, have had the same under consideration, and make the following report:

John A. Hassell enlisted as a saddler in Company M, Third Iowa Cavalry. He was mustered into the service September 12, 1861, and served uninterruptedly until his muster-out, in August, 1865, with the exception of two months' absence in the early part of 1864, on veteran furlough. The applicant alleges in his declaration, as filed in the Pension Office, April 19, 1879, that at Columbus, Ga., in April, 1865, while returning to his command from guard duty, a magazine of the enemy was exploded by the Union forces near him, which caused a great shock to his system, and that he has since then had a constant roaring in his head, and in the year 1877 became totally blind; that his blindness has been gradually increasing since April, 1865; that the roaring in his head ceased as his eyes became worse.

He claims a pension for blindness in both eyes, also for deafness of the right ear, caused by concussion at the time of said explosion. The claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the soldier's disability originated after his discharge from the service.

The Pension Department sent out a special examiner to examine the case after claimant had made his proofs. There were a large number of witnesses examined by the Government and the claimant, and the uniform evidence of all of them is that claimant was an excellent soldier, strictly temperate, and addicted to no bad habits. Until the time of the explosion referred to he had never had any trouble with his eyes nor with his hearing. At the time of that occurrence he says he was thrown to the ground, and that his horse was brought to his knees.

Other members of the command testify that the shock was very serious. Claimant was much nearer than many of them to the explosion. Whether he was the nearest to it of any one in his company is not shown. From the best evidence it would seem that he was about one hundred and fifty yards distant from the explosion at the time it occurred. He did not experience any serious effects from the explosion immediately after its occurrence, except the roaring in his head before alluded to. His blindness is caused, as stated by the physicians, by paralysis of the optic nerve. His eyes continued to fail notwithstanding all he could do, and in 1877 he became totally blind. The examining surgeon in his report on file remarks that the applicant is a good, worthy man, and deserving of a pension. While losing his eyesight he gradually grew deaf in the right ear, caused by the explosion. Prior to that time his hearing had been good, and he was free from defect in that respect.

His neighbors bear universal testimony to his worth, character, and standing as a citizen. The special agent of the Government found no man who could say a word against him, although a large number of affidavits were taken. The claimant is now obliged to have the service of some one to lead him around. The Commissioner of Pensions has thought his case one of such merit that he has written a letter to this committee recommending him as well worthy of a pension, and that he be granted the same by special act of Congress.

This claimant served uninterruptedly almost four years. The evidence we think is clear that his disability was caused by the explosion, and although it did not fully develop until after his discharge, yet he complained of the symptoms which led to it immediately after the occurrence.

Your committee therefore report a bill in pursuance of the recommendation of the Pension Office, which is supported by the evidence on file, and recommend that claimant be placed upon the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1884.

SIR: Under the provisions of the joint resolution of Congress approved May 29, 1880, I have the honor to transmit herewith the papers in the case of John A. Hassell, late saddler Company M, Third Iowa Cavalry, application 280817, to consider the propriety of placing applicant's name upon the pension-roll by special act of Congress, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, inasmuch as it appears that his claim is a meritorious and deserving one, which can not be established under the existing law.

The applicant alleges in his declaration, filed April 19, 1879, that at Columbus, Ga., in April, 1865, while returning to his command from guard duty, a magazine exploded near him which caused a great shock to his system; that he has since then had a constant roaring in head; and about a year ago became blind, and his blindness has been gradually increasing ever since April, 1865; that the roaring in his head seemed to cease as his eyes became worse. He claims pension for blindness, and also for deafness of right ear, caused by concussion from explosion, &c.

The claim has been rejected on the ground that soldier's disabilities originated after his discharge, and the evidence now on file, as furnished by the applicant, and also as adduced by a special examiner of this office, does not establish the connection between the alleged disability and injury incurred in the service.

From the records of the War Department it appears the soldier was mustered into service on September 12, 1861, and served uninterruptedly until his muster-out in August, 1865, with the exception of two months' absence in the early part of 1864 on veteran furlough. This long term of faithful service, as well as the testimony of numerous neighbors and citizens, shows that soldier was a man of more than ordinary physical vigor and unquestionably sound at the date of his enlistment. The testimony of his officers and comrades shows that the explosion occurred as alleged, and that the soldier complained of the shock, and that it affected his eyes, &c. The examining surgeon finds him totally blind, and remarks in his report that applicant is a good, worthy man, and deserving of his pension, and applicant's neighbors testify that he has always been a moral, temperate, and truthful man, entitled to full credit.

It is impossible, however, to present the merits of the claim in brief, and I therefore invite your attention to the evidence now on file, together with the examination of the affiants as conducted by the special examiner, and I submit the same to your consideration, with my opinion that applicant is entitled to relief by special act.

Very respectfully,

W. W. DUDLEY, Commissioner.

Hon. C. C. MATSON,
Chairman Committee on Invalid Pensions, House of Representatives.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

PATRICK FOLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4530) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Foley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Patrick Foley, late of the crew of the United States steamer Ticonderoga, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month; said pension to be in lieu of that he now receives.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4530) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Foley, having considered the same, ask leave to submit the following report:

The petitioner enlisted in the United States Navy as landsman, on the United States steamer Ticonderoga, on the 5th day of January, 1871, and was discharged on the 7th day of February, 1874. The basis of claim for pension alleges that about August, 1873, on board the said United States steamer Ticonderoga, at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, he contracted a severe cold, which produced sore eyes and partial deafness in both ears, for which he was treated in the Norfolk naval hospital. The Pension Office recognized and allowed the disability of the eyes, and on December 20, 1882, granted a pension of $2 a month, to commence at the time of discharge, February 8, 1874. The deafness was not admitted.

The evidence shows that the man was unable to perform full manual labor because of his infirmities, and was employed in service, at only about half pay. While in the employ of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company he lost one of his arms, and it is alleged that the accident was due to the impairment of sight and hearing.

The condition of claimant prior and subsequent to service is set forth in the following affidavits:

John Cullen, of New York city, testifies that the claimant came to New York about eighteen months prior to enlistment; that he boarded with affiant for about three months, and that from personal acquaintance and observation he knows that he was in sound health, and that his hearing and eyesight were perfectly good; that for about two months after he came home from the Navy he was badly affected with sore eyes, and very deaf in both ears, and that from these disabilities he was totally incapacitated for manual labor; that he has seen him during each year since, and knows that he has suffered continuously from partial deafness and impaired vision.

Charles Orr, M. D., surgeon in charge New York Eye and Ear Infirmary, testifies that he received treatment in that institution.

Isaac K. Bradbury states that he was superintendent of Judson & Co.'s stoneyard, at Astoria, N. Y., in 1874, and that he remembers claimant was employed there about six months. During this period, he remembers that he was very deaf, and his sight much impaired by reason of sore eyes.

John D. Walsh, of Brooklyn, N. Y., testifies that while he was foreman of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company the claimant was in their employ, under affiant's supervision, from December, 1874, to June, 1880; that from personal observation he knows that claimant was continuously deaf and suffered from impaired vision, by reason of which he was entirely unfitted to perform certain things which would have been given him had his hearing and sight been good; that on account of his deafness he was made weighmaster at reduced wages, being about $8 or $9 per week, but had his sight and hearing been good he would have been employed as engineer and probably received from $60 to $75 per month; that while in said employment claimant lost an arm, and although he did not see the accident, yet he received information which he regarded absolutely reliable from men who were present that it was due to claimant's failure to hear proper warning signals and to impaired sight.

Henry L. Morton, superintendent of Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, testifies as above in relation to claimant's infirmities of sight and hearing, and says that during his employment with said company he lost one of his arms, and he believes, from reports made at the time, which were reliable and which have never been questioned or disputed, that it was through his failure to hear proper warning signals that he met with said accident.

The Pension Office would not have allowed a pension had not the disability of impaired vision been clearly proven as having occurred in the service. The claimant's affidavit is positive as to the deafness occurring at the same time. It is shown that he entered the service sound and healthy and came out with these disabilities, and that the loss of the arm was in great part due to his infirmities.

The benefit of the doubt, if any, your committee think, should be given to this unfortunate man, and they therefore recommend the passage of House bill 4530.

Mr. FOLLETT. Mr. Chairman, this is one of those bills providing for an increase of pension. There is not a member of Congress on this floor who is not applied to daily to assist in obtaining an increase of pension. The fact that a man has a pension is evidence he has a claim recognized by the Pension Office. We are not sitting here to pass on those claims, but simply to grant relief where by some defect in the law equity would require a pension should be granted, but there is a regular method of doing it.

I am not in favor of opening the door for increase of pension where a man is now drawing a pension. There are to-day in every Congressional district in the North hundreds of persons who think they are not drawing as much as they ought to have. We have a tribunal to pass on such cases, the Pension Office, and I object to opening the door on this matter.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. We have examining surgeons.

Mr. FOLLETT. We are paying surgeons at the rate of $2 a day for the examination of these men. There is every facility afforded to them to have this matter agitated properly. If we begin this, and Congress, if it sits for ten years, would not be able to do anything else than attend to claims for increase of pension.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. HEPBURN. I hope not; we have one hundred and nineteen bills on the Calendar.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. We had better rise.

Mr. HEPBURN. We can sit half an hour longer.

Mr. MATSON. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to stay here as long as anybody.

Mr. HORR. We have been successful in passing a great many bills, and it will take some time to pass them through the House.

Mr. KING. We have no session to-morrow.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 11.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to the special order of the House, had under consideration the pension bills on the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report back sundry bills with various recommendations.

BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 4825) for the relief of Rosina Heineman;
A bill (H. R. 4974) for the relief of Sarah Manz;
A bill (H. R. 2432) for the relief of Mrs. Jane Young;
A bill (H. R. 2085) granting a pension to Joseph McIntosh;
A bill (H. R. 2105) granting a pension to John A. Shuckers;
A bill (H. R. 4694) granting a pension to James Clark;
A bill (H. R. 5336) granting a pension to Maria C. McPherson;
A bill (H. R. 5735) granting a pension to Margaret Daily;
A bill (H. R. 1751) for the relief of William R. Browne;
A bill (H. R. 1970) for the relief of Mrs. Alice T. Sherwood;
A bill (H. R. 2660) granting a pension to William Printz;
A bill (H. R. 1396) granting a pension to Frederick Wilhelm, late a sergeant of Company L, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry;
A bill (H. R. 4282) granting a pension to Richard G. Sharp;
A bill (H. R. 6085) granting a pension to John A. Hassell; and
A bill (H. R. 4530) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Foley.

The bill (S. 316) granting a pension to Mrs. Katharina T. Wunsh, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 583) granting a pension to Mrs. Katharina T. Wunsh, was laid on the table.

Amendments reported to the following bills were severally agreed to, and the bills as amended were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 5374) granting a pension to Phillip Wiggins;
A bill (H. R. 1970) for the relief of Mrs. Alice T. Sherwood;
A bill (H. R. 392) granting a pension to Mrs. Charles B. Caddy;
A bill (H. R. 5307) granting a pension to Louisa J. Thompson;
A bill (H. R. 3171) granting a pension to Ella Stolz;
A bill (H. R. 5176) for the relief of James I. Dail;
A bill (H. R. 5172) granting a pension to Mary L. Wells;
A bill (H. R. 3909) granting a pension to George W. Wickwire;
A bill (H. R. 1977) for the relief of Mary L. Hammer;
A bill (H. R. 1998) for the relief of William J. Sawyer; and A bill (H. R. 3892) granting a pension to William B. Keith.

Mr. MATSON moved to reconsider the votes by which the several pension bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. MATSON (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

SATURDAY, May 10, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced his signature of the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, which had been yesterday signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

A bill (S. 2093) to provide for the appointment of an acting secretary of the Smithsonian Institution; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 81) filling an existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

VISITORS TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pursuant to chapter 68 of the acts of Congress of the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, the Chair appoints as Visitors to the Naval Academy for the next annual examination the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON].

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FARLEY presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of California; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Assembly concurrent resolution relative to river and harbor appropriations made by the Congress of the United States for the Pacific coast, and remaining now unexpended.

Whereas it is reported that the Secretary of War refuses to permit the expenditure of the appropriation made by the Congress of the United States of America for the improvement of the Sacramento and other rivers and their tributaries situated within this State;

Whereas the demands of commerce, the interests of the people, and the protection of these great highways of nature imperatively demand that every effort should be made to maintain them, so that their navigation for commercial purposes may be unimpeded and the inauguration of such improvements be made as may best secure that result;

Whereas the flow of débris in the rivers of the State has been restrained, under the decision of the circuit court of the United States, and, therefore, the reason advanced by the War Department, that as long as that was permitted it was useless to expend public moneys in their improvement, no longer exists: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the assemby (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use all honorable means, either by personal application at the War Department, or by action of Congress, to secure, on the part of the Government of the United States, the improvement of the rivers hereinbefore named.

Be it further resolved, That his excellency the governor of the State of California be requested to send a duly certified copy of these resolutions to the Secretary of War, Hon. Robert T. Lincoln, and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

H. M. LA RUE,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN DAGGETT,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

THOMAS L. THOMPSON,
Secretary of State.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a petition of business men, mechanics, laborers, and others connected with the service of the United States at Vallejo and Mare Island navy-yard, California, praying favorable consideration of the bill before Congress to pay employés for extra work under the eight-hour law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of the Fresno (California) Viticultural and Horticultural Association, remonstrating against any reduction in the duty on imported wines and brandies, and praying that the duty on raisins be restored to the rate it was prior to the late reduction; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BLAIR. I present the memorial of ex-Governor Smyth, of New Hampshire, and a large number of business men of the city of Manchester, N. H., in which they "respectfully remonstrate against the enactment of any measure relating to the telegraph which shall increase the number of public officials or establish governmental monopoly of the telegraph business, or which shall employ the functions of Government to destroy the property of individuals who have embarked in legitimate enterprise to provide ample facilities for the public accommodation." I suppose the memorial should be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That committee has reported a bill on the subject, the Chair understands.

Mr. BLAIR. Is there any committee that has a bill of this character pending before it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads had a bill on the subject of a postal-telegraph system before it and has reported.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no such bill before the Committee on the Judiciary?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. None.

Mr. BLAIR. Then the memorial may lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. LAPHAM. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New York, requesting the Senators and Representatives in Congress of that State to endeavor to procure for the State, at its expense, copies of all military records relating to New York volunteers in the war of the rebellion on file in the office of the Secretary of War and not on file in the office of the adjutant-general of the State of New York. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have the resolution read?

Mr. LAPHAM. Let it be printed in the RECORD merely, without being read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before that resolution is referred, I wish to call attention to the fact that a joint resolution passed both Houses allowing the State of Ohio, on the application of its governor, to procure copies of the military records of Ohio volunteers, and that that resolution is pending on a motion to reconsider. I hope the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] will give it attention.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Ohio misunderstood me in speaking about it. The vote has been reconsidered, and the joint resolution is now before the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not know that it had been referred.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has been recommitted and is awaiting action. It was referred to me as a subcommittee, and I had a letter from the adjutant-general or secretary of state of the State of Ohio, I have forgotten which, stating that he would be here soon.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all right.

Mr. COCKRELL. And I have been delaying, hoping to see him and get exactly what was wanted.

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply call attention to it now so that the governor and other officers of the State may not feel that I have neglected what they regard as a pressing matter.

Mr. LAPHAM. Without offering any formal resolution, I ask the Senator from Missouri to consider the memorial I have just presented when that subject is taken up.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator has just presented a memorial on the same question.

Mr. LAPHAM. On the same question, asking that copies of the record relating to New York volunteers be furnished to the State of New York at the expense of the State.

Mr. COCKRELL. If it is referred to me by the Committee on Military Affairs as a subcommittee I shall certainly give it prompt consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks that the concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New York be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That order will be made if there be no objection.

The concurrent resolution is as follows:

IN ASSEMBLY, Albany, April 29, 1884.

Whereas constant application is made to the adjutant-general of this State by relatives and representatives of soldiers who served from the State of New York in the war of the rebellion for official information concerning such soldiers and their said services; and

Whereas the official records concerning such soldiers and services now on file in the office of the adjutant-general of the State are very imperfect and incomplete, and can only be perfected by obtaining from the official records on file in the office of the Secretary of War of the United States such information as is necessary for their completion: Therefore,

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the Senators and Representatives of this State in the Congress of the United States be, and hereby are, requested to endeavor to procure for this State, at its expense, copies of all military records relating to New York volunteers in the war of the rebellion on file in the office of the Secretary of War of the United States and not on file in the office of the adjutant-general of this State; and that the governor of the State be, and hereby is, respectfully requested to communicate a copy of this resolution to each Senator and Representative from this State in the Congress of the United States.

By order.

CHAS. A. CHICKERING, Clerk.

IN SENATE, May 1, 1884.

Concurred in without amendment.

By order.

JOHN W. VROOMAN, Clerk.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 635) for the relief of Theodore C. Hawkins, to ask that it be indefinitely postponed. A House bill on the same subject was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and a report was made favorable to the House bill. I therefore move the indefinite postponement of the Senate bill.

The motion was agreed to.

PAUL STROBACH.

Mr. LOGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, who were directed by a resolution of the Senate of the 16th of April to inquire and report whether Paul Strobach, whose confirmation as marshal of the middle and southern judicial districts of Alabama was rejected by the Senate, is now discharging the duties of that office, and whether he is entitled to execute the powers and duties of the office in place of M. C. Osborn, who was suspended by order of the President in the vacation of the Senate, to submit a report thereon. I think the report ought to be printed in the RECORD, so that it may be seen. I ask permission that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks that the report submitted by him be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection. The report will be placed on file and printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, in response to the following resolution of the Senate, adopted April 16, 1884—

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, April 16, 1884.

On motion by Mr. MORGAN,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire and report whether Paul Strobach, whose confirmation as marshal of the middle and southern judicial districts of Alabama has been rejected by the Senate, is now discharging the duties of that office, and whether he is entitled to execute the powers and duties of such office in the place of M. C. Osborn, who was suspended by order of the President in the recess of the Senate.

Attest:

ANSON G. MCCOOK, Secretary.

respectfully reports:

That at the date of said resolution Paul Strobach was discharging the duties of the office of marshal for the middle and southern judicial districts of Alabama under a designation by the President for that purpose made in March, A. D. 1883.

This designation was made pursuant to section 1768 of the Revised Statutes, which is in the following words:

"During any recess of the Senate the President is authorized in his discretion to suspend any civil officer appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, except judges of the courts of the United States, until the end of the next session of the Senate, and to designate some suitable person, subject to be removed, in his discretion, by the designation of another to perform the duties of such suspended officer in the mean time; and the person so designated shall take the oath and give the bond required by law to be taken and given by the suspended officer, and shall, during the time he performs the duties of such office, be entitled to the salary and emoluments of the office, no part of which shall belong to the officer suspended. The President shall within thirty days after the commencement of each session of the Senate, except for any office which in his opinion ought not to be filled, nominate persons to fill all vacancies in office which existed at the meeting of the Senate, whether temporarily filled or not, and also in the place of all officers suspended; and if the Senate during such session shall refuse to advise and consent to an appointment in the place of any suspended officer, then, and not otherwise, the President shall nominate another person as soon as practicable to the same session of the Senate for the office."

Mr. Osborn was appointed and commissioned marshal for that district by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, April 16, 1880, for the term of four years, and at the time of the above-mentioned designation of Strobach the term of Osborn as such marshal had not expired. The designation of Strobach was, therefore, in the opinion of the committee, in strict conformity with law.

On the 18th December, 1883, Strobach was nominated by the President for appointment as marshal in the place of Osborn, which nomination was rejected by the Senate on the 5th February, 1884. Soon after the rejection of Strobach Osborn, the suspended marshal, applied to the district court for the middle district of Alabama to be reinstated in the exercise of the duties of his office, which application the court, by a decision rendered on the 16th February, 1884, denied, on the ground that the rejection of Strobach by the Senate did not affect the question of the suspension of Osborn nor the right of Strobach to continue to exercise the functions of the office at that time.

The committee is of opinion that this decision of the district court was correct.

The term for which Marshal Osborn was appointed expired on the 16th day of April, 1884. The question whether Strobach was entitled, under the aforesaid designation, to continue to exercise the duties of the office after a vacancy occasioned by the expiration of Osborn's term had occurred, has not been decided. The section of the Revised Statutes above set forth provides that the President may suspend a civil officer of this character (among others) until the end of the next session of the Senate, and may designate some suitable person to perform the duties of such suspended officer in the mean time.

It does not in terms provide what shall be the consequence of the expiration of the term of the officer suspended, nor does it provide for such a designation in the case of a vacancy. The committee is of opinion that, although the language of the act speaks of the suspension of the officer until the end of the next session of the Senate, in order to give these terms their natural and legal significance, the true construction of the act must be that the power of suspension can exist only so long as the legal term of the suspended officer continues, and that when the official character of the suspended officer ceases to exist, either by death, expiration of term, or otherwise, the suspension in both its legal and natural sense can no longer exist. And the committee is of opinion that inasmuch as the designation of another person to perform the duties of the suspended officer depends upon the state of suspension continuing to exist, the legal termination of the suspension legally terminates the official rights and functions of the designated person.

It follows from the foregoing considerations, in the opinion of the committee, that Mr. Strobach was not, after the 16th day of April, 1884 (being the day of the termination of the official term of Osborn as marshal), legally entitled to execute the powers and duties of such office in the place of Osborn or under such designation.

Another statute of the United States (Revised Statutes, section 793) provides that—

"In case of a vacancy in the office of the district attorney or marshal within any circuit, the circuit justice of such circuit may fill the same, and the person appointed by him shall serve until an appointment is made by the President and the appointee is duly qualified, and no longer."

In conclusion, the committee is of opinion that after the expiration of the term of Osborn and during the session of the Senate, no person can lawfully exercise the duties of that office until he shall have been apointed thereto either by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by the circuit justice of that circuit, in conformity with section 793 of the Revised Statutes.

The committee appends hereto the letter of the Attorney-General to the Senate in response to its resolution of inquiry, and a letter of the Attorney-General dated 6th May, 1884, to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, on the same subject.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, May 6, 1884.

SIR: I am in receipt of your telegrams of to-day, and to your first inquiry, namely, "Whether Paul Strobach is now performing the duties of United States marshal for the middle district of Alabama, and if he is, whether he is acting under the old designation?" I have the honor to state that Mr. Strobach, as far as I know, is at present acting as marshal for the said district, and I presume under the old designation, as I know of no other. The latest communication I have from him is dated May 3, 1884, which he signs as United States marshal.

In reply to your second telegram, I would state that I am unable to furnish a copy of the President's order designating Mr. Strobach as marshal. An entry of the fact was made in this Department that such order was made by the President and the date of it, and the original was sent to the judge of the district court for the said district for delivery upon the official oath being taken and bond given, as is the necessary and usual custom.

I have also to state, in answer to your inquiry as to the date of the expiration of the term of office of M. C. Osborn, that his commission as United States marshal is dated April 16, 1880, and that he took the oath of office April 28, 1880. Four years from either of these dates would terminate Mr. Osborn's commission in April, 1884.

Very respectfully,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
United States Senate.

Letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in answer to Senate resolution of April 1, information relating to the office of marshal for the middle and southern districts of Alabama.

April 15, 1884, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, April 10, 1884.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE:

In reply to the resolution of the United States Senate of April 1, 1884, I have the honor to state:

1. That the question whether there now exists a vacancy in the office of United States marshal for the middle and southern districts of Alabama is a question of law, which was presented to, and has been passed upon by, the United States judge for the three districts of Alabama in the negative. I inclose a copy of the opinion of the court for the further information of the Senate.

2. The duties of that office are now being performed by Paul Strobach, esq., who was designated as marshal by the President March 17, 1883. The said Paul Strobach is acting as marshal under the authority of this designation and of the opinion of the court above referred to. The decision of the court was rendered February 16, 1884.

3. The said Paul Strobach was indicted in the circuit court for the middle district of Alabama for making and presenting false claims against the United States and for perjury.

I inclose a copy of the docket entries of said court respecting these indictments, showing the number of such indictments, the date of filing, and the disposition of the cases. Four of the cases, namely, Nos. 1931, 1932, 1933, and 1935 were consolidated and tried together. The defendant was acquitted June 9, 1883.

On December 17, 1883, I filed the opinion and order of which I inclose a copy. A copy of this was sent to the United States attorney for the middle and southern districts of Alabama on January 21, 1884. In accordance with it the remaining indictments against the said Paul Strobach were discontinued February 25, 1884.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, January 21, 1884.

SIR: Herewith I inclose the order of the Attorney-General in the matter of the prosecution of Paul Strobach for the presentation of alleged fraudulent accounts while acting as a special deputy marshal under George Turner.

Very respectfully,

S. F. PHILLIPS,
Acting Attorney-General.

WILLIAM H. SMITH, Esq.,
United States Attorney, Montgomery, Ala.

The Strobach indictments—Attorney-General Brewster's reason for the nolprossing.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., December 17, 1883.

Because of the outcry made by Mr. Strobach and the published statements that he had been persecuted, and because Mr. Strobach charged that he was prosecuted maliciously by the general agent of this Department and the examiners of the Department, and by the district attorney in Alabama, Mr. William H. Smith, after the report of the district attorney as to the result of Mr. Strobach's trial, and after the receipt of the stenographic notes of that trial, with the judge's charge, I directed Mr. Blair, an assistant of Mr. Simons in the Court of Claims, and an officer of this Department, to make a most thorough investigation into the merits of the case, and for that purpose submitted all of those papers to him, with instructions to report to me in writing on them. Having examined the matter, Mr. Blair reported that, in his opinion, Mr. Strobach ought to have been convicted, and also that the charges of persecution were not made good.

Mr. Blair having reported, I then directed the stenographic notes of the trial, together with the charge of the judge, to be laid before Mr. Maury and Mr. Bentley, both of them responsible and high officials of the law in this Department, and required them (without disclosing to them my purpose or object or opinion) to examine and report as to whether or not the verdict was a proper one, and they reported it was not a proper one, and in their opinion the defendant ought to have been convicted on three at least of the four counts in the indictments. This being done, I sent Mr. Blair to Alabama to inquire into the merits not only of the case against Mr. Strobach but into the conduct of all the officers of the Department who had been accused by Mr. Strobach. Upon his return from Montgomery, having acquired a personal knowledge by personal inspection upon the ground, and by inquiring from and of all who were there who knew of the whole matter, he continued of the same opinion, and reported that the verdict was contrary to the evidence in the case, and that there should have been a conviction; and he likewise, in his report, exonerated the officers complained of, especially naming Mr. Cameron, the general agent of the Department.

This all being done from abundance of caution, I laid the whole matter before the Solicitor-General of the United States and Mr. Simons, the attorney for the Department of Justice in the Court of Claims. They, too, examined the subject with care, and both agreed that the acquittal was contrary to the evidence, and that the man ought to have been convicted, and they further suggested and reported that there ought to be a trial upon some one of the pending indictments, even if it resulted in an acquittal, thinking that the ends of justice required that at least.

During these examinations I expressed to none of these gentlemen any opinion upon the subject, but I purposely abstained from even forming one. It is now my duty to pass upon it, and I do so. It is plain to me that there could have been no malicious feeling toward this man, inasmuch as the officers who first investigated his accounts and detected his offenses went to Montgomery in the ordinary course of their duty, without having any knowledge of him whatever, or of any one connected with him, and never having been brought in contact with him until they undertook the examination of those accounts.

The general agent, too, was unacquainted with him, knew nothing of him or of anybody connected with him, and after the report made by the examiners, and after the district attorney had indicted him, was by my special order detailed to go to Montgomery and see to the prosecution of the complaints, being especially cautioned in the first instance by me verbally, and then by telegraph and by letter, to see that Mr. Strobach was fairly tried, without any appearance of official pressure or hostile feeling by the Department through its agents.

The district attorney preferred the bills of indictment, having examined the subject, and the grand jury found them. The man was tried, and during the course of the trial, and afterward, a great clamor was raised in his behalf, asserting that he was unjustly and wickedly prosecuted. Why he could have been unjustly and wickedly prosecuted I cannot see. There was no motive or purpose to answer that could have prompted any one of those who originated and conducted the prosecution. He was prosecuted as a legal necessity. It was the duty of the agents of the Department, having found these causes of original complaint, to pursue them in the ordinary and orderly course of criminal litigation, just as other marshals have been pursued and punished.

I do not believe that the charges preferred by Mr. Strobach against the two examiners and against the general agent are true. And I concur in the judgment of Mr. Blair upon this subject, a judgment derived from an actual investigation made by himself upon the spot, with all the means of knowledge that could be or ought to be procured for the purpose of arriving at a correct conclusion. He was instructed by me specially in writing to uncover and expose any act of oppression or malice toward Mr. Strobach that appeared to have been committed by any of these agents, or by the district attorney, and his report was emphatic upon this subject.

The district attorney having been charged with an unjust feeling against Mr. Strobach, I say that I have seen no evidence of it.

Mr. Blair, as well as the district attorney of Alabama and his colleague, having expressed an opinion that the pending and untried bills, if tried, would result in an acquittal; Mr. Blair, deriving his opinions from what he learned in Alabama, was convinced that while Mr. Strobach was marshal no other practical result could be reached than an acquittal. In addition to that it has been suggested in these various reports by these different officers that most of the charges in these untried indictments were in effect disposed of in the trial already had, and that the facts and the intent charged in these untried indictments as criminal acts were virtually passed on in the verdict already rendered. If that is so, it would be an improper thing to try them again, as it would be retrying a man upon charges of which he was acquitted.

In view of all this, and to save great expense, I have concluded to direct that these cases be abandoned, seeing no practical result that would be answered by another trial, and thinking it would be improper, illegal, and unjust to try a man where there is even a doubt if the issue has not been determined in his favor in a former trial.

It is said that Robert Barber ought to have been indicted with Mr. Strobach. Assuming that to be so, Robert Barber, it appears, was not indicted because he was necessary as a witness, and the district attorney in the exercise of his discretion used him for that purpose. This was proper and lawful.

But the district attorney has, in my judgment, committed an act which he ought not to have done. Robert Barber, it is admitted, was concerned in these transactions with Mr. Strobach, and had a guilty knowledge of all that was charged as guilty acts, and he has allowed him, notwithstanding that, to remain in his employment in his public office, aiding in public business. That I object to, and I directed him to remove Robert Barber from any connection with that office. I can not consent that a person who has been so compromised as Barber has been with these charges—charges that the district attorney still maintains were true charges—shall be allowed in the remotest way to be associated with the district attorney's office in the very district where the offenses were committed, and I require the district attorney to remove him forthwith. The very fact of his being retained gives color to the accusation that he had been shielded by the district attorney, who had a purpose in prosecuting Mr. Strobach, while he unjustly exonerated Mr. Barber. The district attorney no doubt permitted a kind feeling for Mr. Barber to rule him. He was reluctant to do a harsh thing; he intended to do no wrong.

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

P. S. This opinion and order was prepared on the 17th of December, 1883. I laid it aside for reflection and suspended action, and while I was absent on public business in New Orleans Mr. George Turner, representing Mr. Strobach, called on me recently, and on two occasions stated that my suspended action as to these pending bills of indictment stood in the way of the action of the Senate on Mr. Strobach's confirmation. Hearing this, I have again taken this up, and I have, with some misgivings, concluded to say I will order the indictments to be nolprossed. I do so because the district attorney's convictions can not be had, and because, also, there is a doubt if the former trial did not dispose of them, and to avoid expense in an experimental prosecution when it is my duty to reduce expenses.

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER.

In the district court of the United States for the middle district of Alabama, in the matter of the marshalship for the southern and middle districts of Alabama.

Heard on motion of Matthias C. Osborn, former marshal, to be recognized and held by the court as now entitled to resume the duties of that office.

BRUCE, J.:

Matthias C. Osborn was nominated by the then President of the United States to the Senate for the office of marshal of the middle and southern districts of Alabama, and was confirmed by the Senate in the year 1880. He qualified by taking the oath and giving the bond as required by law, and continued to hold and exercise the duties of the office of United States marshal for the middle and southern districts of Alabama until the 17th day of March, 1883, when he was suspended from the office by the order of the President of the United States, and Paul Strobach was designated to perform the duties of the office in the mean time.

Paul Strobach qualified by giving the bond and taking the oath of office required by law, and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office, and has continued to discharge the duties of the office from that date until the present time.

The suspension of Osborn and the designation of Strobach to perform the duties of the office occurred during the recess of the Senate, and the suspension of Osborn was on terms until the end of the next session of the Senate, and the designation of Paul Strobach was to perform the duties of the office in the mean time, subject to all the provisions of law applicable thereto.

The President of the United States, within thirty days after the commencement of the present session of the Senate, in December last, nominated Paul Strobach to the Senate for the marshalship in the place of the suspended officer, Osborn, and on the 5th day of the present month of February, 1884, the Senate rejected the nomination of Paul Strobach for the office to which the President had nominated him to the Senate.

That this rejection is conclusive against Mr. Strobach for the office of marshal under what may be called a permanent appointment—meaning by that a nomination by the President and confirmation by the Senate—is quite clear, because the statute provides (section 1768) that "if the Senate during such session shall refuse to advise and consent to an appointment in the place of any suspended officer, then, and not otherwise, the President shall nominate another person as soon as practicable to the same session of the Senate for the office."

But the question is, what effect has this rejection of the Senate of the nomination of Paul Strobach to the office of marshal at and during the present session of the Senate upon what may be called his temporary appointment, or his designation by the President to perform the duties of the office during the suspension of Marshal Osborn.

The President's power to suspend is not questioned, and his power to make what is called a temporary appointment is not questioned.

The first clause of section 1768 of the Revised Statutes provides: "During any recess of the Senate, the President is authorized in his discretion to suspend any civil officer appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate * * * until the end of the next session of the Senate, and to designate some suitable person * * * to perform the duties of such suspended officer in the mean time."

The statute then authorizes the President to suspend and make a temporary appointment until the end of the next session of the Senate, and he has done so, Mr. Strobach being that appointee, and he holds the office now under such appointment.

The Senate has not acted upon that temporary appointment, nor does it appear that the Senate has any power or authority under existing law to act directly upon such temporary appointment or designation. True, if the President nominates and the Senate confirms the nomination, then the person so nominated and confirmed to the office could qualify, take the office, and so cut short the term of the temporary appointee, and Mr. Strobach could not hold the office against such appointee.

But Mr. Osborn does not stand in that position to the office, for though he has been nominated and confirmed to the office, yet he has also since then, and during a recess of the Senate, been suspended by the President of the United States from the office of marshal until the end of the present session of the Senate, and in doing so the President was acting clearly within the authority conferred upon him by law.

This power given by law to the President was no doubt given for good reasons. It will occur to any one on a moment's reflection that the good of the public service might very often render it imperative that the President should have and exercise such power; and under existing law the Senate, when it convenes, has no more power or authority to act upon the President's order suspending an officer under section 1767 than it had to act upon the designation of the person by the President to perform the duties of the office in the mean time.

The idea that seems to underlie the argument of counsel for the motion is that when the President suspends an officer and makes a temporary appointment in the recess of the Senate, then upon the meeting of the Senate it must act upon such suspension and temporary appointment; and if the Senate declines concurrence in such suspension and appointment, then the suspended officer forthwith resumes the functions of the office, and the temporary appointment is at once terminated. That is an error, perhaps a popular one, and may grow out of the fact that such was the provision of the first tenure-of-office act of Congress, approved March 2, 1867. But that act was materially modified and changed by a subsequent act of Congress approved April 5, 1869, which is the law as we now have it in sections 1767, 1768, 1769 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

An examination of the act of April 5, 1869, shows that the clauses restrictive of the President's power in the act of March, 1869, were omitted from the later act, which does not provide that when the President suspends an officer and designates some suitable person to perform temporarily the duties of such office it shall be until the next meeting of the Senate and until the case shall be acted on by the Senate, but the language is until the end of the next session of the Senate; nor does the present act require the President within twenty days after the first day of the meeting of the Senate to report to the Senate such suspension, with the evidence and reasons for his action in the case; nor is it provided in the present law that if the Senate shall refuse to concur in such suspension such officer so suspended shall forthwith resume the functions of his office, and the powers of the person so performing the duties in his stead shall cease.

These clauses restrictive of the President's power, found in the first tenure-of-office act, were repealed by the latter act and are not now the law; and the original act was passed and subsequently modified and changed for reasons familiar to those who were actors in or who may be students of the history of that time.

These acts to which reference has just been made are of comparatively recent date, and there is perhaps but little judicial authority upon their construction; but a number of authorities have been cited upon the power of the President under article 2, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "the President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session."

Section 1769 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides:

"The President is authorized to fill all vacancies which may happen during the recess of the Senate by reason of death or resignation or expiration of term of office by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session thereafter."

The language used in the Constitution and in section 1769, in reference to the power of the President to fill vacancies, is very much the same language used in the act under consideration authorizing the President to make temporary appointments in cases of suspended officers.

The authorities on this subject—that is, the nature and duration of a temporary appointment made by the President to fill a vacancy—are, that a commission issued by the President during a recess of the Senate continues until the end of the next session of Congress, unless sooner determined by the President, even though the person commissioned shall have been in the mean time nominated by the President to the office and his nomination rejected. (United States vs. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheaton, 721; Issac Hill, 2 Opin. Att'y Gen'l U. S., 336; Gilpin vs. O'Neil, 8 Inter. Rev. Record, 137; Ex-parte Hennen, 13 Peters, 230.)

It is said this is not a vacancy, and it is true that it is not a vacancy in the absolute sense, such as results from the death, resignation, or expiration of term of office of the incumbent of the office, as contemplated by section 1769 of the Revised Statutes.

In a case of the suspension of an officer there are contingencies upon the happening of which the suspended officer may resume the duties of the office, that is, where the Senate fails or refuses consent and advice to the nomination for office made by the President, and if this failure or refusal continues until the end of the session, and the former incumbent's time has not then expired, he will then, and not till then, resume the duties of the office.

Whether it be a vacancy caused by the death, resignation, or expiration of term of office of the incumbent of the office, or whether it be a suspension of an officer by the President under section 1769, in either case the duration of the temporary appointment is the same; it is to the close of the session of the Senate, subject, as we have seen, to a concurrence of opinion and action by the President and the Senate, by the nomination and confirmation of a person other than the rejected nominee to the position.

Some confusion arises because the same person designated for the temporary appointment was in this case nominated to the Senate for the permanent appointment; but suppose the President, after having designated Mr. Strobach for the temporary appointment, had nominated Mr. T. for the permanent appointment, and the Senate had rejected Mr. T. just as it has rejected Mr. Strobach for the permanent appointment, could it be held that the rejection by the Senate of Mr. T. for the permanent appointment affected the temporary appointment of Mr. Strobach?

To ask the court to terminate the temporary appointment of Mr. Strobach because the United States Senate has rejected him for the permanent appointment is to ask the court to act without law or logic, and the proposition is not only to do that, but also to terminate the suspension of Mr. Osborn and authorize him to resume the duties of the office, which is equally without the authority of law.

The answer to all that is that the President of the United States has, for reasons which the court will presume to have been sufficient, suspended Mr. Osborn until the close of the present session of the Senate, and has designated Mr. Strobach as a suitable person to perform the duties of the office in the mean time.

The case of Embry (100 U. S.) is relied on by both sides in support of their respective positions.

That case is not conclusive here, because the question here was not involved and barely touched upon in the opinion of the court.

The result of these views is that the motion is denied.

Attest:

Dated this 4th day of April, A. D. 1884.

[SEAL.] J. W. DIMMICK, Clerk.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2197) granting a pension to Michael Lane; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

LOTTERY ADVERTISEMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no "concurrent or other resolutions" that order is closed. The Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The bill (S. 1017) to prohibit the mailing of newspapers and other publications containing lottery advertisements, and prescribing a penalty for the violation of the same, was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. JACKSON. We shall hardly have time to consider the bill this morning before the Senate will be compelled to adjourn to take part in the ceremonies of the day. I suggest that it go over until Monday without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. WILSON. I hope that the suggestion made by the Senator from Tennessee will be agreed to, and that the bill may retain its place on the Calendar and go over until Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that this order of business be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar where it nows stands. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What has become of the shipping bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question on the shipping bill was, by unanimous consent, yesterday postponed until Monday next at 2 o'clock, to stand as the unfinished business at that time.

Mr. HOAR. I was not present when that consent was given.

ABBY P. ARNOLD.

The bill (S. 764) granting an increase of pension to Abby P. Arnold was announced as in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill is reported adversely. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that there was an agreement that this bill should stand until the return of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. COCKRELL. All right, then; I have no objection to let it stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

PUYALLUP RRANCH OF NORTHERN PACIFIC.

Mr. CONGER. At what time would the resolution which went over at the close of the morning hour yesterday come up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. According to the understanding of the Chair, by the force of the new rules, after it had been objected to one day and had gone over, remaining on the desk of the presiding officer, and laid before the Senate on the next day, and then having been displaced and not taken up again before 2 o'clock of that day, it goes on the Calendar of General Orders, where it now is, like any other case on the Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. On this Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the General Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. And will not come up this morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not come up unless by a vote of the Senate to take it up. A motion to take it up at any time before 2 o'clock is in order.

Mr. CONGER. The reason why I inquired is that I shall be absent, and I wish to be here when the resolution is taken up.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will say to the Senator that it will not be moved until Monday.

Mr. CONGER. Very well.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. BLAIR. As there seems to be nothing that any one is inclined to take up this morning on account of the limited time, I suggest that we go through the Calendar with reference to pension cases, and consider the unobjected pension cases. There are but few of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed seriatim to the consideration of the pension cases reported favorably and now on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. And unobjected to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And not objected to. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The first pension case on the Calendar reported favorably will now be laid before the Senate.

SAMUEL C. WRIGHT.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that we begin where we left off before. We went partly over the pension cases once before. Let the call begin where it was left off before.

Mr. BLAIR. The first I observe is Order of Business 506. There may be one earlier.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Order of Business 506, being House bill No. 2267, is at this moment thought to be the first case.

The bill (H. R. 2267) granting an increase of pension to Samuel C. Wright was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Samuel C. Wright, late a sergeant of Company E, Twenty-ninth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, at the rate of $40 per month, instead of $24 per month, which he has heretofore been receiving.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR April 22, 1884:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2267) granting an increase of pension to Samuel C. Wright, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

The principal facts in the case, as shown by the papers before the committee, appear to be correctly set forth in the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives made during the present session (H. R. No. 345), which is annexed and made a part of this report:

"Samuel C. Wright enlisted at Plymouth, Mass., May 6, 1861, into an unattached company, which afterward was attached to the Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Infantry, and lettered E. He was discharged February 3, 1865, serving some three years and nine months. The history of this soldier discloses a list of wounds and casualties, the effects of which, increasing with years, render him at the present time unfit for and unable to perform any manual labor.

"His record shows that he was wounded in the head at White Oak Swamp, January 30, 1862, by a fragment of shell. He was next wounded at Antietam, September 17, 1862, in the left leg, at knee, while volunteering with some sixty others to pull down the fence previous to the charge into the "Cornfield," so called; and though told by his officers to go to the hospital, refused so to do, and kept with his regiment, receiving treatment from the surgeon of the regiment.

"In June, 1863, he became worn down by hard marching and fell by the roadside unconscious, from which condition he did not recover until some two weeks after, when he found himself in Overton hospital, Tennessee, sick with typhoid fever, from the effects of which he has never fully recovered.

"In October, 1863, while returning to his regiment from Overton hospital, and while in line of duty he was run over by a six-mule team and army-wagon near Camps Nelson and Dick Robinson, which broke the bones and cords of the left foot, injuring him also internally, and from the effects of which he is lame today, besides being compelled to wear a truss for support of his bowels. He was next wounded at Cold Harbor in the left arm by a rifle ball, and was treated at his regiment by the surgeon.

"At the (crater) 'Battle of the Mine' he was wounded again by a rifle-ball, which destroyed his right eye, the ball passing through to the back of his head, was left for dead on the field, and so reported. (See Adjutant-General's report Massachusetts three years' volunteers.) He was taken from the mine on a stretcher to his home, and was in bed under the doctor's care for eighteen months of the next two years, spending in that time $2,000 for physicians, surgeons, and opticians in the endeavor to save his other eye.

"He is borne on the pension-roll at $24 per month (certificate No. 39469), which he felt was not commensurate with his increasing disability. He applied for an increase, which was rejected for the reason that he was receiving the full amount he was entitled to under the law.

"In February, 1882, he had a partial stroke of paralysis (certificate of doctor filed) on the left side, rendering his leg almost useless, and since which time he has been compelled to accept a minor position from that in which he had been employed and at a loss of $540 per year to him, and that the duty he now performs is one requiring but one hour in writing per day, and which he only succeeds in accomplishing by the greatest effort on his part, sometimes being compelled, as testified to by those in the office with him, to lie down several times while doing the hour's work required in making his return, such is his pain and suffering from his wound in head.

"The evidence in this case is, namely:

"Dr. Underwood reports: 'Claimant unable to do any labor.'

"Dr. Jackson certifies:

"'Ball entered right temple, passing through the brain to back of cranium, whence it was extracted through original wound. Loss of right eye. Wound occasionally opens to discharge small pieces of bone. The least effort is attended with severe pain in head, and a continuance of effort increases the severity of pain until partial loss of use of limbs results, with confusion of intellect. The least deviation from a strictly quiet life is followed by suffering.'

"The board of examining surgeons at Boston, Mass., certifies:

"'He has practically loss of right eye, and deficient vision of left eye. It is impossible to rate separately the eye and wound of the head, as they were both caused by same ball.'

"It seems that he is estopped under the law from receiving more than $24 per month, for the reason that while practically disabled for performance of manual labor he does do light work requiring but one hour per day, but accomplished with great pain and suffering, and which he is required to do by force of circumstances to obtain subsistence for his wife and family.

"Appended is a copy of a letter of Brig. Gen. Joseph H. Barnes, former commander of Sergeant Wright's regiment.

"Your committee are satisfied that this is a most deserving case, and one which it is impossible to do justice to under existing laws. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment to substitute 'forty dollars' instead of fifty per month, as printed in the bill."

Certificate of Dr. J. H. Barnes.

This is to certify that Samuel C. Wright served in the Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry during the war of the rebellion.

His record in the Army was peculiarly eventful and honorable. He entered the service in the month of May, 1861, and was discharged in March, 1865, serving continuously in one regiment nearly four years. He participated in many of the most important campaigns of the war; was present at the four famous sieges of Richmond, Vicksburg, Knoxville, and Petersburg, and was engaged in twenty-one pitched battles. He was four times wounded in action, namely, at the battle of White Oak Swamp, in head by a shell; at Antietam, in leg by shell; at Cold Harbor, in arm by a rifle-shot; and at the battle of the mine, very badly in the head by a rifle-shot. Here he was left on the field for dead, and was so officially reported. His wounds, which are plainly visible, still cause him much suffering.

He was twice promoted for gallantry in action, and he certainly was in every respect one of the very best soldiers in the Army, brave, faithful, and reliable under all circumstances, and always prompt and cheerful in the performance of any duty, however hazardous or arduous.

During the greater portion of Mr. Wright's term of service, and in each of the battles in which he was wounded, I commanded the regiment in which he served, and have therefore an intimate personal knowedge of his entire record in the Army, and I do not hesitate to say that whatever credit is to be awarded to the best soldiers of the Republic, or whatever consideration they are to receive, belongs in the fullest sense to him.

J. H. BARNES.

Your committee have also before them testimonals from prominent citizens where claimant resides, showing that this is a very meritorious claim, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The actual disabilities of this soldier are of so high a degree that we consider the rate of $40 per month no more than is just, irrespective of the gallant and meritorious conduct shown by his record.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERASTUS W. BABSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senate to the fact that on page 13 of the Calendar, Orders of Business 405, 406, and 407, are pension cases with favorable reports. The Chair understands they have been once reached under a former call of pension cases and were then objected to. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Missouri to desire them to be passed over on his reservation?

Mr. COCKRELL. I asked that we might go on from the point we commenced and get through with the bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. Order of Business 406, being Senate bill 772, was not objected to, as I understand. There is no minority report and no objection on the part of the committee. It is a unanimous report, and I move to take it up, omitting the other two cases where there was a minority report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unanimous understanding, as the Chair stated, was that the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar in their order, such as were not objected to and were favorably reported. The Chair called attention to these bills from the circumstance that the Chair understands from the clerks that each one of these three bills had been previously laid before the Senate and objected to.

Mr. BLAIR. Had the consideration of Senate bill 772 been objected to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair understands from the Chief Clerk.

Mr. BLAIR. I hardly think that is correct, because it is a unanimous report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The minute made on the bill at the time shows that some Senator objected to its consideration and it went over.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to take up that case. I am not aware of any real objection to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 772) granting a pension to Erastus W. Babson. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Erastus W. Babson, late a private in Company A, Twelfth Rhode Island Volunteers.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR March 24, 1884:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 772) granting a pension to Erastus W. Babson, have considered the same, and report:

The claimant, Erastus W. Babson, enlisted in Company A, Twelfth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteers, September 24, 1862, and served until discharged, July 29, 1863. He applied for a pension, alleging that at or near Liverpool Point, Maryland, about December 7, 1862, he was ruptured in left side while on a long march through the mud from Camp Casey, near Fairfax Seminary, to Fredericksburg. He was armorer, with the wagons containing ammunition and army stores, and incurred the disability in helping to lift the army wagons out of the mud.

The claim was rejected by the Pension Office because the records of the War Department fail to show the existence of hernia in the service, and the parol evidence was deemed insufficient to establish origin in line of duty.

The claimant on oath alleges that he was a sound man when he enlisted, and this is corroborated by Dr. Ossian Sumner, who knew him for five years prior to enlistment, had prescribed for him, and knows he had no rupture; also by two acquaintances, who had worked with him and one of whom had been in bathing with him; also by the captain of his company, and two comrades who had opportunities of knowing the facts before and after his enlistment.

The claimant swears that he incurred a rupture as above stated; that he was treated by Surgeons Carpenter and King, but was not in a hospital, and that he got along as best he could till a year after his discharge, when his hernia grew worse, and he then consulted physicians and has since been treated and worn a truss.

Surgeon Carpenter is dead. Surgeon King makes affidavit that he remembers treating Babson for some injury in his tent about February, 1863, but has no record of and can not remember what it was. That is the extent of the medical evidence to origin in line of duty.

Corporal Tillinghast, of claimant's company, tented with him, and remembers that about December 7, 1862, after a long march through the mud, claimant showed affiant a rupture in left side of abdomen incurred on said march. Tillinghast was not with Babson on the march, but knows he must have incurred the rupture at that time. Comrade Thurber distinctly remembers that one night, about December 7 or 9, before reaching Fredericksburg, claimant, who was tenting with him, complained for the first time of a strain, and that he felt a "giving way" in the lower part of the belly, and with his hands on that part said he was "busted up." Comrade Richards swears that in the latter part of December, 1862, after the battle of Fredericksburg, claimant told him that he had a rupture in the left side, incurred on the march just before that battle, and showed a swelling of unnatural appearance on the left lower side of the belly. Comrade Leach was detailed to assist Babson as armorer about the last of December, 1862, and was then shown the rupture and told it was incurred on the hard, muddy march just before the battle of Fredericksburg, which he believes, as he knew claimant since and before his enlistment.

Two physicians testify to treating the claimant since March, 1880, for hernia, left side, which disables him from manual labor in a large degree. The examining board rated his disability in 1881 at one-half.

The Pension Office, not satisfied with the proof submitted, detailed a special examiner in April, 1883, to proceed to the home of the claimant and examine fully into the case in order to determine its merits. A large amount of testimony was taken, and the examiner concluded his report by saying:

"If Mr. Tillinghast, whose reputation for truth is well vouched for, on cross-examination sustains all that he has said in his affidavit, I shall be of opinion that the case should be admitted."

Mr. Tillinghast, living at a distance, was cross-examined by another agent very critically, and admitted that he did not see the breach until about the time they were discharged, but did see it then. Otherwise his former evidence was not materially impeached, and his reputation for truth is admitted to be good.

Since the rejection by the Pension Office, the affidavit of Colonel Browne, of claimant's regiment, was filed, in which he states as follows:

"I remember that soon after our arrival at Falmouth, opposite Fredericksburg, Va., about December 9, 1862, claimant came to me and complained that he had ruptured himself on the march from Washington there, and I referred him to Surgeon Carpenter. Babson, being so faithful and useful a man, I inquired of Surgeon Carpenter (who is now dead) about Babson's complaint, and the surgeon told me that Babson had ruptured himself and that I must favor him, which I did after that. I remember these facts distinctly, because I was troubled lest I should lose Babson's services in taking care of the arms of the regiment. * * * I feel if any one is entitled to a pension on account of faithful and conscientious services and disabilities incurred in the Army, Babson ought to have one."

Your committee are of the opinion that the evidence satisfactorily shows that the claimant contracted the disability, which still continues, in the service and in line of duty, and therefore report back the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. HOAR. I inquire whether it is necessary to read the report further? Does the Senator from Iowa care about hearing the evidence upon which the Committee on Pensions unanimously found that a man had not a certain disorder before he entered the service? That is all there is in the report.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The Senator from Iowa waives a further call for the reading.

Mr. GROOME. I move to add to the bill the words "and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GROOME].

Mr. BLAIR. There is no objection to adding those words except that they are unnecessary. There is a general law which provides that a bill passed in this way takes effect from its passage. If the Senator thinks it important, there is no objection, as it is a Senate bill, and amending it will not occasion any delay.

Mr. GROOME. It is certainly nearly always done, and I think it most prudent to do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAIR subsequently said: I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 772) granting a pension to Erastus W. Babson was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered; or does the Senator desire to have the question taken now?

Mr. BLAIR. I wish simply to enter the motion. I will state the reason of it to be that I find on examining the RECORD that the objection made the other day was by myself. The name was not familiar to me, and I forgot that I had made the objection. It was by reason of the death of the applicant that objection was then made, and the bill was postponed in order that it might perhaps be amended by substituting the name of the wife.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

A. M. WILSON.

Mr. BLAIR. The next in order is Senate bill 282, being Order of Business 508.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 282) granting a pension to A. M. Wilson. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of A. M. Wilson, father of James Wilson, deceased, late a private in the Fourteenth Regiment of Kansas Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

N. J. INGERSOLL.

Mr. BLAIR. The next is Order of Business 509, being Senate bill 670.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 670) granting an increase of pension to N. J. Ingersoll. It provides that N. J. Ingersoll, late of Company F, Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, now receiving a pension of $50 per month for disease of the spine which renders him utterly helpless, shall receive in lieu thereof the sum of $72 per month.

It is further provided that N. J. Ingersoll shall be paid the difference between $72 per month and the amount already received by him from the 17th of June, 1878, to the time of the taking effect of the act.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to add to section 1 the words:

The increase herein provided for to take effect from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK GRAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1339) granting a pension to Frank Gray. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Frank Gray as of the grade of second lieutenant.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the report read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SLATER April 25, 1884:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1339) granting a pension to Frank Gray, having examined the same, beg leave to submit the following report:

That Frank Gray was some time in September, 1864, ordered before a board of officers at Lexington, Ky., for examination as to his qualification for appointment as an officer of United States Colored Troops; that he was examined and passed for an appointment as a captain; that a certificate was duly issued and forwarded to Adjutant-General L. Thomas, requesting the issue of a commission.

That he was at once ordered by General Burbridge to duty on his staff, and accompanied him in an expedition from Lexington, Ky., into the State of Virginia, and did not return until January, 1865, by reason of which he failed to actually receive his commission until after the disability complained of had been received.

A report from the Adjutant-General's Office shows the following as to the service of Frank Gray in the Army:

"1. Special Order No. 55, of November 6, 1864, military district of Kentucky (Brevet Major-General Burbridge, commanding), directing Lieut. F. Gray, United States Colored Infantry, to proceed to Frankfort, Ky., on special duty, for which he had received verbal instructions. The Quartermaster's Department was directed to furnish transportation; Lieutenant Gray to return as soon as practicable.

"2. Letter from Brevet Major-General Burbridge, commanding military District of Kentucky, dated November 12, 1864, addressed to Brig. Gen. L. Thomas, Adjutant-General, United States Army, requesting that Frank Gray, citizen, who had passed a favorable examination before the board for the position, be appointed a second lieutenant.

"3. Special Order No. 2, of January 10, 1865, issued by Adjutant-General Thomas at Louisville, Ky., announcing the appointment of Frank Gray, citizen, as captain One hundred and twenty-fourth United States Colored Infantry."

"4. The acceptance of said appointment by Gray, dated at Lexington, Ky., January 19, 1865, and inclosing his oath of office executed at Lexington on the 27th of January, 1865.

"The petitioner (Frank Gray) was mustered into service as captain One hundred and twenty-fourth United States Colored Troops January 24, 1865, to date January 21, 1865, and was discharged by special orders of March 17, 1865, on tender of resignation.

* * * * * * * *

"It would appear from the record that he was not in the military service of the United States at the date of his alleged injury, and that any service rendered on the staff of General Burbridge prior to January 21, 1865, was as a volunteer aid, in anticipation of the appointment for which he had been recommended. His alleged employment on staff duty, however, of which there is no record, would have been in direct violation of General Orders No. 12, of 1862, from the headquarters of the Army."

The disability for which a pension is claimed is inguinal hernia, contracted in line of duty in the month of November, 1864, while on detached duty as aid to General Burbridge, caused by the falling of his horse while descending a steep and rocky hill, he, Gray, falling beneath his horse.

The injury being of a private nature, he did not go to hospital or secure medical treatment at the time, but fitted a truss himself, but soon found that the injury was of such a character as to unfit him for duty, and for this reason he resigned his commission in the following March.

General Burbridge confirms Gray's statement of the fall of his horse, he (Burbridge) being present and assisted Gray to extricate himself beneath his fallen horse. The evidence is quite full that Gray was a sound and healthy man when he entered the service, and a fair consideration of the evidence satisfies your committee that the disability from which Gray is now suffering resulted from this fall.

His claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau because it did not appear from the record that he was in the military service of the Government. This is technically correct, but the facts show that this occurred by reason of Gray's obedience to the order of his superior, General Burbridge ordering him on detached duty, by reason of which he was prevented from receiving his commission and from being technically mustered into the service. He was in the actual military service of the Government when he received his disability, and which, by reason of this technicality, occurring in the way stated, the Pension Bureau properly rejected his claim for a pension.

Your committee are of the opinion that his case comes within the spirit of the law, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. GROOME. I move to add to the bill the words—

And pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. HARRISON. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNVEILING OF MARSHALL STATUE.

Mr. INGALLS. In pursuance of a previous order the Senate was to proceed at 1 o'clock to attend the exercises in commemoration of the late Chief-Justice John Marshall. I would suggest, to avoid confusion, as the exercises are to commence promptly at 1, that perhaps the order of execution had better be made now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate now proceed, in substantial accordance with the former order of the Senate, to the place of the ceremonies named by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORRILL. Are we to return here, or is there to be an adjournment of the Senate from this hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate under its order will return here, when a motion to adjourn will be in order, the Chair thinks.

At 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m. the Senate, preceded by the Secretary and Sergeant-at-arms and headed by the President pro tempore, proceeded to the place selected for the ceremonies of the day, in the grounds west of the Capitol, where the following programme was carried out:

ORDER OF EXERCISES AT THE UNVEILING OF THE STATUE OF JOHN MARSHALL, LATE CHIEF-JUSTICE UNITED STATES, ON SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1884.

Music: Marine Band.

Prayer: Rev. Dr. Armstrong, of Richmond, Va.

Music.

Address: The Chief-Justice.

Music.

Oration: William Henry Rawle, esq., of Philadelphia, Pa.

Music.

Benediction.

ADJOURNMENT.

The Senate returned to its Chamber, and the President pro tempore resumed the chair at 2 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 12, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the American Medical Association, praying that proper provision be made for the prevention of epidemic diseases in the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

He also presented the memorial of James H. Williams and 17 others, residents of Rockingham, Vt., remonstrating against the establishment of a governmental telegraphic system; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present resolutions of the Board of Trade and Transportation of Cincinnati, Ohio, setting forth—

That a sufficient and well-equipped navy is of indispensable necessity to our nation; that security to our commercial interests abroad and the safety of our seaboard cities in case of war demand it; that our country is abundantly able to bear the necessary expense of construction and armament; that not the strength of European navies nor the plethora of the Treasury but our own safety and protection are the object and measure of an American navy, and that wise economy and regard for our national reputation demand that an American navy, while it may be small in comparison with the great navies of Europe, should be the best in construction and the most complete and formidable in its means of offense and defense.

I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present a petition of the president of the Cincinnati (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce, the president of the Cincinnati (Ohio) Board of Trade, and the president of the Cincinnati (Ohio) Industrial Exposition for this year, praying the passage of a bill in aid of the exposition at New Orleans, and saying that it will be greatly for the interests of all the Mississippi Valley. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON presented a memorial of M. H. Bartelson Post, No. 407, Department of Ohio, Grand Army of the Republic, remonstrating against the passage of House bill 6535, known as the Warner bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Federation of Labor, of Washington, D. C., and a petition of the Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, of Washington, D. C., praying that an additional number of copies of the report of testimony as to the relations between labor and capital taken before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor be printed; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Cincinnati (Ohio) Board of Trade and Transportation, praying that better protection to American shippers of merchandise to foreign ports be secured, and that Senate bill 1926, or House bill 5797, providing such protection, be passed; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR. I present the memorial of many residents of the city and county of Worcester, Mass. (among the names attached to the memorial are the names of C. F. Washburn, one of the managers of a large wire establishment; John S. Baldwin, the publisher and proprietor of the Worcester Spy; and many of the principal merchants, professional men, and manufacturers, some hundred or two in number all told), remonstrating against the enactment of any measure relating to the telegraph which shall increase the number of public officials or establish a governmental monoply of the telegraph business, or which shall employ the functions of Government to destroy the property of individuals who have embarked in legitimate enterprise to provide ample facilities for the public accommodation; and setting forth also that they believe the interests of the people will be better conserved by leaving this branch of commercial business free to the competition of private enterprise. These persons are very large users of the telegraph. They are men engaged in a great variety of businesses, and the character of the gentlemen whose names are signed to the memorial is a warrant that they have no selfish interest in the matter; and they are persons whose judgment as to the public interest is entitled to the very greatest respect in regard to a measure of this kind, which they thoroughly understand.

I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that similar papers have been laid upon the table, that committee having reported a bill upon the subject. However, the Chair will refer the memorial if the Senator from Massachusetts desires it.

Mr. HOAR. It may be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be laid upon the table.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of a large number of business men of Providence, R. I., praying for the continuance of the present fast mail train between New England, New York, and the South; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LAPHAM. I present a memorial of citizens of Pittsford, Monroe County, New York, remonstrating against the enactment of any measure relating to the telegraph which shall increase the number of public officials, or which shall employ the functions of Government to destroy the property of individuals who have embarked in legitimate enterprise to provide ample facilities for the public accommodation. As the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have reported the bill in reference to this matter, I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented the petition of the Moline Water-power Company, of Moline, Ill., praying that an appropriation be made for the completion of the Water-power Canal at the Rock Island arsenal; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of Zenas C. Robbins, of Washington, D. C., praying reimbursement for expenses incurred by him for the public as register of wills for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GROOME presented the petition of Robert B. Frazier and 63 other citizens of Maryland, resident in Cecil County, praying that liberal appropriations be made for the support of Indian schools and for the supply of those engaged as teachers therein; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am directed by the Committeee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 215) to prohibit clerks of the Federal courts from collecting fees in any common-law action, for copying the papers filed in such cause in a book styled "the final record," and for other purposes, to report it adversely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota desire to have the bill placed on the Calendar?

Mr. MCMILLAN. In the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] perhaps it had better be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2154) to prevent the acquisition of real property by aliens, and for other purposes, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4689) for the relief of Eliza W. Patterson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

SUBSIDY BONDS TO PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, charged with the consideration of the bill (S. 1178) "to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; to provide for a settlement of the claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of said railroads, and to secure to the United States all indebtedness of the companies therein mentioned," be, and it hereby is, authorized to inquire into the facts and concerning the affairs to which said bill relates and concerning the execution of the act of May 7, 1878, entitled "An act to alter and amend the act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2198) for the relief of Joanna Barry; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LAPHAM introduced a bill (S. 2199) for the relief of Jacob Behel; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2200) to place the name of R. W. Duncan on the pension-roll; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 2201) granting a pension to Samuel Davidson; which was read by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2202) granting a pension to Alice Warfield; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2203) to donate a cemetery site on the public lands to the city of Kirwin, in the State of Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 85) relative to the registry of deaths, births, and marriages; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee to make provision for taking the Tenth Census and ascertaining the result thereof.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1015) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. H. W. SLOCUM of New York, Mr. C. H. MORGAN of Missouri, and Mr. G. W. STEELE of Indiana managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3967) for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle, and to provide means for the suppression and extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAM H. HATCH of Missouri, Mr. G. G. DIBRELL of Tennessee, and Mr. JAMES WILSON of Iowa managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1369) to prevent and punish the counterfeiting within the United States of notes, bonds, or other securities of foreign governments; and

A bill (S. 316) granting a pension to Mrs. Katharina T. Wunsh.

A bill (H. R. 6085) granting a pension to John A. Hassell.

LANDING OF RALEIGH'S COLONY.

Mr. VANCE. I wish to give notice that during the morning hour to-morrow I shall ask the consent of the Senate to take up the joint resolution (S. R. 45) to provide for the commemoration of the landing of Sir Walter Raleigh's colony on Roanoke Island, North Carolina, in 1584, which is on the Secretary's table, that I may submit a few remarks thereon.

PUYALLUP BRANCH OF NORTHERN PACIFIC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no "concurrent or other resolutions" that order is closed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move the consideration of the resolution submitted by me which was being considered on Friday last.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 583, being a resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to withhold certain land patents claimed by the Northern Pacific Railway Company. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] who made the objection——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to hear the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Michigan who made the objection is not in the Chamber. I do not know whether the Senator from Nebraska desires to await his presence or not.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The suggestion is proper. The Senator from Michigan did desire to be present. I move to take up the resolution now, so that it shall not lose its place, or I shall reserve my right to call it up at the proper time, if I can reserve my right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska can move to take it up at any time before 2 o'clock on any day.

Mr. CONGER entered the Chamber.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Michigan is now here.

Mr. DAWES. If the morning business is through, I will move to take up the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska has moved to proceed to the consideration of the resolution he has named, and that is the pending question, the Senator from Michigan having returned to the Chamber, so that the Chair understands the Senator from Nebraska to insist on his motion. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable, but if there be no objection the Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the resolution will not be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to proceed to the consideration of the resolution which has been indicated.

Mr. VAN WYCK. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair direct the title to be read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is short and will be read at length for information, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. VAN WYCK May 8, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to withhold granting patents to, or recognizing any claim made by, the Northern Pacific Railroad adjoining and on account of what is known as the Puyallup branch, built many years ago, until this Congress shall take action on the question of the forfeiture of lands granted to said road.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to proceed to the consideration of the resolution, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. I desire simply to say that I vote against the consideration——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. INGALLS. Because I understand the Indian appropriation bill is to be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No debate is in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If debate is in order——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order under the rule. If any Senator desires unanimous consent to speak, the Chair will ask unanimous consent for him. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. CAMDEN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL]. I do not know how either Senator would vote, but I have no doubt my colleague would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. JONES, of Florida (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. I do not know how he would vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FAIR. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE] on all party questions. I do not consider this a party question, unless Senators on the other side are of that opinion.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no doubt my colleague [Mr. PIKE] would vote "nay" if present. I did not observe how the Senator voted.

Mr. GEORGE. Our pair was confined to the shipping bill and to party questions.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator must decide that question for himself. I do not know that this is a party question or that it is not. I was not aware it had assumed that shape.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator thinks I ought not to vote, I shall ask leave to withdraw my vote.

Mr. BLAIR. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay." The Senator from Mississippi can decide for himself whether this is a party question.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Does the Senator from New Hampshire hold that it is a party question?

Mr. BLAIR. I have not the slightest idea it is. I do not know in regard to it——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BLAIR. I vote against the motion because I am anxious to take up the bill to establish a bureau of labor statistics, as the Senator well knows.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely; but I should like to know whether it is a party question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. GEORGE. I suppose under the circumstances I had better withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote is withdrawn.

Mr. BECK. I am paired upon all questions with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is not here, and I will not vote.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Bayard,	Groome,	Kenna,	Pugh,
Butler,	Hampton,	Lamar,	Slater,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Manderson,	Vance,
Coke,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Van Wyck,

Camden,	Jonas,	Pike,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Pa.,	Jones of Florida,	Platt,	Walker,
Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,	Williams.
Fair,	Lapham,	Ransom,

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate, and the question is on agreeing to it.

Mr. CONGER. A motion is pending to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs pardon; the question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary. Is the Senate ready for the question? Those in favor of the motion will say "aye"——

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was halting. I supposed the Senator from Michigan desired to be heard on this matter; therefore I did not desire to take the floor.

Mr. CONGER. I will make a remark if the Senator wishes. I have said all I desired preliminarily. I think a resolution of this kind, stopping the operations of government and controlling by the vote of the Senate the executive department of this Government without the matter being referred to the other House, is unusual and unwise. A resolution merely for information or a statement of the condition of a matter is competent and proper, but a resolution directing the executive authorities not to carry out any law or to proceed with any business until the action of the Senate (I speak with some diffidence on the subject) seems to me to be carrying the power of one branch of the legislative power very far.

Besides that, I think it is very proper that the Senate before they act upon it should have the opinion of the Judiciary Committee upon some legal questions which arise in this case, for it is solely a question of legal construction. I can see no possible objection to sending to the Judiciary Committee for their opinion and their advice to the Senate on such a resolution as this. If there is any objection to that, I should be very glad to know it. That committee can consider it very soon and report at a very early day.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator state the legal question that makes it necessary that the resolution should go to the Judiciary Committee? I understood him to say that there was some legal question involved.

Mr. CONGER. It can not be possible that the Senator who introduced the resolution does not understand that it all turns upon the decision of a legal proposition.

Mr. VAN WYCK. What is that proposition?

Mr. CONGER. I do not now propose to take up the time of the Senator or my own in going into the examination of this question. That is why I wish it to be sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, because the Senator I presume does not understand it, and I do not myself entirely. I want somebody that can examine it to examine this question and see whether the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska is a suitable one to be passed by the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I did not desire to ask the Senator to argue the legal proposition, but barely to state it. What I desire him to do is to state the proposition in a few words. I was anxious to know what the legal proposition was which rendered it necessary that the resolution should go to the Judiciary Committee. My friend must be mistaken, for he said he wanted an early report. My friend said he wanted an early report, and have it go to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CONGER. This mode of catechising which the Senator from Nebraska indulges in so much is always pleasant and agreeable to me, but I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The RECORD will show it.

Mr. CONGER. It is a peculiar habit of the Senator from Nebraska to ask others, or assume that others said things and ask them if they did, and then comment upon it; but it is not a very accurate way of pursuing the Socratic method here in the Senate. I said that I had no doubt that the Judiciary Committee would, as they usually do when matters are referred to them, consider at as early a day as might be any questions referred to them by the Senate and give their views and report to this body.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I wanted to know precisely the position of the Senator from Michigan. I find I did not misunderstand him; that he did desire an early report, and therefore it seems strange that desiring an early report he should wish to have the resolution referred to the Judiciary Committee, and then with that peculiar sarcasm in which the Senator from Michigan oftentimes indulges, he says he would expect a hasty report as is usual with that committee. That is very unkind.

I do not understand that there is any grand legal proposition involved in the resolution requiring the adjudication of the Judiciary Committee of this body. My friend says the resolution is to direct an executive officer, or rather to state to an executive officer, how he shall or shall not discharge his duty and to restrain him from doing it. I would say to the Senator that he is mistaken in the breadth of the proposition, and that at this session of Congress we have repeatedly done what is proposed here. We did it early in the session on the railroad measure concerning which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL] made a speech a few days ago. We directed the Secretary of the Interior then to withhold action upon the issue of patents to those lands.

This is no direction. The Senate will easily see that it is asking him to withhold his action—not to execute the law, but to withhold it in deference to this body, to the Congress of the United States, who are considering the question. This is not the time for the legal point to be raised. The legal proposition has not yet arrived. The fact is apparent, and that is all there is as a foundation of this action. The Senate is as competent to decide this question now as the Judiciary Committee; it is as competent to decide the question now as it will be after the Judiciary Committee have reported upon the matter.

The facts are apparent that there is a proposition in both branches of Congress to forfeit the land grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and while this is going on the Northern Pacific Railroad, in relation to one of its little branches, have made application to the President of the United States for the appointment of commissioners to examine the construction of its road, and if that commission report to the President of the United States that the road is built in conformity with the law then the next step is to issue to those gentlemen certificates showing their title to the lands lying along the branch.

That is one part of the proposition. The other is that the Congress of the United States are ordering a halt in this matter, and they have for consideration to-day before both branches, as I have said, bills looking to the forfeiture of the land grant, or a portion of the land grant, of this road.

All that is asked to-day is that the Secretary of the Interior shall not prejudge this matter; that the Secretary of the Interior shall not issue patents, shall not issue certificates, shall not pass on the right of this railroad company to this land until Congress shall have adjudicated upon the matter. It ought not to be a question, and there has not been in the past a murmur of disapprobation to pursuing this course. Why we are now to change the policy of the Senate, which has been manifested time and time again—why at this juncture we should change the policy of the Senate I can not fully understand.

This railroad company at this very day is seeking to get a recognition of their title to these lands by a patent when at the very same time the matter is being investigated with a view of legislation by Congress. Nothing more need be said about it; but this is in connection with this little branch that they are seeking now to obtain a certification of lands for, running from Tacoma up to Puyallup Valley, thirty-one miles, to reach their own coal-field. I desire to say here as a question of fact that when the road was built, six or seven years ago, by the Northern Pacific Company, there was no pretense, and they did not build it with the expectation that they would ever obtain a land grant for it. They built it for their own convenience, to develop their own coal-fields. They did not then pretend, as the proof shows, that this little branch of thirty-one miles was on their main line, or on the Cascade branch, for each of which they were entitled to receive lands, but they built it to develop their own coal-fields, and after the lapse of six or seven years, then for the first time do they come to the President of the United States and ask him to appoint commissioners with a view of locating these lands to which they now claim to be entitled.

Mr. President, these, as I understand, are plainly the facts of this case; and if they are, then there is no reason for the resolution going to the Committee on the Judiciary or any other committee of this body; but Congress should do as it has done in other cases, merely ask a stay of proceedings on the part of the executive officers until Congress itself may be heard in the matter.

Mr. HAWLEY. I voted against taking up the resolution because of the unwritten law which requires us to follow the Appropriations Committee, unless in extraordinarily exceptional cases, when they desire to consider a bill; but on looking at the resolution now I see something rather unusual in it. It "directs" the Secretary of the Interior to suspend action under a law—an enactment passed by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President. I am so ill-informed on the subject that I doubt very much whether you have any right to direct him or even to request him to stop executing a law; but we have had a plenty of instances in the history of Congress when both Houses, finding that some injustice was being done under law, have joined in joint resolution to suspend action. If the Judiciary Committee will recommend that action to us, I will cheerfully vote for it; but I do not know anything about the subject of the resolution except the ex parte brief statement of the Senator from Nebraska made just now.

I do not know that I can vote for the resolution anyhow, but I certainly can not without something more of advice from the law committee of the Senate, or without more full argument than we have had.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the motion submitted by the Senator from Michigan in the form of instructions to the committee: that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report to the Senate at an early day its opinion whether or not it is competent for the Senate to direct an executive officer to suspend the execution of a law.

Mr. DOLPH. Let them report the facts also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to amend the motion to refer it, adding instructions which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the motion of Mr. CONGER the following words:

With instructions to report to the Senate at an early day its opinion whether or not it is competent for the Senate to direct an executive officer to suspend the execution of a law.

Mr. CONGER. I accept the amendment, if I have power to do so.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I do not at this time propose to discuss the question which has been suggested, as to whether it is proper for one branch of Congress to direct the head of a Department as to the performance of his duties under a law; neither do I propose at this time to discuss the power of Congress to forfeit a grant heretofore made to aid in the construction of a railroad, or the policy of doing so. But, hailing from the section of country where this road is located, and believing that I know something about the facts, I feel it incumbent on me to state to the Senate what I understand the facts to be.

The facts in the case, as I understand them, are as follows: The road in question from Tacoma eastward, called a branch or a coal road by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], was constructed some ten years ago, at least long before the time had expired within which the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was authorized to construct its main line and branches. It was constructed on the general route of the Cascade branch of its road and intended as a part of that branch. After the Company had obtained the right to mortgage its road and lands in 1870, it commenced the construction of its road on both the eastern and western ends, and built a portion of its main line from the Columbia River to Puget Sound at Tacoma, and also commenced the construction of the Cascade branch eastward toward the Cascade Mountains. When the revulsion of 1873 came the company ceased to build on both ends of the line, and when it commenced the construction of its road again in 1878 or 1879 first commenced upon the eastern end; and when construction upon the western end of the road was resumed it commenced at Ainsworth, upon the Upper Columbia River, and built eastward to form a through connection across the continent before building the Cascade branch. In the mean time the company had year after year, while railroad construction was being carried on, kept surveying parties in the Cascade Mountains endeavoring to select the best pass for crossing those mountains; and the reason why they did not ask to have this portion of their Cascade line inspected and received was that until they had selected the pass through the Cascade Mountains over and through which their branch line was to be constructed they did not know precisely at what point on the branch already constructed the line across the mountains would connect, and there might be a few miles more or less of that road that would not be embraced in and constitute a part of the Cascade branch. Recently, as I understand——

Mr. CONGER. It has been so stated in the annual reports for the last three years.

Mr. DOLPH. So I am informed. Recently the road has been inspected, and I have seen by the newspapers has been accepted. I do not understand that any committee in Congress has ever proposed to forfeit any part of the land grant for that portion of the road which was constructed within the time limited by the act. So I think it is correct to say that there is a legal question involved in this resolution, and it is very proper that it should go to the Judiciary Committee for a report; at least I can see no harm to arise from that course. I think it would be very unsafe for the Senate to undertake to pass upon this question on the ex parte statement of the Senator from Nebraska or myself.

Mr. SLATER. While I can not speak from any personal knowledge of the transactions relative to this particular section of the Northern Pacific Railroad, there are many facts which have come to my knowledge through other parties that lead me to the conclusion that this contemplated section originally was not intended to be a part of the Northern Pacific. I understand that the historian of the company, Mr. Smalley, has very specifically put it down in a work written by him under the auspices of the company, for the benefit of the company, that this was simply a local coal-road, not even owned by the company. Whether that is so or not I do not know, but certainly no harm can come to the company——

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SLATER. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask my colleague if that is so, by what authority, under what charter, he supposes the Northern Pacific Railroad Company built this branch, if it was not part of their Cascade branch or their main line?

Mr. SLATER. As to that I can not say. As I said before, I have no personal knowledge of this matter; all the information I have comes to me from the writings and statements of other parties who from their situation were in position to know, and for this reason I think it is wise and well that there should be some little delay in this matter until the facts may be ascertained.

It is well known in the western part of the country, in Washington

Territory, that this is a local road, and never was considered or understood by the people there to be a part of the line, and that the recent purpose of having it accepted as a part of it is to cover lands known to be valuable in coal and timber; but whether that is so or not I can not say.

I would suggest to the Senator from Nebraska to change the word "directed" to "requested." This being a call on an executive officer to refrain from action under the statute, I think it would hardly be proper to "direct" him, but it is common, as I understand the practice of both Houses of Congress, to request a delay for a limited period of time until an investigation can be had or until better information may be secured.

It seems to me that no harm can come to the company from this request. It is simply a precautionary move and intended only to delay action until a better understanding and better information can be obtained. It does not undertake to decide any question. It simply requests a delay in the issuing of patents. I do know that there has been very great interest manifested by agents and persons intimately connected with the Northern Pacific Company that no action of this kind should be had here. I speak now from personal knowledge. If they are thus anxious, it is plain to me that there may be good reason for that anxiety, hoping that no agitation might be had until such time as everything could be made absolutely secure beyond reach of any Congressional action.

I hope that the resolution will not be referred, but that it will be passed by the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the resolution to which the Senator from Nebraska has referred, concerning what is called the Backbone road, was modified on the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] so as to read:

Whereas it is claimed by the New Orleans and Pacific Railroad Company that inasmuch as the Attorney-General has decided in favor of said company as to lands demanded by them, and the Secretary of the Interior has felt constrained to act upon and accept said opinion, and said company also claim that Congress has no further control or authority over said lands or the demands of said company thereto: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to suspend action in issuing certificates on patents for said lands to said corporation until Congress, at this session, shall determine the questions involved in the claims of said corporation.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Senator will allow me I will cheerfully substitute the word "requested." Therefore, with the consent of the Senate, I will modify the resolution so as to read "requested" instead of "directed."

Mr. MORGAN. That removes part of my objection to this resolution, but not all of it. I think this resolution ought to go to the Committee either on Public Lands or on the Judiciary. There seem to be some controverted facts about it. The two Senators from Oregon are not precisely agreed in their view of the facts upon which our action should depend, or the policy or propriety of the action proposed by the Senator from Nebraska. Not much harm, I conceive, can be done by allowing the executive officers of this Government to execute the law as we have enacted it. We have quite enough to do to enact laws, and then transfer the question of their construction and their execution to the proper officers of this Government. There has not been a session of Congress since I have been here that some bill has not been introduced to forfeit a land grant; not one has ever yet passed, and I am not quite so clear in my conviction that I shall stay here long enough to see one passed. There is a great deal of noise made about land grants; bills are introduced, numerous bills, hundreds of bills, for their forfeiture and for all manner of declarations concerning them; but there is very little action taken, I notice.

I object to suspending the duties of any of the executive officers of this Government otherwise than by law. We enact laws; we impose duties on the officers, judicial or executive, of this Government. Let those laws remain in force until we get our consent to modify or repeal them; and it is an improper interference for one of the legislative bodies of this Government to come in between an executive officer and the duties that we enjoin him by law to perform. Suppose after all he should decline our request, what condition are we left in? He could say, "I consult the laws of the United States, and my sworn duty to execute those laws, and one House of Congress comes to me with a request that I shall not proceed to the execution of that duty." If one House of Congress can in this manner exempt an officer from his sworn duty and obligation to execute the law of the land in respect of land-grant roads, why not in respect to the tariff or in respect of any other laws we put upon the statute-book?

It may be, I think it is very likely that there ought to be a Congressional declaration here that this railroad company never had a right to these lands under any land grant, or, having a right at any time, has forfeited that right; but I do not wish to decide that question in advance of the action of Congress, and I must interpose my objection to this body interfering with the execution of the laws upon the statute-book of the country otherwise than by amendment or repeal. I hope the motion to refer this resolution to the committee will prevail.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I voted to take up this resolution——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Nebraska to modify his resolution by striking out the word "directed" and inserting the word "requested?"

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be modified accordingly.

Mr. WILSON. Then I desire to modify my amendment also so as to make it read: "that the committee inquire whether it is competent for the Senate to direct or request an executive officer."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa will be modified accordingly.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I voted to take up this resolution now because I thought it to be that character of public business which demanded present attention, and I thought it better that we should address ourselves now to that action which was presently appropriate, but I am very clear and was all the time in my mind that this resolution was not one that should be hastily acted upon by the Senate without the advice of the appropriate committee. It involves both questions of law and question of fact. The method itself is one which is subject to challenge and has been challenged upon the floor of the Senate with very strong reasons. I hope, therefore, the Senate will consent to make this reference, and that we shall have from the Judiciary Committee of this body a report which will enable us to proceed intelligently with the consideration of the subject-matter presented by the resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Supposing the facts to be as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] has stated and the legal proposition as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] claims, neither furnishes any reason why this resolution should not be passed by this body. The question of fact is to be considered in the consideration of this whole question when it comes before the Senate. Indeed the questions of law and fact are being considered by the appropriate committee now; but pending that consideration these gentlemen are reaching out their hands to grasp more of the public domain at the very time when the Congress of the United States is considering the question; and no matter what the facts may be, no matter what the law may be, all we are asking for by this resolution is to suspend action until these vexed questions may be settled by the proper tribunal, and that is the Congress of the United States.

My friend from Alabama says we hasten slowly here in Congress. So we do, but he will admit that had Congress hastened a little more rapidly in the years gone by we should not now be placed in the attitude we are to-day.

But no matter about the facts, no matter about the law, one thing is apparent, that the American Congress is considering the question of the forfeiture of certain lands granted to this railroad company. That I take it is not disputed; and while the American Congress is considering that question this railroad company is reaching out its hands to grasp more of the public domain. I take it that fact is not disputed.

Those are the only two facts necessary in the consideration of this resolution, and we injure no railroad company because they slumbered six or seven years before they dared present a right or claim to this land. Then two of the facts necessary to sustain the resolution are in the case. The merits of their claim will not be prejudiced by a short delay. Suppose they were proceeding now to obtain other lands besides these, would it not be competent for us to say: "Stop, let this question be examined by the American Congress?" That is all there is in the resolution.

The Senator from Oregon said, as I understood him, that this branch was built by the railroad company as a part of the Cascade branch. Did I understand the junior Senator from Oregon correctly? I understood him to say—and I do not consider the fact material, but I want to have the record correct—that they built this as a portion of their Cascade branch, the main branch which they were authorized to build? Was I right in that?

Mr. DOLPH. I will state to the Senator from Nebraska that I said that I understood the facts to be that they built from Tacoma eastward toward the Cascade Mountains with a view to making that road a part of their Cascade branch, but as they had not selected the pass through the Cascade Mountains through which their road would pass they could not state positively that the whole of it would be utilized for that purpose; that is, they could not positively determine at what point the line that crossed the mountains would strike this road that had been built out from Tacoma, and until they had located their branch across the Cascade Mountains it was not convenient for them to have it inspected and received and made part of their line.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I did not misunderstand the Senator from Oregon. His understanding is that what I termed the coal-road was built as a portion of the Cascade branch, to be a portion of that branch when the branch was finally located. That is the proposition. Now, with a view of correcting that——

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator's authority. From what document is he about to read?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly I shall state it. I propose to read from the report of the president and vice-president of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company for 1876. I take it that is orthodox and worthy of all credit. I wish the Senate would give a little attention to this matter, because it shows the wonderful zeal, and not only that but the wonderful power, of a railroad corporation to twist and turn its position when it can place its hand upon the public domain. The document before me is the report of the president and vice-president of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company made in 1876, and they made no pretense that this branch was anything more than a coal road to develop their own coal lands, and do not suggest that it was any portion either of the main line of the Northern Pacific Railroad or of its branch across the Cascades.

If that fact is true, there is the end of that argument here and in the Interior Department, and it should be the end of it before the President if the question be raised there. If that be true, then is it not reasonable that the Senate should say to these men "Halt;" and if by any means you obtain from the President authority to examine this road and commissioners find your road correctly built, is it not reasonable that we should politely request the Secretary of the Interior to suspend the issue of patents on their report until we see whether the Northern Pacific Railroad shall be allowed to consummate this fraud. I know not when, in defiance of their own report of 1876, they commenced to claim that this shall be recognized as a portion of their Cascade branch for which they are asking to receive a million acres of land. In 1876 Charles B. Wright was president of the company. First he makes a preliminary suggestion.

The Pacific division has lately been visited and thoroughly inspected by the vice-president, whose report to the board upon its condition and prospects and upon the coal-fields of this company, and the proposed branch road for their development, is printed herewith.

Not their main line or their Cascade branch, the only two which could have any Government bounty in the shape of land, but "the proposed branch road for their development."

The profitable development of this property seems to depend upon the completion of the through line, or—

What?

the completion of the through line or the immediate construction of thirty-one miles—

Not of the Cascade branch—thirty-one miles of the Puyallup branch and the development of the coal. The details of the latter are fully discussed in the vice-president's report.

Is not that sufficient, stopping there? In 1876 the president of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company did not treat it as part of the main line or the branch across the Cascades, but he says distinctly:

The profitable development of this property seems to depend upon the completion of the through line or the immediate construction of thirty-one miles—of the Puyallup branch and the development of the coal.

Not of the Cascade branch, but—

They only intended it for a coal-road, did not seek it for anything else, and did not consider it a portion of the Cascade branch. He said the vice-president would give a more detailed statement, and here it is in the same document. This is the report of the vice-president to which the president of the road referred. He is stating a little of his movements in that country, and says:

I devoted my time to examining the constructed road and its business in all detail, in exploring the Puyallup line and coal-fields.

* * * * * * *

Unless the coal-field of the company on the Puyallup should be developed, or unless Tacoma is made a point of shipment for the products of the Columbia and Willamette Valleys, a subject which will be hereafter adverted to, the growth of our receipts will be slow and dependent upon the general settlement of the country or the completion of the through line.

Now—

My examination of the Puyallup Valley and coal lands was made with special reference to a practical look at the surveyed line for the proposed branch.

They nowhere by direction or indirection make any, the most distant, allusion to the thirty-one miles as a portion of any possible branch except the Puyallup. Now, I call my friends' attention, more particularly the Senator from Oregon, and the Senator from Michigan also:

My examination of the Puyallup Valley and coal lands was made with special reference to a practical look at the surveyed line for the proposed branch and the explored portions of the coal-fields, &c.

* * * * * * *

The preliminary line as located for the branch road follows the stream.

Now, I call special attention to this:

The grades are all descending—

That was from Puyallup—

The grades are all descending with the stream, and do not exceed on this division fifty-three feet to the mile. From South Prairie up Fleet's Creek, six miles to the coal openings, the line is somewhat more difficult and the grades heavier; the maximum grade being one hundred and five feet to the mile. It is, however, all downhill with the stream, and as the load will all be down and nothing but empty cars up, the road will be easily worked.

Will any one say that in 1876 the officers of the Northern Pacific Railroad believed they were building these thirty-one miles as a portion of their Cascade branch? If so, why were they not to have transportation up as well as down, freight going both ways? This road was built thus as a coal-road, and they say it is "all downhill with the stream," and "the loads will all be down and nothing but empty cars up," and so "the road will be easily worked." There are some other allusions in the same strain; but can anything more be necessary after that bare statement of facts to show that when they commenced the construction of this road they did not intend it to be part of the main line or the branch for which they were entitled to a donation of lands?

The Senator from Alabama thinks there should be action on this matter. Certainly; but he expresses a doubt about it; at all events he thinks there is too much delay. I say so too. There will be no injustice done to this Northern Pacific Railroad by this resolution. They will not lose their lands in the event that they are entitled to them. If these lands now are conveyed and in the end it should be found they were not entitled, then the Government would lose, then the settler would lose; and in what position have these gentlemen placed themselves that they can come here and ask us to allow them to take hold of these lands for a road which exempts itself from taxation in all the Territories through which it passes, as I believe my friend from Oregon will concede—a road which exempts itself from all taxation for its immense domain and for its valuable franchises and property in all the Territories through which it passes? Am I not correct in that?

Mr. DOLPH. I do not understand that they are. I wish to say, if the Senator will permit me, that I stated in the outset that I do not propose now to discuss the power or the policy of Congress in this matter. When the time comes and there is something before the Senate to talk about, I expect to be heard on that subject. I merely rose to state a matter of fact. I do not understand that what the Senator has read from the report of the president and vice-president of the company has changed that a particle. Because you call a branch thirty-one miles long the Puyallup branch and say that it is constructed to reach coal-mines owned by the company does not show that that particular stretch of road was not intended to be and will not become a part of the Cascade branch.

As I said before, I do not propose to discuss either the propriety of instructing the Secretary of the Interior on any legal question connected with this subject, or the policy of forfeiting these land grants; nor do I care now to be drawn into the question in regard to the taxation of land in the several States and Territories. It is a question with which I have no concern. I merely rose, as I said before, to set right the question of fact, and I can not see that the company is here asking anything of Congress. It is the Senator from Nebraska who is moving in this matter proposing to instruct the head of a Department, proposing to interfere with the rights or supposed rights of this company under the law to be passed upon by the head of a Department, and I can not see that anything would be lost by sending this resolution to a committee that will pass on the question of fact between these gentlemen and the Senator from Nebraska and myself if there is a difference, and make a report fully upon the facts and the law of the case.

That is all there is in the matter as far as I am concerned; and I do not choose to be catechised on the question of the right of taxation, or whether or not the company pays taxes, or how much land it received from the grant. I merely rose to state what I thought to be my duty, being somewhat familiar with the facts and the history of this matter.

I say now that I understand this road was constructed within the life of the grant; that there is no committee, no party in Congress or anywhere that proposes to forfeit it, and I see no reason why we should act hastily on insufficient testimony.

I do not know how I shall vote upon the resolution when it is finally reported by the committee, but I think it proper to send it to the committee so that we may be fully informed in regard to it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I of course knew that the Senator from Oregon was familiar with the facts of this case, and therefore it was that I appealed to him to know if the statement I made was correct.

Mr. DOLPH. I will state that I understand, but from hearsay, that the Legislature of Washington Territory passed an act to tax this railroad company upon its receipts in the Territory, and exempt it from other taxation, and that Montana has passed a similar act, and I do not know but that the Idaho Legislature has done so. The Legislatures of several of the Territories have proposed to tax the gross earnings of the road. I only speak of that, not having seen the acts, from newspaper reports. That is all I know about it.

It has come to my knowledge also, from mere hearsay or seeing the brief of counsel sent to me as a compliment, that in some cases the company has contended that its right of way was exempt from taxation under act of Congress in the Territories, and in some instances the lands until patented; but I do not understand that that has anything to do with the merits of this case. I suppose anybody, whether a corporation or an individual, can resort to the courts to ascertain whether under the law his property is taxable.

Mr. VAN WYCK. In that connection the Senator speaks of laws passed by the Territories to reach this property by taxation. Does he know whether this railroad has antagonized those acts of the Legislatures of the Territories?

Mr. DOLPH. The complaint is that they were made at the instance of the railroad company.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Have they antagonized the acts in the Territories?

Mr. DOLPH. No; I understand the complaint is that the laws were passed at the instance of the railroad company.

Mr. VAN WYCK. And have they paid the tax?

Mr. DOLPH. I do not know about that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I suppose not.

Mr. DOLPH. The gentleman seems to be better informed than I am in regard to these matters.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, I do not claim that. I claim to have read from a report of the president and vice-president of the road, and I think that they probably knew more about this than others, and I say that their reports are irreconcilable with the proposition that they built these thirty-one miles as a branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad when they expressly said they had no freight to carry back on these thirty-one miles. I am a little surprised at the anxiety manifested in this question. I am somewhat surprised that there should be such antagonism to the proposition.

I was saying that this railroad company would lose nothing by this resolution. They waited six years before they made the application, and now if they wait sixty days more certainly it will do them no harm; it will invade no right of theirs. They are never weak with the Departments of this Government. No railroad company ever had reason to fear a failure after they had passed the threshold of the Department. Oh, no. I will say in that connection it is no wrong or injustice or hardship to this railroad company. Then I say these gentlemen through all these Territories and parts from which my friend comes have paid no tax into the Treasury.

Mr. DOLPH. I beg pardon of the Senator from Nebraska. I do not represent the Territories. I have lived many years in the State I represent.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I will refer to the Territories near which the Senator lives, and he takes them under his wing naturally. I understand from whence my friend comes, but I look to him as being a special guardian of the interests of the surrounding Territories, his being the nearest State to them. I presumed he would look to their interests, and no doubt he does, but this road, running a thousand miles or more through the Territories, pays not a dollar into the Territorial treasuries. Counties have tried to get something from them, but could not. They claim 50,000,000 acres of land, and on not an acre do they pay taxes.

I say to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who just made a remark which I overheard, that Massachusetts stood here one day giving utterance to the same sentiments I am uttering now. When Massachusetts was here in the person of Henry Wilson, speaking in 1870, and this Northern Pacific Railroad Company came up to extort more land from the General Government, he was uttering sentiments substantially the same as those I am expressing. I know this is considered a high-toned company, principally because it is largely managed and much of its stocks and bonds are owned in Massachusetts. I am aware of that, but that is no reason why this Northern Pacific Railroad should not be treated as every other railroad. Is that a reason why there should be special interposition now, and that this mighty organization should not be made to keep its hands off for sixty days longer?

I heard the remark of my friend from Massachusetts, and it was not weakened by coming through the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

I was saying that this railroad company had not paid a dollar of taxes into the treasuries of the States and Territories through which it passes lying contiguous to my friend from Oregon for this immense road and its rolling-stock and its franchises. I do not know how much its stocks and bonds amount to, probably $200,000,000, yet not a dollar does it pay into the treasury of the States and Territories through which it passes.

This railroad company in 1879 said to the settler, the pioneer, that all the lands west of the Missouri River should be sold for $2.60 an acre. My friend will admit that.

Mr. DOLPH. I decline to be catechised on this question. If the debate is to run at length, and I can be heard on any proposition that I am called out on, I shall be glad to give my views, but I propose to stop now. I do not consider myself the champion of the motion to refer this resolution or as particularly opposing the resolution. I did not make the motion; I merely rose incidentally to make a statement of facts in regard to it. I decline to answer any further questions. I have some information on the subject, but I do not care to prolong the debate by being catechised in this way.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is entirely satisfactory. Then I will ask the Senator from Michigan, who does oppose the resolution, if it is not the fact that in 1879 the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, by its directors, passed a resolution telling the pioneers and settlers west of the Missouri River that they could take the land at $2.60 an acre?

Mr. CONGER. I want to answer some propositions of the gentleman, as he has called me up, and I will take them a little in the order in which he has interrogated me.

I desire to state to the Senator in answer to one matter of which he spoke in response to something that I said, that he read from page 24 to 25 of the report of the president to the directors of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company on September 27, 1876, stating that the Puyallup branch was not a branch of the Cascade division, the only through division of the Northern Pacific Railroad. I find on looking at the book from which he read that the Puyallup branch was to be a part of the main branch and the only through branch to the ocean. He read that there was a grade of one hundred and five feet to the mile, and that it was all downhill and nothing but empty cars up. The very paper from which the Senator read says:

> For twenty-five miles up this branch a part of the proposed Cascade branch is very excellent grade, not over fifty-three feet to the mile up to about Prairie.

This is what he read:

> From South Prairie up Flett's Creek, six miles, to the coal openings—

And off the line of the proposed branch—

> the line is somewhat more difficult, and the grades heavier; the maximum grade being one hundred and five feet to the mile. It is, however, all downhill with the stream, and as the loads will all be down and nothing but empty cars up, the road will be easily worked.

The six miles that nobody ever pretended were a part of the Cascade branch, and with the usual accuracy and with the commendable fairness of my friend, he has applied that to the whole line of this road, which has only fifty-three feet grade. So much for that. My friend has the reports of 1880, 1881, 1882, and 1883, or ought to have them before he undertakes to enlighten the Senate, and in every report from this which proposed this work only the Cascade branch has been reported upon as so much finished work of the line, and there has been made continually since that branch was made, and in the last report, which I have and which I did not happen to bring with me—there has been a statement made in the regular annual report of the company that because they could not determine where through the Cascades they could find the best pass for the road they on that account could not tell just where on this line they would like to strike the Puyallup road. The gentleman laughs.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I beg pardon. I was laughing at a quiet suggestion of a Senator near me.

Mr. CONGER. It can not be laughed away.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Oh, no. I was listening to a suggestion from a Senator.

Mr. CONGER. I did not know but that it might have some meaning.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Oh, no.

Mr. CONGER. I always look for meaning in everything from the Senator.

They have reported continuously and especially in their last report fully that because they had not determined the pass through the Cascade they had not applied to the Government for the lands which they had earned and were entitled to. It lays through these reports a plain, clear, and straightforward statement. But my friend goes way back of those years and takes a preliminary report to the building of this road at all, and not a word afterward, not a word of their claim and their reasons for it. I have those reports, and I can bring them if I have opportunity to the Senate and present them here. I wish these things to go to the Committee on the Judiciary to determine whether the company built their road within the time and to determine the force of this law.

There are many insinuations thrown out by this self-constituted champion of the public lands of the United States against anybody who dares defend any right that anybody has. Sir, for sixteen years with the approval of my constituents I have advocated granting to the Northern Pacific Railway Company whatever legal rights it had under its land grant. I have done it for the interests of the State of Michigan. The terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad is on the west border of our upper peninsula, a wild, desolate, mineral region. The completion of roads through our upper peninsula has depended and does to-day depend upon the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and its construction to the Montreal River, the boundary line between Wisconsin and Michigan is as essential, and more essential to the welfare of the State of Michigan, than the northern peninsular roads themselves, because unless that road is completed there is no prospect of any individual capital building roads through the wild regions of our upper peninsula farther than they are already built.

As one who is to-day willing and has been willing to do whatever is right and proper and legal and just both to the people of the United States and to the Northern Pacific Railway Company, I tell the Senator that I have for sixteen years in Congress occupied this position, and I do not fear his criticising me either with my people or with sensible people in the United States when I ask for a road in which the State of Michigan is so vitally interested that it have the facilities which the law gives to it, have the opportunities which the legislation of the country has granted to it to develop itself and to develop an interesting portion of my own State. Oh, sir, I do not know why it is that from away off in Kansas and Nebraska, representing those prairie States after they had most magnificent gifts of public land where it cost but little to make roads on the level prairie, the recipients of those lands should send their representatives here to destroy the prospect of getting roads through wild mineral regions and rocky regions in other States where the lands when obtained are but a pittance of the expense of making the road. That is a part of the answer, and that is a part of the reply to what the Senator read here.

I say, sir, that the record shows that this branch of the road by the reports in these documents and in every succeeding annual report was made to be a part of the Cascade branch of the Northern Pacific road, and the record shows that it does not depend on my word nor on the Senator's word. I say that it has been announced in these annual reports that they would not apply to the Government to have these lands assigned because they did not know exactly where, coming through the pass, this line that was in the direction would be met on its way by the road coming through the pass. That has been publicly announced year by year. It is no new thing. It is in print and has gone all over the country. There is nothing new about this; there is nothing wonderful about it; there is nothing material about it except that the Senator from Nebraska, representing a State that has already received for building railroads in a prairie country all the lands they ever wanted or ever asked where roads could be built without trouble and where roads could have been built without a railroad grant at all, is now the pioneer in an effort to take away from other States, wilderness States and mountainous regions, the help that would build the road for which the lands were granted.

If that throws any light on my relations to this subject the Senator is welcome to it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was not so particularly seeking light from the Senator on the subject as I was seeking to find out some facts in the case. He seemed to take exception to my remarks, and expressed his surprise at what I had stated. I asked for light as far as the Northern Pacific Railroad Company is concerned on the tax question. For thousands of miles they pay not a dollar of tax into the treasuries of the Territories for their immense property, worth millions of dollars. I have received no light upon that subject.

I asked if in 1879 the Northern Pacific Railroad Company did not encourage immigration into the country near their line by resolving that the price for land west of the Missouri should be $2.60 an acre, and I have received no information on that point. Their road was extended, and then they turned around and said the lands should be paid for at $5 or $10 an acre. I am merely showing the character of this high-toned road that gentlemen think no question is to be made about.

I regret the Senator from Massachusetts is not at this moment in his seat. I stated to him that I was about giving utterance on this floor to what a Senator from Massachusetts once boldly stated in 1870, and if his arguments were cogent then they are so now. Henry Wilson, when these gentlemen were grasping out for more land in 1870, had an amendment in which he asked that this land should be sold at $2.60 an acre. They questioned his loyalty to the granting of lands for building railroads, and after he protested on that he said:

Now, sir, I choose to commence right here on a railroad—

And this I commend to the Senator from Massachusetts—

Now, sir, I choose to commence right here on a railroad in which the people of my State and my section of the country have a deeper interest than any other, and to apply this policy, as far as I am concerned, to this road, and then continue it to all other roads that are here asking for the public lands. I believe it to be in the interest of the country as a whole, in the interest especially of the toiling men of the country, of the landless men of the country, the actual settlers on the public lands; and it is not hostile to the real interests of the railways themselves. But, sir, that is the last consideration with me in regard to all these matters. The railroads have governed legislative bodies quite too much.

It comes like a voice from the grave. I ask if the Senator from Massachusetts will stand where Henry Wilson stood in 1870?

The railroads have governed legislative bodies quite too much. I hope the day is far distant when they will have any voice in the Congress of the United States to affect our legislation or to direct the policy of this Government. At any rate, if the attempt is made, I choose for one to meet it. And if there are agents in this Chamber now or at any other time, or about the Chamber, or in the galleries, or in the Capitol. or in the city, interested in these matters, I choose for one not to be dictated to by them, nor to have them come here undertaking to influence or to direct our action.

I choose for one in this matter to exercise my own judgment. I have examined this question. I am a member of the Committee on the Pacific Railroads. I have seen something of the pressure to obtain these lands, as I saw last year something of the pressure to make a combination of seven great railway schemes to obtain a guarantee of $250,000,000 of interest to railroads. I had something to do with defeating that project. Sir, I hope to live to see the time when we will grant our lands to build railways; when we will do it with care; when we will so do it that railroads will not hold great masses of the public domain and control them, or hold them for speculative purposes against settlers or against the interests of the laboring men and the landless men of this country. I believe that to be sound policy, which should be adhered to, whether railways asking assistance here like it or not. I care a vast deal more for the interests of the country and the interests of the toiling men of the country than I do for the interest or the complaints of the men who are asking for public favors.

The position of Massachusetts in 1870 is the position I am trying to uphold in regard to this matter. Henry Wilson rose above party considerations; he rose above home considerations, for then as now Massachusetts was interested in this road to a very great extent. Henry Wilson then rose above all such considerations, and he could legislate for his country with his sympathies for the settler and the landless far more than for this corporation, and propose that the price of the lands granted to the railroad company should be sold for $2.50 an acre. He bid defiance to the power of the railroad company; yet it has been growing and increasing from that day until now. If there was occasion for him to sound the warning that occasion is doubly here now. In times gone by a representative of a railroad corporation could go and sit down in the Interior Department of this Government and demand what he pleased of the Secretary of the Interior, and when he faltered, when the railroad demands were so exorbitant that the Secretary of the Interior hesitated, then it was left to a very supple tool, who was generally found in the office of the Attorney-General of the United States, who was always ready to furnish an opinion for anything they asked, and to that the Secretary of the Interior was found ready to subscribe and carry it out in practice. Henry Wilson, right then, would have been infinitely more right to-day. They seized possession of both political parties; they seized the Executive Departments, then they came up and seized both branches of Congress. They have done it. They have even gone so far as to invade the Federal courts. A short time ago there was a question to be considered in the city of New York where the Union Pacific Railroad was a party, and great difficulty was experienced in finding a judge who could sit and not decide his own case. After a while they found one in one of the New England States; not in Boston, but I think in New Hampshire they found a judge whose pockets were not filled with Union Pacific stock and bonds and who was competent to sit and try the case.

That is just what they are doing to-day. The House passes—I may be excused for referring so far to the House—a bill in regard to a land grant. Not satisfied with that, they go to work to prevent action here. The power of these railroads is brought to bear. They refer it in the House to the Judiciary Committee. Why? The Backbone road, now the New Orleans and Pacific, to which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL] alluded the other day, issued bonds and put them in their pockets or distributed them among friends, and never built a mile of road. The president of that road was a leading Democrat, Mr. Barnum. The attempt was successful when this same matter, although reported by the Committee on Public Lands, was referred to the Judiciary, the object for which was apparent. The results will soon be equally apparent. I have no unkindness for Mr. Barnum. I know he is a Democrat. It has been said in times past that he has used some Republican methods which are considered reprehensible. He is fond of transportation of one kind, by "mules," when he was engaged in their purchase at fabulous prices. That was a faster transportation than was furnished by this corporation of his.

This is the position we are in to-day. I say to my friend from Alabama that it will not do for us to close the doors of this Congress unless some legislation shall be had on this subject. The House can not afford, neither can we on this side afford, to close our doors with no legislation on the subject. We talk about the national debt. We have been legislating for weeks and months about our national debt, and yet look for a moment on the railroad property of this country, which to-day is appraised at their own figures at nearly $7,000,000,000. According to Poore's Manual the value is double the actual cost, say $3,000,000,000. The figures are almost staggering. In what manner has this immense debt—because it is a debt upon the people—been piled up? In the early days they had Credit Mobiliers, and little and distinguished statesmen in this land and men intelligent, prominent in the social and financial world and in the politics of the country, were in them. I am speaking about the system, not about individuals; and a great authority on this matter explains how these securities are sold and how they are purchased.

By purchase, on the same terms as they were sold on the Boston market to all applicants—

Of course it is all right, as it was done in Boston—

sold to Josiah Bardwell, to Elisha Atkins, and to other reputable merchants, securities, which were divided, as is usual in such enterprises, into three kinds, first-mortgage bonds, second-mortgage bonds, and stock. The price, I think, was three for one; that is, the purchaser got first-mortgage bonds for his money, and an equal amount of second-mortgage or land-grant bonds and of stock thrown in as the basis of possible profit.

This is the history of the system. It applies not only to the Northern Pacific but to other roads. That is the way it is done on the Boston market, and that of course is the highest type of nobility and honesty in all financial transactions. Three for one! Look at it for a moment—three for one. Here are $6,000,000,000 of securities that according to the statement of this man who is above reproach—you know who he is—that actually cost their holders $2,000,000,000. Beyond that are $4,000,000,000 which are held as mortgages on the State of Michigan, on the State of Oregon, and on the States of Kansas and Nebraska and other States—$4,000,000,000 for which these gentlemen have not paid a farthing. We have in this way an incumbrance of more than the national debt and worse than the national debt. The national debt we can pay; this debt can never be paid. They hold it forever. They say, "We must have interest on our mortgage, we must have dividends on our stock," when they hold that stock and those bonds on the basis of three to one. For every dollar in actual money supplied they have $3 on which they are drawing interest. Of the more than $6,000,000,000 only $2,000,000,000 have been actually expended and the $4,000,000,000 stand to-day as a mortgage upon the prosperity, upon the wealth, upon the earnings of the people.

In the face of that fact are we to be told we must now be so considerate that we will not delay for thirty or sixty days this huge corporation reaching out its hand upon a piece of road which at the time it was built they did not expect to be a part of their branch or main line. Whether they did or not this Congress is considering the question to-day. In 1870 they began; at that time Henry Wilson raised his voice; but at that time these men asked that they should have more land, and they obtained it. They had a grant in 1864 of forty miles on each side of the road, and ten miles for the selection of indemnity lands, giving a strip of 100 miles for 2,000 miles in length. They came in 1870, when they had not built a mile of road, and wanted more. I hear men talk about those who invested their private fortunes, but they came in 1870 when they had never built a mile of their road and never spent a dollar of their private fortunes. They said they had not been able to sell their bonds; that they had not been able to induce other people to put in their money to build the road. The charter was given in 1864.

"Now that there may be some question as to the full amount that was intended," they said, "give us ten miles more beyond the original one hundred miles." And it was at that time when they came asking to make the width of their grant one hundred and twenty miles that a Senator from Massachusetts, in the face of the pecuniary interest in his own State, was willing to stand up and declare that he was for justice to the nation and justice to the landless and to the settlers on the lands. Notwithstanding that then, as ever since, and possibly to-day it may be the same, Congress extended their grant ten miles more on each side, giving their land grant a width of one hundred and twenty miles through the Territories over which I suppose my friend from Oregon exercises a sort of semi-protective care, and withdrew from market a tract of land five hundred miles long and one hundred and twenty miles in width. And now, twenty years from the date of the original grant, and these gentlemen have not yet completed their contract with the Government. Now we merely ask that they shall delay a few days, that they shall be kept in abeyance until this whole matter is passed upon. They have able advocates; they have gentlemen who are willing to rise on this floor and ask that still more shall be granted by refusing this delay so as to give them an opportunity to obtain lands for this branch, which we say they are not entitled to. If it be taken and conveyed to them that will end it; you can never get the Congress of the United States to interfere. All that is asked by this resolution is that action shall be withheld until Congress shall have an opportunity to decide the question.

The Senate will pardon me the length of time I have occupied on this question. I have felt it my duty to say this much, because it is extremely difficult to get before the Senate any question connected with the forfeiture of land grants, extremely difficult to get any measure to restrain these gentlemen within the limits of the law itself.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3108) to protect fish in the Potomac River in the District of Columbia, and to provide a spawning-ground for shad and herring in the said Potomac River;

A bill (H. R. 4651) to amend an act approved July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes;" and

A bill (H. R. 6526) making an appropriation for the completion of the sewerage system of the District of Columbia.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be announced.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 2228) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and for other purposes, passed by the Senate with amendments May 8, the pending question being an appeal from the decision of the Chair that a request for a conference is in order before the House has come to a disagreement on the Senate amendments.

Mr. DAWES. I move to proceed to consider the Indian appropriation bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate proceed to consider the Indian appropriation bill. [Having put the question.] The ayes appear to have it. The ayes have it, and the Indian appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I rise to a question of order. What is the effect of a declaration that that vote has passed, upon the pending question, the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is superseded.

Mr. FRYE. Will it remain as unfinished business after this is through?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be the next thing to be laid before the Senate after the appropriation bill is disposed of, if that be to-day. How it will be to-morrow the Chair is not prepared to decide at this moment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4994) to vacate an alley in square 234 in the city of Washington; and

A bill (H. R. 6629) taxing shares of incorporated banks in the District of Columbia as other personal property.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 231) providing for the distribution of the Congressional Globe; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 239) to fill vacancies existing in the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6092) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. HAWLEY to amend the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations in line 1084, section 1, reducing the appropriation "for support and education of Indian children at industrial schools in Alaska" from $15,000 to $10,000, by striking out "$10,000" and inserting "$25,000."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, when I made this simple and as I supposed comparatively unimportant motion I certainly was not expecting a full discussion of the relation of the nation to the Indian, nor of the whole educational question. This was one of the mere little offshoots, one of the minor branches. The bill came to the Senate from the House appropriating $15,000 for industrial schools in Alaska. The Committee on Appropriations reports an amendment proposing to strike out $15,000 and insert $10,000. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Secretary of the Interior, and the President recommend that there be not less than $25,000 appropriated. My motion proposes to raise it to $25,000.

This, I conceive, is a stronger question than the ordinary ones which have already been passed upon in this bill. I certainly did not suppose that an addition of $10,000 on the recommendation of the Department could meet with a serious objection when the same Committee on Appropriations within the preceding twenty lines have raised the House appropriations from $400,000 to $650,000.

> For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, and in pursuance of treaty obligations, $550,000; for construction and repair of school buildings, $75,000; and for purchase of cattle and sheep for schools, $25,000; in all, $650,000.

The proposition we are discussing is, I say, a stronger one altogether than those upon which we have already agreed to. I ask the Secretary to read one article of the treaty with the Emperor of all the Russias concerning the Territory of Alaska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE III.

> The inhabitants of the ceded territory, according to their choice, reserving their natural allegiance, may return to Russia within three years; but if they should prefer to remain in the ceded territory, they, with the exception of uncivilized native tribes, shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States, and shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion. The uncivilized tribes will be subject to such laws and regulations as the United States may from time to time adopt in regard to aboriginal tribes of that country.

Mr. HAWLEY. The President of the United States, in his message of December 4, 1882, informed us that—

> Alaska is still without any form of civil government. If means were provided for the education of its people, and for the protection of their lives and property, the immense resources of the region would invite permanent settlements and open new fields for industry and enterprise.

In his message of last December the President said:

> I trust that Congress will not fail at the present session to put Alaska under the protection of law. Its people have repeatedly remonstrated against our neglect to afford them the maintenance and protection expressly guaranteed by the terms of the treaty whereby that Territory was ceded to the United States. For sixteen years they have pleaded in vain for that which they should have received without the asking. They have no law for the collection of debts, the support of education, the conveyance of property, the administration of estates, or the enforcement of contracts; none, indeed, for the punishment of criminals except such as offend against certain customs, commerce, and navigation acts. The resources of Alaska, especially in fur, mines, and lumber, are considerable in extent and capable of large development, while its geographical situation is one of political and commercial importance. The promptings of interest, therefore, as well as considerations of honor and good faith, demand the immediate establishment of civil government in that Territory.

It would seem therefore to be an obvious duty to do something for the benefit of those people. There is not a justice of the peace there. There can be no action for the simplest trespass upon the rights of person or of property. If we say they might do something toward educating themselves, the answer is, there is no law under which they can levy even a school-tax—they are absolutely helpless; and so they have been for these sixteen years.

So I confess I was not a little surprised when the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] opened upon this innocent proposition all the whole question of the relation of the Federal Government to the Indians and the whole question of their education and the possibility of their redemption as a race. Indeed, he doubted whether education of any kind would do any Indian any good anywhere, and he seemed to advocate the rightfulness of the proposition that the Indian, as of the weaker race, must go to the wall and be absolutely crushed out of existence as ignorant, useless, and an incumbrance upon the earth.

He says virtually that education, at any rate that ordinarily given, does the Indian no good. I was not speaking of the education ordinarily given—the common day-school, the public school. My amendment has reference to a proposition that I should have thought the Senator would advocate, because it is in the line of the practical ideas he advances. This proposes industrial schools for Alaska. It proposes to teach the Indian youth how they may earn their living in the practical arts of life. Some time ago, while we were discussing the bill for the government of Alaska, the proposition offered by the Senator from Kansas was this:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall make equal and proper provision for the education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska, without reference to race, until such time as permanent provision shall be made for the same; and the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

He proposed to give the exact sum of money that I propose to give, and his proposition was not so valuable as mine according to his own reasoning, because he proposed to give them the ordinary form of school education, and I propose the industrial school, which seems to me to be well adapted to their immediate necessities.

I might concede half what he said and still advocate this appropriation. The Senator speaks very slightingly indeed of the religious and benevolent associations which have interested themselves so much with the question of Indian education in Alaska or elsewhere. I regard that chapter of religious, benevolent, and private effort as one of the redeeming features in the history of this question. Nor would I confine my eulogies to the people of any denomination, or sect, or class, from Eliot, the Indian apostle of New England, and the Jesuits who wandered over the whole vast Western region two hundred years ago, carrying with their creed the most ardent devotion to the present, to these days of women's societies all over the land that so pester us with their petitions. I say the chapter on the whole has been one honorable to human nature. I pay my tribute of profound respect to the good men and good women, to the bishops, the preachers, and the teachers who have gone out into the wilderness, and to the people who subscribed last year $249,000 for the education of this dependent race, 32 per cent. as much as the Government proposes to give now, and a very much larger proportion, quite half as much as the Government itself gave last year.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question about his amendment so that I may understand it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. Is this industrial school to be confined to boys alone?

Mr. HAWLEY. I suppose not, for there is nothing in the amendment and nothing in the proposition of the Interior Department to confine it to boys alone.

Mr. VEST. Are the industrial schools to be also boarding-schools?

Mr. HAWLEY. That I can not say.

Mr. VEST. That is a very important question.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is of course very much left to the Secretary of the Interior in this particular matter, as there is in the expenditure of a large portion of this money. Other provisions leave the work to his discretion, and he has shown I think in some of his latter communications what will be considered by the American people generally as very strong and real common sense concerning the work.

Mr. VEST. I do not want to interrupt the Senator further, but the answer to the questions I have asked would to a very great extent determine my action upon this matter. From my own personal experience I would not vote a dollar, if I could help it, to any day-school among the Indians, or to any school where both sexes are not educated, and I can give my reasons for it resulting from what I have seen and what I know myself. With my judgment of what I believe will be the action of the Interior Department about it, I would want this amendment so defined that it would be a boarding-school as well as an industrial school, and that both sexes would be educated at it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I presume I should yield very cheerfully to any amendment the Senator might suggest upon that question, because I know his familiarity with the subject, and I know he has sound practical judgment; but I leave it rather to the member of the Committee on Appropriations who has the bill in charge. I simply advocate the general proposition that it is a very small thing indeed to do to now give for the first time the small sum of $25,000 for the education of the 20,000 people whom we took under our guardianship sixteen years ago, and for whose education we have not spent one single farthing. Any reasonable limitation upon the method of expenditure I should be very glad to support.

It is the custom to denounce, to censure, and I may say to abuse the Government of the United States for its treatment of the Indians. I think the other side can be taken with great reason. I admit the extraordinary evils and wrongs that the rough waves of civilization have brought upon those poor people, but if we appeal to the record, if we appeal to the President's messages from the foundation of the Government, and to the innumerable treaties, and to the great field of legislation in which Congress has tried to deal with the subject, we shall find the Government generally, yes, I may say without an exception, pervaded by a sense of justice and generosity, and an acknowledgment of the great claims that this dependent and inferior race has upon us.

After listening to the speech of the Senator from Kansas the other day I went down stairs, and to gratify my curiosity looked to see what the various Presidents had said upon the subject. I find, though I believe not in a message, Washington recommending "a system corresponding with the mild principles of religion and philanthropy toward an unenlightened race of men whose happiness materially depends upon the conduct of the United States," and in various papers commending benevolent and enlightened legislation with regard to them. I omit the succeeding Presidents and come down to General Jackson, who certainly is not liable to the charge of being a sentimentalist in these matters, and who had in fierce and savage war contended with some of these Indian nations. I ask the Secretary to read what he said in his first annual message.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Our conduct toward these people is deeply interesting to our national character. Their present condition contrasted with what they once were makes a most powerful appeal to our sympathies. Our ancestors found them the uncontrolled possessors of these vast regions. By persuasion and force they have been made to retire from river to river and from mountain to mountain until some of the tribes have become extinct and others have left but remnants to preserve for awhile their once terrible names. Surrounded by the whites with their art of civilization, which by destroying the resources of the savage doom him to weakness and decay, the fate of the Mohegan, the Narraganset, and the Delaware is fast overtaking the Choctaw, the Cherokee, and the Creek. That this fate surely awaits them if they remain within the limits of the States does not admit of a doubt. Humanity and national honor demand that every effort should be made to avert so great a calamity. It is too late to inquire whether it was just in the United States to include them and their territory within the bounds of new States whose limits they could control. That step can not be retraced. A State can not be dismembered by Congress or restricted in the exercise of her constitutional power. But the people of those States and of every State, actuated by feelings of justice and regard for our national honor, submit to you the interesting question whether something can not be done consistently with the rights of the States to preserve this much injured race.

As a means of effecting this end, I suggest for your consideration the propriety of setting apart an ample district west of the Mississippi, and without the limits of any State or Territory now formed, to be guaranteed to the Indian tribes as long as they shall occupy it, each tribe having a distinct control over the portion designated for its use. There they may be secured in the enjoyment of governments of their own choice, subject to no other control from the United States than such as may be necessary to preserve peace on the frontier and between the several tribes. There the benevolent may endeavor to teach them the arts of civilization, and by promoting union and harmony among them to raise up an interesting commonwealth destined to perpetuate the race and to attest the humanity and justice of this Government.

Mr. HAWLEY. Early in the Government attention was directed to the difficulties likely to arise from the erection of virtually independent nations within the limits of the States, and the project was entertained of removing these people to a territory that should be dedicated to their use. The purposes were excellent. General Jackson was the first President who took this view with zeal and energy, an energy that was imitated by no other President but Jackson until we come to Grant.

Mr. HOAR. I am very much tempted to ask the courtesy of the Senator from Connecticut to say that I have seen within a very few weeks a remarkable letter from President Lincoln, in which he declared that as soon as the war was over it was his purpose to address himself as next in importance to the Indian policy, with a view of putting the Indians under the jurisdiction of the United States on an equality with all other citizens under the Constitution and laws. I wish I had that letter present.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thank the Senator; I wish he had it here. It is in accordance with what we know of Mr. Lincoln's character. I wish he could have lived to carry out that policy. Substantially those ideas were taken up with very great energy, as we know, by General Grant.

General Jackson pushed the work through, I say, with his accustomed force, and in subsequent messages, recurring to this thing with the same temper, was able to say, before he was through his second term of office, that he had succeeded substantially in his work of removing those tribes and establishing the Indian Territory. He had the greatest hopes of the future of that land. I do not say that time has justified his sanguine expectations, but I do say that the condition of all those people there is an immense improvement upon their condition when they lived in Georgia and the surrounding country. There was perpetual war, and in those conflicts Jackson himself had participated. They have been removed and are better off, with such churches and schools and such partial civilization at least as they have, than they were before or than they could possibly have been under their old circumstances.

Now I come down to that man who has been called a merciless warrior, Ulysses S. Grant, and I ask the Secretary to read two extracts from his first message.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

From the foundation of the Government to the present the management of the original inhabitants of this continent, the Indians, has been a subject of embarrassment and expense, and has been attended with continuous robberies, murders, and wars. From my own experience upon the frontiers and in Indian countries I do not hold either legislation or the conduct of the whites who come most into contact with the Indian blameless for these hostilities. The past, however, can not be undone, and the question must be met as we now find it.

I have attempted a new policy toward these wards of the nation—they can not be regarded in any other light than as wards—with fair results so far as tried, and which I hope will be attended ultimately with great success. The Society of Friends is well known as having succeeded in living in peace with the Indians in the early settlement of Pennsylvania, while their white neighbors of other sects in other sections were constantly embroiled. They are also known for their opposition to all strife, violence, and war, and are generally noted for their strict integrity and fair dealings. These considerations induced me to give the management of a few reservations of Indians to them and to throw the burden of selection of agents upon the society itself. The result has proved most satisfactory.

* * * * * * *

No matter what ought to be the relations between such settlements and the aborigines, the fact is they do not harmonize well, and one or the other has to give way in the end. A system which looks to the extinction of a race is too horrible for a nation to adopt without entailing upon itself the wrath of all Christendom and engendering in the citizen a disregard for human life and the rights of others dangerous to society. I see no substitute for such a system except in placing all the Indians on large reservations as rapidly as it can be done, and giving them absolute protection there. As soon as they are fitted for it they should be induced to take their lands in severalty and to set up territorial governments for their own protection.

Mr. HAWLEY. I might quote like sentiments from every message General Grant sent to Congress, for he followed this question with his accustomed energy and perseverance, and was to some extent liberally seconded by Congress. I find a passage in his third annual message which I will read:

I recommend liberal appropriations to carry out the Indian peace policy, not only because it is humane, Christian-like, and economical, but because it is right.

I am perfectly willing to place myself on this question by the side of such sentimentalists as Washington, Jackson, and Grant, and I seek to go no further, nor does the most ardent friend of the Indian attempt any more than they desired. No President has ever so distinguished himself by advocating enlightened and Christian practice with regard to the Indians as did General Grant.

Against the suggestions of the Senator from Kansas are the recommendations of all our Presidents, the legislation of all our Congresses, the history of all churches from the settlement of the continent down to this day, the present opinions and action of all the religious and benevolent organizations; against him are the opinions and action of this Congress; against him is the very bill under consideration.

Let me read a word or two from some other and later hard-headed soldiers. I have never conversed with any of the old veteran soldiers of the Army who had passed a long time in the Western region dealing practically with the Indians that I did not hear from them generous sentiments and what I call enlightened and statesmanlike doctrine. The first time I saw the great General Thomas I spent an evening with him, in town here, in company with others, and he was led to talk upon the Indian question. He spent some two hours discussing it. All that he said was in precisely the line of the talk of Jackson and of Grant. It was filled with generous sentiments, with belief in the possibility of the Indians being saved from that final extermination prophesied by so many. He said among other things that the prime essential in dealing with those people was to tell the truth, to tell the truth always and to keep a promise, because to the white man when you failed to keep a promise you could give an apology that might be understood, but the Indian never understood it if you did not fulfill your agreement. He spoke even of friendships that he had among leading veterans of the Indians, and in general recommended the policy which I here, and which we here, most of us, are advocating.

But in 1867 a commission was sent out. Let me read the names of them, some citizens and some soldiers: N. G. Taylor, J. B. Henderson, Lieut. Gen. W. T. Sherman, Bvt. Maj. Gen. William S. Harney, John B. Sanborn, Bvt. Maj. Gen. Alfred H. Terry, S. F. Tappan, and Bvt. Maj. Gen. C. C. Auger. The commission was sent out to examine our Indians as they stood then in general, and to recommend what they might think best for the civilization of the race. That document (House Executive Document No. 97, Fortieth Congress, second session) is honorable to them and creditable to the civilization of the country; but it is "sentimental." It is as "sentimental" as anything from these good people who send us petitions or from any preacher or teacher who tells us that God made the Indian and we have no right to shoot him on sight. There was no man who had fought the Indians more savagely than Harney himself, and there was not a man in the world the Indians would more respect and trust than he. When he fought, he fought them sternly; when he met them after the fight and made peace they considered Harney's word better than anybody else's bond. If such men could have dealt with them all the while we should have had comparatively little trouble. This board says;

If an Indian is to be trusted at all, he must be trusted to the full extent of his word. If you betray symptoms of distrust he discovers it with nature's intuition, and at once condemns the falsehood that would blend friendship and suspicion together. Whatever our people may choose to say of the insincerity or duplicity of the Indian would fail to express the estimate entertained by many Indians of the white man's character in this respect. Promises have been so often broken by those with whom they usually come in contact, cupidity has so long plied its work deaf to their cries of suffering and heartless cruelty, has so frequently sought them in the garb of charity, that to obtain their confidence our promises must be scrupulously fulfilled and our professions of friendship divested of all appearance of selfishness and duplicity.

Again:

The statement of this fact, if it proves nothing else, may serve to indicate that the Indian, though barbarous, is yet a man, susceptible to those feelings which ordinarily respond to the exercise of magnanimity and kindness. If it should suggest to civilization that the injunction to "do good to them that hate us" is not confined to race, but broad as humanity itself, it may do some good even to ourselves. It will at least for the practical man, honestly seeking a solution of these troubles, serve a better purpose than whole pages of theorizing upon Indian character.

But I forbear reading these extracts. There are several in the course of that very able and interesting report from these practical men that have the same general tendency and character.

The Senator asks, under what obligation are we to these people? I have shown you what the treaty obligation is, entered into with the Russian, and I have indicated the general course of the legislation toward the Indians within our own borders. If possible there is a double force in the duty that rests upon us in regard to the Alaskans; but besides that there is another obligation, the obligation that rests upon us because we are the superior race. We are told sometimes, not so much here as we are outside, that being the superior, the stronger, and the greater race these people must go to the wall and must vanish. That I hold with Grant and these other warriors to be an un-Christian doctrine. The real obligation, the great trust rests upon us precisely because we are of the superior race. It is a special duty that we shall take hold of them, lift them up and build them up and not permit them to be annihilated by these wild storms of frontier civilization. The question as to who is my neighbor is an old question. How the world has decided that, the Christian world, we all know. The oldest form of it was the query of Cain—"Am I my brother's keeper?"—and for that Cain became a branded and lonesome but distinguished tramp. In the judgment of civilization that brand of condemnation follows the creed of Cain to this day. We are our brother's keepers, Mr. President; the Indian is our brother, and we can not escape our obligations.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the action of the Senate upon the bill, but I should like to say a few words about this amendment. I know nothing personally and very little by reading of the Indians of Alaska. I have a general idea that they are fish-eating Indians, very much like the Chinooks on the coast of Oregon. Of course their characteristics are regulated and modified and made a good deal by the climatic influences around them. I suppose they are about in the main like the Indians of Northern Montana, of whom I happen to know something personally.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] spoke of the sentiments of the officers of the Army in regard to the Indians, and particularly of General Grant and General Thomas. General Sheridan has been credited with having made a remark which is found frequently in the papers and used greatly among the Western people, that the only good Indian was a dead Indian. He never said anything of the sort, as I have been informed from his own lips. I traveled with him last summer four hundred miles in the West, and we frequently conversed in regard to the Indian question. His sentiments were as humane, as just, as Christian as those of any one with whom I have ever talked upon this subject.

My experience after I left him on the North Pacific Railroad among the Indians of Montana corroborated the truth of his assertion in regard to the correct practice, or what should be the correct practice, of the Government with regard to these unfortunate people. It is no question of sentiment and it ought not to be any question of theory. We have found out after a hundred years, it seems to me, the only practical method in which we ought to deal with the Indians. To say that we owe them all we could do is to say very little.

I was conversing not long ago with a very eminent divine on this subject, and I said to him: "Sir, you appeal to us upon each recurring Sabbath that we should give out of our substance to foreign missions. Let me say to you as an humble layman that your churches have at their own doors, and appealing to them in tones that should not be neglected for one single instant, a people as absolutely heathen, who have heard as little of the gospel, who have as little knowledge of God or of our Savior as any heathen upon the face of the earth, and the difference between the heathen that you are providing for in your foreign missions and the heathen in our own country is simply this: that one people we have robbed, and the other we have not."

We have robbed the Indians of this country. We have taken from them all that they had. We have driven them farther and farther West, until last summer I witnessed scenes of absolute privation, of absolute starvation among the Indians of Northern Montana that are simply incredible, and that should bring the blush of shame to every American citizen. In a council with the Gros Ventres and the Assinaboines in Northern Montana, one of the chiefs rose in council and said to me: "One of my children (speaking of one of his own tribe, for they term all the tribe their children) is now dying of starvation." Upon examination I found it to be an actual fact, and during the past winter hundreds of them have died in sight of a Christian people, in a land overflowing with abundance; and yet those people having no votes, no representatives, not being felt in a Presidential contest, Senators and Representatives are apt to turn away and to look to appropriations and to measures of material benefit to their own people whom they represent here.

If any man should give his life to the cause of elevating and educating the Indian it would be the grandest mission to which he could devote every hour of his existence. I will proceed at a little length on this subject, although it has become almost tiresome to mention the subject. Anybody who seems to take any real interest in this matter is looked upon as a sentimentalist. The prevailing idea in the West is that all an Indian is good for is to kill him; that he is a robber; that he has taken land away from the whites.

I was requested by the Secretary of the Interior, having the honor to be one of a committee of which my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] was chairman, to visit the reservations of the West last summer. The Secretary of the Interior mentioned to me personally, as he did, I believe, to the committee before, that in the Bitter Root Valley in Montana there was a portion of the Flathead Indians who would not go upon the Jocko reservation but who persisted in remaining there in that beautiful valley, the most beautiful I ever saw, in spite of a solemn treaty stipulation; and he put into my hands a copy of a treaty made in 1872, a published treaty, the first name to which was Charlos, head chief of the Flatheads, by which they agreed to leave their country on the demand of the President, and go to what is called the Jocko reservation on the Northern Pacific Railway as it now runs. From the time that I entered Montana until I went to that band of Indians in the Bitter Root Valley, I heard but one statement except from the Jesuits, and that was that those Indians were there in spite of a plain treaty; that they were violating the law; that they ought to be put out at the point of the bayonet; that they were vagrants; that they were a nuisance upon the face of the earth; and curses and imprecations were heaped upon them in every direction, and that too by men high in authority. The people of Montana, a large portion of whom are Missourians, are just the average people of the West, neither better nor worse; but they have actually come to believe that the Indian has no right at all in the country; that he ought to be driven out; that he is bound to be exterminated and the sooner it happens the better for all parties.

I went to Bitter Root Valley and I had with me this printed copy signed by Charlos, Airlee, and Adolph, the three chiefs of the Flatheads, and by James A. Garfield, the agent of the United States to negotiate the treaty. In Mr. Garfield's report I saw intimations that Charlos had never signed the treaty; and after conversation with the Jesuits, I became satisfied that something wrong existed, and that there was some mistake. When I saw Charlos in a council at Stevensville, in the Bitter Root Valley, he persisted in the assertion that he had never signed that treaty. I pointed him his name. He could not read of course, but I got a Jesuit father who acted as interpreter to interpret to him his name. "Charlos, his mark." Said he, "I never put my mark there." I turned around to Mr. MAGINNIS, the Delegate from Montana, who was with me on the subcommittee, and said: "This Indian is telling the truth." "No," said Mr. MAGINNIS, "it is impossible; there is the printed treaty, and he is here in defiance of law with three hundred and fifty of his people who refuse to go with the rest to the Jocko reservation." To make a long story short, I could do nothing with Charlos. His only reply to me was, when I offered him land and houses and cattle over on the Jocko, "This is my country; it belonged to my fathers; you can take me away from here though, but you can not take me away alive." Said I, "Charlos, you are a good Indian; you refused to join Joseph in his raid with the Nez Percés, and you protected the whites in their property. My instructions from the Interior Department are, and it is the wish of our committee, to deal with you as leniently as possible. What do you propose to do?" Said he, "I will take my people and I will go; I will leave here." Said I, "Where will you go?" Said he, "I will go to the plains." Said I, "There are no plains for you; you must go where the President says you must go. The whites are like the leaves upon the trees, and you have barely eighty warriors; you can not fight the Government, and you had better take my terms and move to the reservation." Said he, "How can I believe you when you have there in your hand a paper which is a printed lie? You have robbed me of my land; you have taken away the homes that were given to me by the President of the United States years ago; and now you come and promise me more when you have not kept the promises you have already made."

I came back to Washington city, went to the Secretary of the Interior, had a clerk detailed, and down in the basement of the Interior Department I found the original treaty made in 1872, and Charlos had told the truth; his name had never been put to it; and yet the people of Montana believe to-day that that Indian has violated his treaty; that he is upon that land contrary to the express stipulations and promises that he made in that treaty with Garfield.

I went to eleven tribes of Indians in Montana, traveling some four hundred and odd miles in order to reach their different councils; I talked with each of them; and I say here now as my deliberate conviction that there is but one system by which these people can be saved from ultimate extinction. It is useless to talk about the reservation system as now adopted ever resulting in anything but harm. Although General Grant had great experience among the Indians of the West, I disagree wit him in toto when he says that large reservations should be kept up for the purpose of civilizing the Indians now remaining on this continent.

Immense reservations are simply an invitation to barbarism. You have now upon the reservations of the West, and especially in Montana, two, three, and four million acres of land for twelve or fifteen hundred Indians. The result is that they do not acquire, and they can not in the nature of things acquire any of the habitudes or ideas of civilized life. They are still roaming savages, going from one end of the reservation to the other. Until you put the Indians upon farms, upon lands in severalty, until you teach them the simple fact that they must support themselves, you can never make any advance, you can never take one step toward making them citizens of the United States, as they should be.

Now, as to education, in all my wanderings in Montana last summer I saw but one ray of light on the subject of Indian education. I am a Protestant, born one, educated one, expect to die one, but I say now that the system adopted by the Jesuits is the only practicable system for the education of the Indians and the only one that has resulted in anything at all. When the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, said the other day that the reason of the success of the Jesuits more than any other sect with the Indians was that they devoted their whole lives to the work, he struck the keynote of the entire situation. Take a Protestant clergyman and send him to the West, I do not care how active and zealous he may be, he goes there with his family ties; he goes there looking back to civilization, he goes there half devoting himself from a sense of duty to this uncongenial life.

Take a Jesuit and what does he do? He is a semi-military preacher. He belongs to the company of Jesus. He owns nothing but the robe upon his back. If he receives an order from the commander of the company at the dead hour of night to arise and go to Asia, he goes without a question. He is a number, he is not a man. He is segregated from the world. I talked with Father Cavallier at St. Mary's Mission, who had been fifty-two years among the Indians in Montana, had devoted his whole life to them, had been sent there from Italy, an accomplished physician; and when I visited him at his little room in the mission he was lying there, having been bed-ridden for five years and still administering medicines and performing surgical operations on each recurring day. This man's whole life was given up to the work, and what is the result? To-day the Flathead Indians are a hundred per cent. advanced over any other Indians in point of civilization; at least in Montana.

Fifty years ago the Jesuits went among them, and to-day you see the result. Among all those tribes, commencing with the Shoshones, the Arapahoes, the Gros Ventres, the Blackfeet, the Piegans, the River Crows, the Bloods, and Assinaboines, the only ray of light I saw was on the Flathead reservation at the Jesuit mission schools, and there were boys and girls—fifty boys and fifty girls. They raise cattle; the Indian boys herd them. They have mills; the Indian boys attend them. They have blacksmiths' shops; the Indian boys work in them. When I was there they were building two school-houses, all the work done by the scholars at the mission. They can not raise corn to any extent in that climate, but they raise enough vegetables and enough oats to support the whole school; and I never saw in my life a finer herd of cattle or horses than they had upon that mission. Five nuns, sisters, and five fathers constitute the teachers in the respective schools. We had a school examination there lasting through two days. I undertake to say now that never in the States was there a better examination than I heard at that mission of children of the same ages with those that I saw there. The girls were taught needlework; they were taught to sew and to teach; they were taught music; they were taught to keep house. The young men were taught to work upon the farm, to herd cattle, to be blacksmiths and carpenters and millwrights.

Here is the whole of it in one single sentence: I asked Father Van Court, the father in charge of the mission, to give me his experience as an Indian teacher and to state what had given the school its remarkable success. He said it resulted from the fact that they taught both boys and girls. He said for twenty year the Jesuits had had only a male school. I call the attention of Senators who are interested in this question to this single point. He said when they educated the boys and graduated them at the school they went back to the tribe; they were immediately received with jeers and with reproaches, told that they had white blood in their veins, that they talked like the white people, and that they dressed like the white people, and that they were apostates to their race. The result was that the Indian, in order to maintain his position with his fellows, became a worse barbarian than he ever had been before.

I do not want to say anything against the schools at Hampton or Carlisle. I undertook on that expedition to use one or two of those scholars as interpreters. All it seemed to me they had advanced in was to learn to deplete the plains of running horses, and General Sheridan agreed with me that they were the most expert horse-thieves on the top of the earth. They go back, and instead of teaching the other Indians in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred they collapse into barbarism.

I come again to the point which I am seeking to make. Father Van Court told me that the Flatheads had not advanced in civilization until the Jesuits had established female schools in connection with the male schools. Then what was the result? When a class graduated in the male school a class also graduated in the female school. A great many marriages took place between them. From the fact that the girls and boys were both educated by the Jesuits, they necessarily were thrown together, and by a similarity of tastes and by their advance in civilization they were kept away from the rest of the tribe. They became husband and wife, and as soon as that took place the Jesuits and the agent built them a little house, broke them up a piece of ground, and the single ouple became a nucleus of civilization and Christianity in that portion of the reservation where they were thus received.

If we educate the girls alone they go back to the tribe and collapse into worse barbarism than ever. You must educate the sexes together in order that the one shall support the other, in order that they may go out to the battle against barbarism hand in hand; and until you do it it is absolutely money thrown away to take either sex and undertake to educate them separately.

The Jesuits have the key to the whole problem. They have learned it by actual experience, and the result is shown to-day. Let any Senator take the North Pacific Railroad and get off at Airlee and go out to these missions and he will see farms with cattle upon them; he will see the Indians cutting logs, carrying them to saw-mills, getting out plank and putting them up into houses with their own hands. He will see them attending mass regularly, and he will see the Indian people anxious to go to school, but not to day-schools.

I saw not one day-school in the eleven tribes that we visited in Montana where the Indians had learned a solitary thing. As the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] said the other day, and that part of his speech I heartily approve, the only attendance at those day-schools is on ration day. One lady, a teacher, who was getting, I believe, $800 a year, told me that on ration day she had five hundred scholars, and the rest of the week from fifty to sixty and seventy-five.

It is impossible to educate an Indian if you let him go back to his family each day. In the first place, the Indians are utterly averse to the idea that the boys should work. It is right enough for women to work; they are made to work, according to their philosophy, but it degrades a man to work. Old Airlee, the second chief of the Flatheads, abused the school to me in the council over on the railroad, and denounced it, and I found out his objection to it was that he sent his boy over there and the fathers put him to work in the field. In other words, as he said to me, "I did not send my boy there to be a squaw." He did not intend him to be degraded by any manual exercise at all.

It is perfectly evident that with such prejudices, with such feeling in regard to sustaining one's self by actual labor, it is simply impossible to do anything for those people or to advance them one single degree until you take their children away from them. I would not take them off to the States; I would not take them where they would acquire ideas which are alien to Indian life. The Jesuits, I repeat, have found the secret of the whole system, and that is in the boarding-schools, industrial schools, upon the reservations, where the children are taken and where the parents are permitted to visit them once each week, but always in the presence of one of the fathers, and when they come to take them off hunting and fishing they are met with a firm but earnest refusal, and they are told the child must stay there and learn to work or he must be taken away entirely.

With these views, based on no theory but on actual experience and observation, I offer an amendment to that proposed by the Senator from Connecticut. After the word "children," in line 1083, I propose to add "of both sexes;" and after the word "industrial," in line 1084, I move to insert the word "boarding;" so as to read:

For support and education of Indian children of both sexes at industrial boarding-schools in Alaska, $25,000.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator to withhold his amendment. It will not be in order until after the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut is disposed of.

Mr. VEST. Certainly; I simply want to suggest the idea. As to the amount, I shall vote just as much as the Senate may be induced to vote. I will go as far as any Senator, provided it does not go to day-schools and provided it goes to schools for the benefit of both sexes. As to our duty, a plain and manifest one in the premises, it is almost an insult to make an appeal to any intelligent man as to what we owe to those unfortunate people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri offer an amendment?

Mr. VEST. I will offer it at the proper time. I simply suggest it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I did indulge the hope that we should get through with this bill without any extended debate or consumption of time upon it; but a debate has arisen without any provocation of mine over the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, which involves the whole policy of the Government in relation to the Indian, calculated to shake the confidence of the public in an effort on the part of the Government of the United States to institute a new policy and method of treatment of the Indians. Therefore I have felt that it was possibly incumbent upon me that I should say a word or two, not confined especially to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut, but upon the general question whether the large provisions in this bill are wise or whether they ought to be abandoned, for there is a considerable appropriation, begun several years ago, and I am happy to say, in the confidence I have in the wisdom of those appropriations, they have been increasing from year to year, and I hope will continue to increase until the purpose and object of the appropriations shall have been accomplished. Yet if what was said here on Friday is true, we had better lose no time in abandoning this new method of treating with the Indian question.

It is not a new question. The Indian problem has been always with us. From the day the Pilgrim father landed on Plymouth Rock and the cavalier at Jamestown to this day the people of this country have met it, encountered it, and have undertaken to solve it. It is a little singular that although all the accounts of the Indians lead us to believe that there were no more Indians two hundred and fifty years ago upon this continent than there are to-day, civilization coming in contact with barbarism in this form has struggled with it and struggled with it in vain for two hundred and fifty years, and finds itself confronting to-day, as it did then, barbarism in the person of only about 250,000 or 300,000 people almost as intact as when they first encountered it.

Up to within the last five or ten years we had not even been able to teach the Indian the language we taught ourselves. Five years ago there were scarcely a thousand Indians who could speak the English language, and far less the number who followed the ways of civilization. We have had various methods of treating the subject since we became a government. All of them have proved failures, all of them have involved the Government in an immense expenditure of money, and have left the record anything but honorable on our part in our dealing with them. We undertook to treat with them as independent nations. When the Government was first formed we had the idea that there could be many independent nations within our own borders with authority and power, that we should treat with as independent nations; and yet we found it utterly impossible to keep ourselves our agreements with them. The treaties we made came to be with ourselves mere idle words. The progress of population and immigration was like a mighty wave sweeping our boundaries and limitations away without the slightest regard to the solemn obligations into which we had entered.

Then we undertook to enact a line of non-intercourse with the Indians, running from a point on Lake Erie right where the city of Cleveland now is, in a southeastwardly direction around through the mountains of Tennessee and across North Carolina and terminating in the southeast corner of Georgia, less than seventy-five years ago, and we enacted that if any citizen of or other person resident in the United States or either of the Territorial districts of the United States shall cross over or go within that boundary line he should be fined a sum not exceeding $100 or be imprisoned not exceeding six months; or if he made a settlement beyond the line that he should be fined $1,000 or be imprisoned twelve months. The whole line bristled with penalties from Lake Erie to the Atlantic in Georgia. It lasted two years; and then surrendering our power to maintain our treaties with the Indians, we undertook to compromise with our conscience and with them, and endeavored to create a new country called the Indian Territory, into which we proposed to gather all the Southern Indians. It will do no harm for me to read the solemn words with which we deluded the Indians into the belief that there was at last a land where they could rest in peace:

Whereas it being the anxious desire of the Government of the United States to secure to the Cherokee Nation of Indians, as well as those now living within the limits of the Territory of Arkansas as those of their friends and brothers who reside in States east of the Mississippi, and who may wish to join their brothers of the West, a permanent home, and which shall, under the most solemn guarantee of the United States, be and remain theirs forever—a home that shall never in all future time be embarrassed by having extended around it the lines or placed over it the jurisdiction of a Territory or State, nor be pressed upon by the extension in any way of any of the limits of any existing Territory or State:

* * * * * * *

The United States agree to possess the Cherokees and to guarantee it to them forever, and that guarantee is hereby solemnly pledged.

Of the territory the description of which follows, and in addition thereto—

The United States further guarantee to the Cherokee Nation a perpetual outlet west, and a free and unmolested use of all the country lying west of the western boundary of the above-described limits, and as far west as the sovereignty of the United States and their right of soil extend.

Where is that guarantee now, Mr. President? It is not worth while, and I am not one of those who are disposed to arraign the United States because they were unable to maintain that guarantee. I concede that conditions not comprehended by those who made that treaty have arisen since which have made it utterly impossible to maintain it in its letter and its spirit. I bring it before the Senate at this time merely to show one of the many methods taken by the United States to deal with this question which they have been compelled to abandon.

They then adopted another policy, and that was the reservation policy, by which they were disposed to take the Indians onto large tracts of land beyond civilization, as they supposed, full of game, and away from the encroachments of white people, and put a guard around them and turn them over to their instincts and their love of the chase to support themselves. They found that equally impossible. They began to abandon that very soon, and then they undertook to gather all the Northern Indians down into the Indian Territory; without the slightest regard to the right and title the Indian had to his home in the North, and without any more regard to his life or the conditions under which he had been reared in the cold North, among its mountains and valleys and cold streams, they undertook to hustle him down into the dry and arid plains of the Indian Territory to make an Indian State in the bosom of these States, and the Government has spent many millions of dollars in that cruel and fruitless attempt. They have voluntarily abandoned that also.

They have found another condition of things which has rendered it necessary to change the whole treatment of the Indian question. The tide of civilization has been so rapid, the Indian has been yielding before it so rapidly that he has been found driven by degrees from all the good and arable land of his reservations from time to time into the mountain region, glad enough himself to go there where the game still remained, and where the white man had little inducement to follow him, until it has come to this, that he has as a whole, with some exceptions, I know, very little land assigned to him which he is permitted to call his own, very little land in the United States which a white man by processes of cultivation could gather enough from for his own support. In the mean time the game upon which he was to live when he was set in these great reservations has been rapidly disappearing, till within the last two years more suddenly than any one dreamed of it has disappeared, it has absolutely disappeared, and we are confronted with the Indian in a new aspect.

We have abandoned making treaties with him; we have given over the idea of gathering the Indians upon the Indian Territory as a cruel impossibility; we have found it utterly impossible to establish non-intercourse with him; we have driven him by degrees, as I have said, upon the barren and inhospitable portions of his own reservations, and taken up the rest in that irresistible tide of immigration which has characterized the history of our country, and he remains to-day just about the same number of Indians that our fathers found here when they came to this country, and up to this change of policy in just about as barbarous a condition. He can not speak the English language; he has learned only of the white man and of civilization that to come in contact with them was to lose something every time. But we came to understand that we had upon our hands two hundred and fifty or three hundred thousand paupers, and we were to settle the question whether we should continue as heretofore in our treatment of the Indians as an insoluble substance that we can not digest or assimilate, but an always present and disturbing influence in our health and a charge upon us, and we found in addition that he was increasing in number, and the charge was growing more and more serious upon the Treasury of the United States.

We have tried every method based upon the idea that we must extinguish the Indian as the only method of treating with him. The idea that he would of himself before civilization fade out as a race and cease to exist was long the idea which prevailed in this country. The poets taught it, the philosophers reasoned upon the effect on an inferior race of the presence of the superior race, but the Indian went on increasing in number nevertheless.

Then we undertook to exterminate him by war and we utterly failed! A single war cost us $30,000,000 and it but put an end to thirty-odd Indians in all. The Indian wars in which we have been engaged without stopping to raise the question which was right and which was wrong have involved us in an expenditure of money that would have taken every Indian man, woman, and child and kept them at a first rate hotel in any of our cities during the remainder of their lives.

In 1867 a commission was sent out for the purpose of devising some new method of treatment of the Indian. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has read from their report. They entered into some twelve or more treaties with the Indian. Let me read you, sir, one article which appears in all these treaties.

ARTICLE VI.

In order to insure the civilization of the Indians entering into this treaty—

Repeated more than a dozen times with as many different tribes—

the necessity of education is admitted, especially of such of them as may be settled on said agricultural parts of this reservation, and they therefore pledge themselves to compel their children, male and female, between the ages of 6 and 16 years, to attend school; and it is hereby made the duty of the agent for said Indians to see that this stipulation is strictly complied with; and the United States agrees that for every thirty children between said ages who can be induced or compelled to attend school a house shall be provided, and a teacher competent to teach the elementary branches of an English education shall be furnished, who will reside among said Indians and faithfully discharge his or her duties as a teacher.

That was the solemn obligation entered into by the United States in 1867 with more than a dozen tribes of Indians for a consideration—a grant to the United States, in consideration of that promise, of the title which the Indians had to vast tracts of fertile land now occupied by the settler, and on which since States have been built and are represented to-day upon this floor; and yet not a dollar has ever been expended by the United States in fulfillment of one of these treaty stipulations. If they had been fulfilled and if a treaty obligation is a debt against the United States, for the non-fulfillment of these articles that I have read more than $3,000,000 are now due these Indian tribes. It never occurred to the United States until some four or five or six years ago to consider the question, since they had failed in every other method of treating the Indian, of what they could do by trying to make something out of him. It dawned upon them by chance. They had sent Captain Pratt down from the Northwest with seventy-four Indian warriors, out of one of those wars, all covered with blood and wild as any wild Indian ever was, to a prison in Saint Augustine, Fla., and sent him there to guard them and guard them month after month of the weary years of their sentence. As a mere matter of discipline and as the best method of keeping them it occurred to Captain Pratt that it were better to set them to work than to hold them in chains. It was many weeks before he could get the consent of the Government here in Washington to permit him to set those Indians to grubbing the roots out of the ground of their prison-yard. When he did and when he made it a garden, and when he inspired those Indians with the hope that by the labor of their hands, as by the labor of a white man, they were to reap the reward due to their labor, he was sent from Saint Augustine with twenty-four of them to the Hampton school, where the colored people were being educated, and those twenty-four educated there are to-day absorbed in the industrious population of this country, citizens instead of warriors, earning their bread and exercising the rights and enjoying the immunities of citizens of the United States. From that begun the system we are discussing here now, and out of that school at Hampton graduated Captain Pratt and his Indians to a school in Carlisle.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] on Friday wanted some fruit to come from all this expenditure. I will tell him. At Carlisle, which sprang out of this little seed sowed down in Saint Augustine, Fla., has arisen a school of boys and girls numbering four hundred and fifty-five, representing thirty-seven different tribes of Indians, and there are from this school and under the supervision of Captain Pratt, who has made the contracts for them and sees to it that their contracts are just and that they fulfill them, out among the families in that neighborhood one hundred and fourteen boys and thirty girls, one hundred and forty-four in all, earning wages, respectable in amount, far more valuable in the experience which it brings to them and the lesson they are learning through it. There have been placed in this manner out from the school since it began in 1879 three hundred and fifty-three boys and one hundred and thirty-five girls, four hundred and eighty-eight in all. There have returned to their homes after they received such education as their capacity or their opportunity would afford two hundred and seventy-nine, every one of whom leaves his record there, and his record after he leaves the school is followed; and notwithstanding what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has said to-day more than 80 per cent. of all this number have held to their faith and are now pursuing industrial pursuits, teaching in the schools on the reservations, working in the shops on the reservations and out among the farmers—more than 80 per cent. I will not say that in any white school consisting of white boys there would be a greater or a less percentage that would fail. I say that 80 per cent. in the first five years of this experiment is more encouraging than any process that we have adopted heretofore and promises more success.

The number who have been under instruction since the organization on the 5th of October, 1879 has been, of boys, 522; girls, 245; in all, 767. Half of each day is spent by the girls in the sewing-room, and they have manufactured during the last year—let me read the articles; it may be for the amusement of the Senator from Kansas; it will be too, I think, for his instruction as well, what these girls at this school with their own hands have wrought, notwithstanding we put a positive enactment into the law of last year that no scholar at one of these schools should have compensation for anything which he did at the school. They have manufactured at that sewing-room 395 aprons, 108 night-dresses, 98 girl's coats, 118 chemises, 1,469 shirts, 261 sheets, 1,044 pairs of drawers, 52 skirts, 505 pillow-slips, 302 dresses, 485 towels; and the following list shows the repairs of clothing made during the month of April, 1884, at that school:

Aprons	366
Pants	48
Coats	49
Drawers	146
Vests	12
Hose	3,083
Underwear, pieces	457

In the laundry from 4,000 to 5,000 pieces per week are washed and ironed by the Indian girls, under the supervision of a laundress and assistant.

The dining-room is cared for by a matron, assisted by eighteen Indian girls, each one in charge of a table.

The cooking is done by one cook with two Indian assistants.

The bakery is managed by Indians. An Arapaho, who learned the trade here, is in charge, with two apprentices assisting. The baking amounts to a barrel and a half of flour into bread daily.

The girls occupy buildings which were formerly the officers' quarters. They consist of six two-story houses built together, making a block one hundred and fifty feet long. I have a description of the boys' quarters. The system pursued in the school, one-half day work and one-half day study. There are two apprentices at baking, eleven at harness-making, seventeen at tailoring, two at painting, eight at blacksmithing, eleven at carpentering, seven at tinning, fifteen at shoemaking, and six at printing. The slip from which I am giving these figures I saw on Saturday set up and printed by an Arapaho Indian—I think he was an Arapaho—an Indian who set up and then distributed the type more rapidly than the majority of workmen in any printing office in the country.

The products of the past year from the different shops have been as follows:

Shoe-shop.—Thirty-one pairs of boots, 182 pairs of boys' shoes, 176 pairs of girl's shoes, and the repairing of 150 pairs of boots and shoes monthly.

Tailor-shop.—Four hundred and ten coats, 771 pairs of pantaloons, 343 vests.

Harness-shop.—Two hundred and five bridles, 190 halters, 197 sets of harness.

Tin-shop.—Four thousand three hundred and five tin pails, 7,498 cups, 1,072 coffee-boilers, 145 funnels, 5,340 pans, 5,211 joints of stove-pipe.

Wagon-shop.—Eleven spring-wagons.

The effect of the workshops has been good from the first. The goods being sent to the Indian agencies in the West is conclusive evidence of progress and an incentive to those who receive them, and we invariably find that when an idle or mischievous boy is put at a trade his standing is raised in scholarship as well as conduct.

The farm products for the year were as follows: 1,530 bushels of wheat, 500 bushels of oats, 50 bushels of rye, 50,400 pounds of potatoes, 20 bushels of beans, and a full supply of vegetables, milk, and eggs—all the labor of Indians, with the exception of the superintendent.

At Hampton is another school of like character. I have not the statistics from Hampton, but the products of that school are the combined product of colored boys and the Indians, and it will bear equal comparison with this that I have taken some pains, at some risk of wearying the Senate, to put upon the record in answer to any charge that these schools do not bear fruit. We have established during the last year three new schools of this new character, one at Genoa, Nebr., one at Lawrence, Kans., and another on the southern border of Kansas near Arkansas City, where two hundred or more scholars the present year in each of them will be educated in this manner. Six thousand and one hundred scholars are in daily attendance upon these and the boarding-schools upon the reservations. The day-schools upon the reservations are more or less attended, and with few exceptions, such as those described by the Senator from Misssouri just now, the day-school is a useful institution. Schools anywhere and everywhere, which are entitled to the name of schools, are useful. Their influence upon the Indian upon the reservation is beneficent. It is showing to those who do not attend the school what may be done for their children if they have passed themselves the age where any benefit can be derived from it. Every effort of that kind has its beneficent influence, not alone upon the scholar but upon every one around. The teachers are, in many instances, Indians themselves, and an Indian teacher teaches all around him. Those who see him teach, those who see him work, learn from him, and he is an example every day as he goes in and out among his tribe of the possibilities that are open to the Indian.

I know there are poor Indian schools; and, unfortunately, the Senator from Missouri saw the worst of them. I would not do away with them. I would improve them. I would abolish them where they are of the character described by the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Kansas, but I would multiply those which I saw by the dozen in different tribes last summer all over the reservations. We were bound by our treaty to supply over thirty of them with a school-house and a teacher. We attempted to excuse ourselves for not having fulfilled these obligations, and to hide behind the excuse that there were no thirty children standing up in a row all prepared and waiting to enter the door of the school-house before we built it for them. We obligated ourselves to put an agent there whose business it was to see to it that those children were compelled to go to school, but we failed in that as much as we have failed in building the school-house. When we told these Indians that we would maintain schools on all the reservations did we mean to have them understand that it was only when they of their own mere motion should come and have the desire on their own part to go to school? We coupled it with a stipulation that we ourselves should gather them into the school-house, and yet $3,000,000 we have saved to the public Treasury while the Indian child has grown up in his barbarism, to be cared for and clothed, an unproductive pauper and vagabond in our midst; and that is what we have saved.

Sir, I am impressed with the conviction that, in comparison with any other method which we have attempted, this method is the best. It has its advantages over the others, if we look at it only as a question of dollars and cents, if we rise in the consideration of it to no higher plane than which is the cheapest. This makes something of the Indian. So far as we have gone it has been attended with remarkable results. All the other plans suggested and tried, which have given place one after another in their failure to this last, left the Indian right where it found him, the same savage, the same unproductive, insoluble element in our midst, a charge constantly increasing and ever-present among us to be dealt with, an army 250,000 strong to be clothed and fed, not only to-day but in all coming time. This takes the individual Indian and treats him, if I may use the phrase, as the raw material out of which shall come by this treatment a citizen of the United States, capable of self-support; acknowledging the authority of and appealing to the law like any other citizen for the protection of his rights. It is a better method because its results are better. It does not stop with the school-house; it does not end with the boarding-school or the day-school or the school at Carlisle; it invokes the agency of every civilizing and Christianizing element in the land. It takes the Indian, whether he be small or whether he be a grown Indian, and it puts him on his feet and it teaches him to walk, and then it teaches him self-reliance. It teaches him how to work by holding up to him some inducement to work, some reward for the labor of his hands. It inspires in him hope instead of hate. It kindles within him pride of manhood rather than love and thirst for blood. It enkindles, too, within him the faith which will rely upon the law and not the tomahawk for a redress of his grievances. It goes upon the reservation and reforms that. In my opinion hardly any obstacle to the completion of this work is as great as the reservation itself as at present conducted.

I would abolish the agency system as a part of this educating and civilizing effort on the part of the Government, this effort to bring the Indian upon his feet. I would cease to gather five or six thousand Indians around an agency and there every week, as I have seen it done myself, deal out to them the live beef for their support, a number of beef sufficient for the supply of 5,000 Indians for a week being corralled in a corral, terminating in a chute at the end of which are scales, and as each wild steer is driven in upon the scale his weight is counted out in the number of Indians entitled to so many pounds of live beef, and they are turned off upon the plain. While the wild steer is shot out of the corral the Indians are sent in a bloody hunt over the plains to bring him down and then slaughter him upon the plain, and take the meat and devour it with the heated blood and thirst of wild beasts. There has been in this process some improvement in certain quarters of this method. I would abolish it altogether. I would cease to have the Indian know that on Monday morning he could get into some room and through a hole in the wall have dealt out to him so many pounds of bacon and so many pounds of flour, and so many pounds of beans and sugar and coffee, and pack it into some sack and take it off to a tent in sight of the agency and never leave the tent till it was gone. Take him out onto his reservation, away from the agency, in charge of some man who shall be held responsible; that he and the families under his charge shall be located on the land and held there, and whatever rations are necessary for their subsistence until they become there self-supporting shall be taken to them there and distributed there.

Why, sir, at a single agency last fall I saw what the agent himself said were 40,000 dogs. He must be taught to part with his dog. He must be taught also to exchange his ponies for stock that will bring him something to eat and something as a reward of his care. You can not civilize an Indian who owns one hundred ponies and has twenty dogs. The civilizing processes are many. They must all be invoked to go hand in hand with what we appropriate for these schools. These schools are only to teach those who can enjoy the benefit of them the best method of carrying out and accomplishing, the most sure, these very forces that I have spoken of.

Mr. President, one great thing in making this method a success is to scatter the Indian, and therefore I would cut down his reservation. I would cease to permit him to roam over any more land than a good farmer could cultivate. I would scatter him among the people. I would put him by the side of white men, and I would try to teach him how to live as a white man. I would take his children, with his consent, to the boarding-schools on the reservations, to the schools at Carlisle, and at Hampton and at Lawrence and Genoa and Shilosso, and I would inspire in him the hope and hold up to him the prospect of becoming as an individual, not as a part of any Indian tribe, a part of the community and the people among whom he is compelled to live and who are compelled to live with him.

The Senator from Missouri has spoken of the Jesuit schools. I have as high an opinion of what the Jesuits have accomplished in their work as the Senator from Missouri. I do not desire, nor will I permit myself to make comparisons between the work of the religious denominations that have taken hold and aided and contributed so much to bring the Government up to this undertaking. I agree that within their limits and as far as they chose to go the Jesuits have accomplished a great deal. I was more gratified on the ground with what they had accomplished than with almost any other schools, but they have their limitations of effort; they do not attempt to go beyond a certain limit. Take the Jesuit care of the Pueblos. They have had those Pueblos for two hundred years under their care. They have not become civilized Indians yet. They are harmless, peaceable, quiet enough, but the Jesuit has gone as far in the education and care of the Pueblos as he is induced or impelled by his religious vows perhaps, or by those whose commands he obeys to go. I will not discourage them; I will not disparage their efforts; but I do say that all the religious societies that have taken hold of this work deserve commendation, and discrimination between them does not become us. They have accomplished wonders.

Take the five tribes of the Indian Territory; they are at their present condition solely through the missionary efforts of Northern people before they were driven into the Indian Territory, and they have hardly got back to-day to the condition they were then in when they were forced by the violent disruption of our obligations with them into that new Territory. Take the Riggs family in Dakota, father and son, the father who wrote out the Sioux language and translated the Bible into it, and the church service which I saw an Indian reading in an Episcopal church in the Territory of Dakota as written out by that man, who went from my own Congressional district when a boy and devoted his whole life to the service of those Indians, and his sons are there now carrying on his work. Take the school at the Santee agency and the school upon the meadows up the Missouri River, little hamlets of Indians with their grazing stock and their hay gathered and their cattle feeding upon the intervale land, self-supporting, obedient to law, educated. I saw two female teachers who came across the Missouri River in a boat and visited us, who had charge of that whole country in the absence of one of the Riggses at the death-bed of his father, young ladies from Wisconsin and from Illinois, teachers in schools. They are not to be disparaged.

My friend from Kansas wants to know what these sentimentalists have done. They have waked up the nation; they have forced the Government into this work. There was a disposition on Friday to ridicule the manner in which they had sent petitions here from Kansas and from Missouri and from other States, directed to the different members of the Committee on Appropriations. Why, sir, the very inartificial manner in which they got up the petitions shows that they were not professed petition-makers. The Senator has, I doubt not, in his drawer—I have in mine—the printed petitions that have been sent out by the Western Union Telegraph Company all over the country. They knew enough about the art of getting up petitions not to print their directions on the same piece of paper with the petition. These inartificial, inexperienced people, who undertook to organize and concentrate a public opinion upon us here, were so little skilled in the best way of doing it that they printed the direction upon the petition which offended my friend from Kansas so much. That is all; but to them the nation will yet acknowledge its debt of gratitude for having led it to abandon the cruel and merciless and profitless processes by which they had undertaken hitherto to deal with the Indian and to take him as they have the colored man and treat him as a man.

Why did we spend so many years of war and struggle to lift the colored man up into citizenship? Not because he was a colored man, but because he was a man, having the elements and the possiblities and the rights of a man. Shall we grudge the little money we pay here in this honest and effective effort to lift not 4,000,000 blacks, but 250,000 Indians, whose fathers we have spoiled and whose ancestors we have driven from the land we possess and murdered after we have spoiled and cheated and maltreated them?

Sir, it is worthy of the American people to make an honest, earnest, manly effort to retrace their steps in dealing with this little body in their midst. Let us therefore take hold of it, at least with as much earnestness and thoroughness as characterized our attempt to exterminate him, and we shall have accomplished all that is promised and shall relieve the Treasury of the charge, shall make a man of the Indian, and shall have done something to atone for the wrongs we have inflicted upon him in the past.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] now desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. VEST. Let the amendment be read as it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment just adopted for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The clause as amended, beginning in line 1083, reads:

For support and education of Indian children at industrial schools in Alaska, $25,000.

The amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is, after the word "children," in line 1083, to insert "of both sexes;" and after "industrial," in line 1084, to insert "boarding;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of Indian children of both sexes at industrial boarding-schools in Alaska, $25,000.

Mr. DAWES. I do not want to antagonize the Senator, but I really would not bind this appropriation. I would leave it in the wise discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. It may be that a day-school there, under conditions different from those which were very properly described by the Senator from Missouri, may be a much better method of accomplishing what can be accomplished by $25,000 or part of it. I am quite certain that those who will administer this appropriation will not waste it. They are learning every year, growing wiser and wiser in the method of using the money.

Mr. VEST. I submit then to the Senator in charge of the bill that the first portion of the amendment or the first amendment should be adopted, to insert "of both sexes."

Mr. DAWES. I think that is wise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will divide the question and put the question on adopting so much of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as has just been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I will not insist on the other branch of my amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. If it is proper to have that restraint on the appropriation in Alaska, why is it not just as proper elsewhere? My understanding of it is that whatever education these people gather is divided, to some extent at least, between both sexes. Now, unless you provide that for every male child that is educated there shall also be a female child educated, you have no guarantee that it will be equally divided. There are some of both sexes already educated. Nominally I think the schools are open to both; but whether they educate them equally or not I do not know; and if the description which the Senator from Missouri gave of the graduates of Carlisle and Hampton that he saw in Montana was true, I should rather hope the Indian girls were not educated; because the result of the education undoubtedly has been to make these people worse. All that they have gained in wit they have supplemented by gaining in vice, and if that is to be the effect of it I should think the Senator from Missouri himself in the charity which he has for this race, and which must be stronger for the female part of it than for the male part of it, would pray that instead of bringing it within the baleful influence of boarding-schools, it might be kept out of that influence. I do not quite see that the Senator from Missouri is very logical in his proposition, but still if it is to be good in Alaska, it ought to be good in Montana; and if in Montana, then in the Indian country elsewhere.

Mr. VEST. The Committee on Indian Affairs have not adopted my system or what I advocate at all. I said, if I said anything, that I believed the only effective Indian education was in the boarding-schools of both sexes on the reservations. I might have been unfortunate in the samples I saw at Carlisle. I only had two of them at Fort Washington, and I tried to use them as interpreters. They had silk hats and watches on, and that was the extent of their civilization.

Mr. PLUMB. I presume they were fair samples of the entire results.

Mr. VEST. I do not say they were fair samples, but they were failures, and the testimony of the agent there and of the leading Indians with whom I talked was that they had not done anything to elevate the tribe since they got back. They were simply experts at horse-stealing. That was the extent of the whole thing.

On the contrary, in regard to educating both sexes and in boarding-schools, let me say a word to the Senator from Massachusetts, without indulging in any further statement so far as I am concerned. I do not speak with any sort of denominational prejudice in favor of Jesuits; I was taught to abhor the whole sect; I was raised in that good old-school Presbyterian Church that looked upon a Jesuit as very much akin to the devil; but I say now that if the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, will find me any tribe of blanket Indians on the continent of North America—I do not speak of the five civilized tribes because they got their civilization in Georgia and Alabama and by immediate contact with the whites—but if he will find me a single tribe of Indians on the plains, blanket Indians, that approximate in civilization to the Flatheads who have been under the control of the Jesuits for fifty years, I will abandon my entire theory on this subject. I say that out of the eleven tribes that I saw—and I say this as a Protestant—where they had had Protestant missionaries they had not made a single, solitary advance toward civilization, not one; and yet among the Flatheads where there were two Jesuit missions you find farms, you find civilization, you find Christianity, you find the relation of husband and wife and of father and child scrupulously observed. I say that one ounce of experience is worth a ton of theory at any time, and this I saw and know.

Mr. DAWES. I do not want to go into a discussion of this kind. I do not think it is productive of much good. The Senator from Missouri and myself did not go together. The Senator went among the Indians whom he has described, and I went with other members of the committee among other Indians; and it may be that that is the ground of the difference between us. We did see, however, those of us who went by ourselves, both kinds of schools, and while I accord to the Jesuits all that the Senator has said, I do not think it is right to do it at the expense of the other schools. The Senator was unfortunate in two interpreters that came from those schools. He says that they were dressed up and were poor interpreters. That may be. How many have gone back to the tribes of all that have been educated at Carlisle? More than 80 per cent. have proven valuable people; and the fact that 18 or 20 per cent. of them have proved a failure is no argument against the system. We saw them in all stages of usefulness, even up to that of a strike. We saw a strike among these educated scholars; they demanded higher pay or they would not work; but they got over it. They have got to go out of all that system. Does the Senator expect that they are to go out of these schools perfect, amply equipped in every respect to discharge every duty as white men who have been trained for centuries? Has the Senator never heard of a white man, an American graduate of a college, that fell by the wayside?

Mr. VEST. I went about the Indians in Montana. There may have been something in dividing the labors of the committee. Now I want to ask my friend from Massachusetts if he saw a single day-school among the Indians that was doing any good.

Mr. DAWES. Most certainly. I should not have indulged in the remarks I have here in reference to day-schools if that were not true.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senator if he saw one of them, and I should like him to name the place where the day-schools were paying the Government anything like a fair consideration or remuneration for the money expended.

Mr. DAWES. Let me tell the Senator from Missouri that two day-schools, one at Standing Rock agency and one at Pine Ridge agency—the one at Standing Rock under the Jesuits and the one at Pine Ridge under Protestant management—were day-schools of great usefulness, both of them in my opinion; they were doing great good, not so much as a boarding-school which was just started at Pine Ridge and another school at Standing Rock, but that the day-schools are of great use I can not doubt. That some of them are very poorly managed I do not hesitate to say.

Mr. VEST. Were these day-schools?

Mr. DAWES. The one at Pine Ridge was a day-school. There was a boarding-school at Standing Rock and all the teaching at Standing Rock was done by the Jesuits excepting an institution outside of the care of the reservation which was under the Episcopalians.

Mr. VEST. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I only asked the question because after returning here I understood from other members of the committee that these were boarding-schools. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] was one of the Senators, and so was the Delegate from Montana also.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think the two schools referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts were nearer boarding-schools than day-schools. I think they were boarding-schools. He will recollect that the school at Standing Rock was under the care of the Roman Catholics; I do not know whether they belonged to the order of Jesuits or not. There were two fine large buildings there. He will remember that there were comparatively few students there; but we visited them in their school-rooms, and were very much pleased with the manner in which they acquitted themselves. It was a girls' school. There was a boys' school some distance from Standing Rock, which we did not visit; but I understood that those were boarding-schools; that is, the children were brought there from different parts of the reservation. They were not all lodged and boarded, I think, in that building, but were in the immediate vicinity.

The school at Pine Ridge is under the care of Bishop Hare, the Protestant Episcopal bishop for that Territory. The Senator will remember that that is a large building also, supplied with dormitories and arrangements for cooking, and that a portion of the gentlemen who accompanied us were lodged in the building while we were there. I understood from the agent at Pine Ridge that day-schools had been established at different places on the reservation; I think he told us how many, and the report in regard to those day-schools was that they were doing good work. I did not myself visit any one of the day-schools.

Mr. DAWES. The boarding-school house to which the Senator alludes was a new establishment that had never been opened for a school. It was opened after we left; the Senator will remember that the agent came to Chicago to engage teachers; but there was a day-school under the charge of the agent's wife that I visited myself, and it was that I alluded to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Yes; at Standing Rock.

Mr. DAWES. At Pine Ridge. At Standing Rock the girls' school which the Senator spoke of might be fairly described as a boarding-school, and the Jesuits taught day-schools also. They have the entire education there.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. We understood they had established day-schools on the reservation and that they were doing very excellent work.

Mr. DAWES. That is so.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, this is an exceedingly interesting subject both to the philosopher and to the politician. We are to decide whether this experiment in the first place is beneficial to its subjects, and in the next place whether or not it is wise to continue these vast appropriations from the Treasury for the purpose now under discussion. I have been an interested student of the question of Indian education for twenty-five years, during which period I have been a neighbor of Indians and somewhat familiar with their habits and methods. I have examined the results of Indian education at Carlisle, at Hampton, and at Santa Fé, N. Mex., where there is an institution, under the control and management of some Jesuit fathers, that I think presents one of the most interesting spectacles that ever was witnessed by the human mind. I do not recall ever having spent a few hours more profitably and with more engrossing interest than in studying the result of the patient labors of those self-denying men under the most disadvantageous circumstances upon a congregation of Navajoes, Pueblos, and other youth from the adjacent tribes in that old capital.

But without going into a minute statement of my views upon this subject, I must be allowed to say that in my opinion Indian education produces phenomena rather than results. There are individual instances of extreme interest which have resulted from the efforts of these teachers upon youths of the different tribes; but it is impossible to say, in my judgment, that there has been during the generations that this experiment has been carried on any appreciable change in the character of the Indians in this country. Those that were Indians at the beginning are Indians still.

It is said that Cuvier, the great naturalist, could take a single bone of an unknown animal, even the smallest, or a scale of a fossil fish, and so great was his knowledge of the laws that control anatomy and that result in building up an animal organization that he could build upon that single bone or scale not only the entire bony structure of the animal or the fish, but clothe it with its muscles and its tissues so that he would present to the world the direct form and presence of the creature whose bone or scale was laid before him. I have no doubt also that if a philosopher could know dew point, the mean annual temperature. and have a handful of soil from a given locality, he could very nearly predict the kind of man that would inhabit it.

These matters are to a very large extent physiological and structural. Societies and civilizations and faiths and philosophies are not made; they grow; they are a development. A thousand years ago the Anglo-Saxon race, to which we belong, was as savage, as wild, as untamable, as any of the savage inhabitants of the North American continent at this time. They were not raised to their present elevation by the efforts of other nations and other peoples to educate them. Their civilization has been a growth from within; it has been a development from inherent forces that demanded this form of expression.

Therefore, sir, when you talk to-day about the efforts to civilize and Christianize the Indian by spending money for the erection of schools, and for the hiring of teachers, and for the purchase of books, you are engaged in a task that can never be accomplished; you will make the object of this education neither an Indian nor a white man. They have different desires, different impulses, different hopes, different aspirations, different purposes; they are of entirely different class, and stock, and race, and while it is interesting and valuable to make these experiment, we are proceeding upon an entirely wrong theory.

I recollect seeing a few years ago, at Carlisle, young Indians engaged in making harness, and others in the manufacture of tinware. They wore the clothing of civilized people; some of them manufactured the shoes that they wore. Others were engaged in making the models of houses so that they might become carpenters. But, Mr. President, there is not upon record one single instance of an Indian who by education has ceased to be an Indian and become a white man, who has ever adhered in the practices and customs of civilized life as known to the white man.

Sir, it is of course superfluous to say that it is desirable that every effort should be made so far as possible to ameliorate the condition of the Indian tribes; but the system that we are pursuing, as has been pointed out by the Senator from Missouri, and as I know myself by direct personal observation, results in this: If the Indian, after he has taken his degree, after he has learned the use of civilized clothing, after he has become educated so far as the school proposes to carry him, returns to his tribe, he is an alien and an outcast; he can have no companionship; there is no one with whom he can ally himself; his last condition must therefore be worse than his first. If he remains with the whites, then in the great struggle for competition that has been sharpened through generations of exercise on the part of the Caucasian race, he falls, and that is the end of him.

I do not know how much money has been appropriated for the purpose of Indian education since I have been a member of Congress, but it certainly goes up into the millions of dollars; and, as I have already intimated, I believe that it proceeds upon an entirely erroneous theory. While those who are actuated by the desire to educate the Indian are humane, charitable, benevolent, while their impulses are lovely and commendable, I say, as the deliberate result of my observation, that there has not been one single particle of advantage or good gained so far as the Indians are concerned; and I speak of the Indians as a race, a class upon this continent. Those who have been withdrawn—and there may be a very few who have been assigned to places in civilized society—may have been advantaged and benefited; but the condition of the Indian race, of the Indian tribes, of the Indian people has not been changed one single particle in the degree and scale of civilization by all these efforts that have been made. I suppose there are at the present time of school age in this country perhaps 10,000 Indian children; I do not know——

Mr. DAWES. Thirty thousand.

Mr. INGALLS. Then the number is very much larger then I had supposed; and accommodations for how many are afforded by these schools?

Mr. DAWES. About 6,000.

Mr. INGALLS. About one-fifth, then, of the entire number of children of the school age are provided with possible accommodations under this bill, which would leave twenty or twenty-five thousand who will grow up in barbarism and ignorance. Mr. President, it is very easy to see that that is a losing game. Here are five or six thousand who are rendered neither Indians nor whites. They are segregated from their kind. They have nowhere to go on the face of the earth. Among all its peoples and populations and inhabitants there is no place assigned for them. And you leave twenty or twenty-five thousand growing up exactly as they have been for generations and for centuries.

Mr. President, it requires no very accurate computation, it requires no very minute mathematical process to see that at this rate the degree of ignorance is very rapidly gaining on us, and if we proceed as we have hitherto in these expenditures there is nothing to be done except to increase our expenditures from year to year with no possibility of advantageous results. The great difficulty appears to me to be——

Mr. DAWES. Let me give the Senator more accurately the numbers, because I did not do justice to the efforts that are being made. The number of school population, exclusive of the five tribes, is 35,883; the number who can be accommodated in boarding-schools, 5,182; the number who can be accommodated in day-schools, 6,032; the number of boarding-schools, 82; the number of day-schools, 117. If this bill becomes a law there will be support for so many.

Mr. INGALLS. The difficulty in this whole subject appears to me to be fundamental. I was talking the other day with a very intelligent official of the Canadian government who had long been familiar with the conduct of Indian affairs in those provinces. He learned with suprise that the Indians of this country were outside the pale of law, and it is a singular fact when you come to reflect upon it that in all our domains the only creature who is absolutely outside of law is the American Indian. If he commits murder, or steals a horse, or burns his neighbor's house, there is no law to punish him. For any offense against life or property he goes free. I think that we have got to begin at the other end of the social scale in the Indian problem.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think the Senator ought to qualify the statement he has just made. If an Indian commits a crime on an Indian reservation there is no law to punish it; but if he commits a crime off the reservation then he is amenable to law.

Mr. INGALLS. Exactly, and therefore I say every Indian ought to be off a reservation.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is another question.

Mr. INGALLS. The moment this whole system is broken up, the moment that you declare that every man on this continent, black or white, Greek or Jew, bound or free, is the subject of law, and must be made to suffer the consequence of his own voluntary act, then you have made the first material and beneficial step in the solution of this problem.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask the Senator if he will allow me, does he think it would be decent, humane, not to say practicable, to take an Indian who did not understand a word of our language into a court and try him under the processes and rules and forms of the English language and ask him to obey a law he could not read, and hang him because he did not obey a law he could not read?

Mr. INGALLS. We hang Frenchmen who can not understand our language; we hang Italians who can not understand our language; we hang every other creature of every nationality on the face of the earth if he comes into our country and commits a capital crime, whether he understands the language or whether he does not. It is not a question whether he understands the language; it is a question whether he violates the law. And it is no excuse for an Italian in New York who comes there and in a quarrel kills there one of his own associates or an American that he does not understand the English language and therefore ought to go acquit. That is the introduction of a very novel feature in criminal jurisprudence, and I am inclined to think that upon a more minute, impartial, and philosophical survey of the subject the Senator from Massachusetts will be convinced that the question of liability to the penalties of the law for its voluntary violation does not depend upon the fact whether the defendant or the criminal understands the language of his victim or whether he does not.

Mr. DAWES. The difference between the Senator and myself is this: He says we have begun at the wrong end; I think the best end to begin with is to teach him what the law is and then punish him if he does not obey it. The Senator proposes to hang him for not obeying the law and then teach him afterward.

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir. I do not propose to hang him for not obeying the law, but I propose to hang him if he kills a man in violation of law, whether he understands the English language or not.

Mr. DAWES. I leave it to the judgment of the American people which end it is best to begin at, whether it is not better to enlighten the mind and help the man to understand what the law is, whether it is not better to begin there than it is to begin with the processes of punishment before you enlighten him, and let him know what it is that he is bound to do.

Mr. INGALLS. It always has been a prodigious task to elevate a man or a race or a nation from barbarism to civilization, and it requires to-day a coalition of all the conservative forces in society to prevent even the most elevated from relapsing into savagery and barbarism. I suppose that in the most enlightened portions of this country if we were for a single generation to permit the machinery of schools and courts and of all the different agencies of civilized life to become stagnant and inert, society, in the course of a very few years, would relapse and perhaps become worse than the condition of the savage tribes of the West. But it is impossible ever to reform any society, no matter whether it is one that is originally low or one that has relapsed, unless all these agencies are called into the most strenuous activity.

We practically say to all these people here you are at liberty to steal horses, you are at liberty to pillage the settlers upon the frontier, you are at liberty to kill any man upon your reservation without suffering the penalty of the law. If there were a few illustrations of the vigorous administration of justice the Indian would soon learn enough of the English language to be aware of what was right and what was wrong, and what act it was safe to him to commit and what was unsafe.

I advocate no policy of barbarism or wrong. Confessedly the theory upon which the Senator from Massachusetts has been acting, and those who believe with him, for the last century, yes, for the last two centuries, has been an absolute failure. There are to-day just as many of these people on the American continent as there were when the prow of Columbus first appeared above the waves beyond the islands of the West Indies. I do not know but that there are more. I am sometimes inclined to think that the number to-day of Indians upon this contident is greater than it was in 1492, and I say, without the fear of contradiction from any source, that notwithstanding all the agencies of civilization, notwithstanding all the expenditures of individuals and of the Government, the condition of the Indian race upon this continent is not one single tenth portion of a degree higher in the social scale, in the scale of civilization, than it was in 1492.

Mr. President, it seems to me that having tried this experiment for so many generations it is well to attempt some other method, and I believe it would be the wisest course this Government could pursue to-day for a law to be passed declaring that the jurisdiction of the laws of the United States shall extend absolutely over these people; and they should be held to strict accountability for all their acts, just as accountable as they are under the government of the Dominion of Canada, and there, as we were told the other day, there has not been a single drop of blood shed in massacre, there has been no armed demonstration against the authority of the government on the part of any of the savage tribes since they have been under English dominion.

Mr. DAWES. There will be no trouble there till the white man tries to steal the Indian's land in Canada.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts will find it, I dare say, much more difficult to answer the proposition than to sneer at it.

Mr. DAWES. I did not sneer at it.

Mr. INGALLS. With his customary tendency toward cynicism he remarks, in response to what I intended to be a candid statement from a friendly standpoint upon a question confessedly of the gravest importance not only to the Indians but to the American people, that there will be no trouble among the Canadian Indians until somebody tries to steal their land.

Mr. DAWES. I thought the Senator understood what I meant by that.

Mr. INGALLS. I think I did, sir.

Mr. DAWES. It is well known that the radical difference between the Canadian Indian and our Indian grows out of the fact that he has room enough there, plenty of room. In this country the settler presses upon him so closely, crowds him so much that the friction and trouble between him and the settler growing out of the crowding of the settler upon him brings about wars. I am not upon my feet to say that it brings about these wars without his fault, but brings about the wars for the very reason that there is ample room enough there and not room enough here. When the time comes that the white man is getting away all the land from the Indian in the Dominion then we shall see much the state of things we see here. That is all I meant by the side remark I made. I protest that I did not mean to sneer at the Senator's remarks, or to treat in any other way than the gravest manner a question of so much importance as this.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I heard the Senator from Massachusetts in the course of his observations say that it might be well for the United States Government to spend as much in trying to educate the Indian as it had expended in trying to exterminate them.

Mr. DAWES. No; I did not say that.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator says he did not say that.

Mr. DAWES. I do not think I said it.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator now says he does not think he said it. I think he did say it. I thought at the time that if that remark in all its length and breadth and bearing was submitted to the Senator in calmer and more rational moments he would be disposed to qualify it.

Mr. DAWES. I say now that it were better for the United States to spend as many dollars in the effort to educate the Indian as they have spent in the vain, cruel, and bloody work of trying to exterminate him; and when they have spent as many million dollars in that work as they have spent in violation of all the laws of humanity in trying to crush him out, they will have done something for their own good as well as for the good of those upon whom they expend it; and therefore, whether I said that they had better spend as much as that or not, I say it were better for them to do it than to be continuing the expenditure of money in the manner in which they have in the past. It can not be done with impunity to ourselves. We have been reaping in these long years the reflex influence of the wrong we have heaped upon the black man, and we are not going to murder the Indian with impunity, and therefore we had better spend it, better for ourselves, better for everybody, in that way than in the way we have done.

Mr. INGALLS. Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has repeated what he said before with addenda, with appendices, with what may be called a codicil to his last will and testament expressing the last views of the testator upon the subject, for which I am profoundly grateful. I beg in this public way to return to him my very sincere and cordial acknowledgments for the honor he has done me by this interpolation.

I desire to say upon that proposition that the Government never attempted to exterminate the Indian, the Government has never attempted to crush the Indian, and we have heard fully enough of that somewhat stale and somewhat superfluous denunciation of the United States for its cruel and atrocious policy toward the American Indian. There never has been an acre of land surrendered by any Indian or by any Indian tribe for which ample and just equivalent was not given, and so far from there having been any attempt on the part of the Government to crush and exterminate the Indian, the policy on the other hand has been uniformly, so far as the Government is concerned, humane and generous, as a great many score of appropriation bills will show, in which vast expenditures have been authorized and warranted for the comfort and well-being of the Indian, not only in his physical condition but in everything that pertains to his moral and to his intellectual welfare. I repudiate and repel and disavow this oft-repeated statement—it might be characterized by a harsher name—that the policy of the Government toward the American Indian has been one of extermination, of cruel and truculent hostility.

Mr. President, I speak not as the Senator from Massachusetts would seem to intimate, from any standpoint of hostility toward the Indian or toward the policy that is to be pursued in this bill. If it were possible to make all these people self-sustaining, if it were possible by one statute to civilize them, to Christianize them, to make them American citizens, with all that that term implies, I should certainly be very glad indeed to contribute heartily and cordially to that result. But we are beginning at the wrong end, as I said before, of this problem. Taine in his History of English Literature somewhere says that the soul of man is rooted in nature; and there never was a profounder truth physiologically uttered.

When the florist wants a rose he does not go to the apothecary for his perfume, he does not go to the milliner for his fabric, he does not go to the painter for his hues; but he goes to the soil for its subtle and potential chemistry; and all this attempt to raise the Indian in the social and moral scale by sending teachers down into those regions where he abides to instruct him in the Greek alphabet and the differential calculus, and to have his dinner served to him in courses, and to wear the plug hat and the gold watch of civilized life, is just exactly as absurd and will be as futile in its results as it would be to go among a herd of Texas broad-horn steers and endeavor to turn them into Durhams and thoroughbreds by reading Alexander's herd-book in the cattle-pens at Dodge City or Wichita. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not propose at this hour in the evening, or at any time while the present bill is under discussion, to enter upon the general question of our policy toward the Indians. I had occasion carefully to investigate the subject as well as I could a year or two ago, and I discovered that a few facts were well established. One is the fact just stated by the Senator from Kansas that the best statisticians are agreed that the number of Indians on this continent is about the same to-day that it was when the Englishman landed at Jamestown or at Plymouth in the early part of the seventeenth century. I believe there is a tradition that there was a pestilence which carried off large numbers of the Indians after the landing of Columbus, but the practical fact for the purposes of this discussion is true as the Senator stated it.

Another fact is true, and that is that the Indian has cost, since the formation of the Constitution of the United States, this Government—there being about two hundred and fifty thousand all told, being about one hundred and fifty thousand now roaming in savage tribes, not enough to make a city of the second class, not possessing the fighting power of a city of 50,000 inhabitants—it has cost this Government in Indian wars and Indian support and losses on our part by Indian wars fully a thousand million dollars more than it would have cost the Government if the Indians had been ordinary, self-supporting citizens, farmers or mechanics.

Another fact is true, and that is that the highest authorities, authorities like General Sherman, like General Grant, like the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] who made one of the most valuable and instructive state papers that we have on our files on this subject when a commissioner to examine the condition of the Sioux Nation some years ago, are agreed that the Indian wars have been provoked by white outrages in the beginning as a rule, and that the history of our diplomatic relations with these tribes is a history of broken faith and broken treaties. The United States have a treaty in existence to-day, as the honorable Senator from Iowa reports, I think, in that document to which I have referred, by which they are bound at the public cost to furnish to all the children of that warlike and numerous tribe a good English education.

Now, independently of the question of humanity as a mere matter of dollars and cents, I wish to call the attention of my friend from Kansas to one other matter of which he has spoken. As a mere matter of dollars and cents, if the Indian children in our schools were nothing but hostages for the good behavior of their fathers and brothers, it would be cheaper for us to spend fivefold the amount of money appropriated in this bill for their education than to leave them in their barbarism and in their tribes.

But what I rose to call the attention of the Senate to was as to the accuracy, the correctness of the opinion of the Senator from Kansas, as to the impossibility of improving the Indian by education. He has made a good many very graceful and well-expressed sentences, in which he seeks to illustrate the difficulty of interfering with nature. He says if you want to get the rose you do not send to the apothecary for your perfume, and so on. But that argument, so far as it be an argument, would apply equally to the education of any child or of any race. It is the law of all humanity, unless the law which is applicable to all humanity elsewhere fails with the Indian, that we are to be developed into manhood and into womanhood, and into civilization by the processes of education, which are processes which the individual child can not perform for itself. It is this one distinction between humanity everywhere and the animal, the bird or the beast or the fish, that the human being is born dependent and helpless, to be raised, to be taught, to be educated, to be developed by the care and attention of his kind.

The Senator says that it is the result of his experience that in no individual case has an Indian been made to receive the character and attributes and to be fit for the condition of the white man, that the individual Indians go back to barbarism, and that no nation, or race or tribe can be raised from a condition of barbarism except by forces operating from without itself, which forces do not exist in the Indian character. It seems to me that either the Senator is mistaken or that the evidence upon which we have been accustomed to act for so long on the condition of more than 50,000 Indians belonging to what are known as the Five Nations in the Indian Territory is strangely untrue. I should like to read what I read to the Senate a year or two ago in answer to the judgment of the Senator from Kansas upon this fact, which is the fundamental fact in this whole discussion. If he is right, then these people are to be dealt with as barbarians, if they are kept in school or kept as hostages or prisoners as wild beasts are kept in their cages. If the other statement is true, then the appropriation which is proposed here is inadequate and cheap.

Now let me read the Thanksgiving proclamation of Mr. D. W. Bushyhead, the principal chief of the Cherokee Nation in the year 1881, on the occasion of national thanksgiving.

Last year—

Mr. Bushyhead says—

the census of the population and possessions of the Cherokee Nation was first taken within their history. We have now counted our treasures and know for what and for how much we should feel grateful as a family of people having and occupying one home in common. From this authentic source we find our people blessed with one hundred and two primary schools for a rapidly-increasing population of 20,300 citizens; two high schools, male and female; an orphan asylum, an asylum for the unfortunate—insane, blind, and helpless; forty-five churches and as many native ministers of the gospel; one hundred and fifty native teachers by profession; a written constitution and code of laws; a government consisting of executive, legislative, and judicial branches, well understood and administered; a people peaceful and progressive, and in all material regards more than self-supporting; and having but five fishermen and fifteen hunters by occupation left among them as the last vestige of a savage state from which we have been rescued within the memory of men yet living by the goodness of an overruling Providence.

Such is the situation of the Cherokee nation to-day, in a fair and ample country secured to them by treaty and by patent, and of which the honor and honesty of their great earthly protector, the United States Government, is pledged to guard their possession.

Such are the blessings for which our thanks are continually due, among which blessings the first and best of all is saving knowledge whence they come and a sense of obligation which restrains pride.

Therefore I, D. W. Bushyhead, principal chief of the Cherokee Nation, do hereby, in pursuance of an ancient Christian custom and the recommendation of the President of the United States, appoint Thursday, November 24, A. D. 1881, as a day of public thanksgiving throughout this nation, and call upon the Cherokee people to devote the time designated to the giving of expressions and evidences of their thankfulness to the Supreme Being for His kindness and love, in such ways and by such observances as shall become a Christian, orderly, and conscientious people. Let us thank Him for all His dispensations as gifts of His goodness for our good, never forgetting that blessings are such indeed only when used in the cause of the Great Giver, which is the happiness of all alike; and that the results of our shortcomings are but benevolent cautions against evil—no less blessings, if we so regard them, than the happy consequences of virtuous life.

Mr. President, it strikes me that the author of that proclamation has made a little step toward emergence from the state of savagery.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I am not willing in the present temper of the Senate to prolong this debate, and rise at this moment only to say that I am very grateful to the Senator from Massachusetts, for the observation that he made with regard to the Five Nations in the Indian Territory, because it reminded me of what I had intended to say and had forgotten in my remarks, and that was to refer to them as an illustration of the very principle in the human mind that I was endeavoring to expound, and that was that this species of intellectual growth, of development, of culture was not made like a suit of clothes by a tailor, or like a vehicle by a wagonwright, but was the result of inherent forces within that demand expansion and growth, and finally take their shape in alphabets and literature and codes of laws and religions and faiths and creeds and philosophies.

If the Senator from Massachusetts had known more about the history of the Indian upon this continent he would have been aware that the Five Nations to which he refers never belonged to or had any affiliation with the class that we have been describing as the blanket Indians, who have always stood with such resolute defiance against the influences of civilization. They were of a different stock; they were a different race; they came from a different source. In the southern region where they have always lived they were of a peaceful, pastoral, tranquil, docile, and easily acquisitive nature. So far from their present condition being the result of the teachings of the class of instructors who have been supplied by appropriations from the Treasury, exactly the opposite is true.

It is a singular fact that the Cherokees, by the operation of those interior and inherent forces that I have spoken of, have actually invented an alphabet of their own. They have a newspaper printed in their own language in a character that is just as distinct and separate from the English character as the Greek or the Hebrew. They have a code of laws of their own; they have a well-defined literature of their own; they have established social customs and habits and regulations of their own.

This has not been the result of the teachings of apostles and missionaries who have been sent there either by private charity or by public benefaction. It may be that by the subtle contagion that there always is in these efforts something may have been communicated. There may have been some subtle impulses to stimulate those forces that exist within them; but the Five Nations, and particularly the Cherokee people, are an apt and wonderful illustration of the very principle for which I contended.

It was said of the proprietors of Warren's blacking, a celebrated preparation that was at one time well-known in England, that the establishment kept a poet. While I have no remarks to make upon the composition of the elaborate thanksgiving proclamation that the Senator from Massachusetts read to show the magnificent progress these people had made in civilization and in intellectual power and in the knowledge of religious truth, it is fair to say that like other potentates, like the rulers of other nations perhaps greater and better known than the Cherokees, the executive sometimes has a secretary of state, and it is possible he may not be of the precise nationality to which the executive belongs.

This, Mr. President, is all I desire to say upon this subject. The Senator from Massachusetts will of course understand me as in no respect reflecting upon the character of the argument he has used when I say that it entirely emphasizes the position I have taken, and that on the one hand is seen the spectacle of this magnificent, majestic, stately, and spectacular progress made by the Cherokees without these influences, and on the other hand the sullen, ferocious, relentless, immovable savagery and barbarism of the northern races in defiance of the millions that have been spent to elevate them.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Kansas thought that if I knew more about the Indian on this continent I should have come to some different conclusions. I regret that in the vast number of important questions which we have to deal with my capacity and time here are not sufficient to enable me to know as much about any one of them as would be desired, but I do happen to know something about the history of Cherokee civilization. It so happens that an honored and dear and near relative of my own, the late Jeremiah Evarts, was the pioneer of the missionary efforts to reclaim the Cherokee Nation. He gave his life to their cause, and among the early memories of my childhood is his coming home to die of the overwork which he had expended in saving that nation from injustice. They were found, as the Senator has said, a gentle, docile, tractable people, pastoral and peaceful, but that was not true of the fierce and warlike Chickasaws or the Choctaws or the Seminoles, or, I believe, of the Creeks. The other four of these five nations, whose progress could have been described in words of equal emphasis and truth with that of the Cherokees, were Indians of the same temper as the wild Indians who now roam our plains.

The Senator from Kansas did not say in the speech which he first made that there were certain Indian tribes on this continent who could not be made civilized or improved by education. He said that there was no instance in history of an Indian tribe; and now when this instance is cited upon him he says that he did not mean the Five Nations or the Cherokees, but he meant only such tribes as the blanket Indians now upon our plains. The very question of which he was speaking was the question of an expenditure for the education of the Indians of Alaska, gentle, docile, far advanced toward Christianity and civilization under the instruction of the priests of the Greek Church, described here by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], on the authority of the document which he read, as hungering for education. It was to that class of Indians, and Indians who may be described as he has described the Cherokees, to which the Senator applied his general statement.

But though it is true the Cherokee was a docile and peaceful person compared with his Indian kindred in other parts of the continent, yet he was found by the American board of commissioners, within the memory of living men, in a state of total and abject barbarism. The people of Georgia refused to tolerate his presence, and, in disobedience to the mandate of the Supreme Court in a great judgment which Chief-Justice Marshall rendered, the governor of Georgia compelled the removal of those Indians from the limits of the State of Georgia; and they went. It was made, I believe, a penal offense to teach one of them to read, and Mr. Worcester, the missionary, died in prison during the administration of General Jackson, upon the soil near where the battle of Missionary Ridge was fought, for disobedience to the law of the State of Georgia.

So the Senator's suggestion that the Cherokees are an exception to the rule, and that the same reasoning which applies to them does not apply to other Indians, seems to me wholly to fail.

Mr. HARRIS rose.

Mr. DAWES. I wish the indulgence of the Senate for a moment or two before the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] makes the motion he is about to make.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator anticipates me. I rose for the purpose of making a motion and not to debate this question.

Mr. DAWES. I know the Senate is very tired, but I want the Senator from Kansas to be relieved of the nightmare he is resting on. I wish to show that somebody else besides Bushyhead in the Cherokee Nation is somebody. I will just read to him, if he will allow me:

Governor Allen Wright, of the Choctaw Nation, was educated in schools among his own people until ready for college, when he went to Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., where he graduated with honor. He also graduated in a theological seminary in New York city and was ordered to the ministry, and has preached among his own people for twenty-six years. He has been their governor several terms.

Mr. INGALLS. Was that at the expense of the United States?

Mr. DAWES. Does it depend upon whether the money be appropriated by Congress or be granted by the charity of the people whether an Indian can be educated or not? Is the position the Senator has taken, that no Indian is capable of education, maintained by showing that unless the money by which he is educated is appropriated out of the Treasury he is incapable of education? Is he capable of education? Is he capable of being made a man?

This spring one of his sons graduated at the Albany (N. Y.) Medical College, and another at a New York city theological seminary, both being graduates first at an Eastern college.

One of his daughters, after attending school among her own people, went to Massachusetts to complete her education, and pursued the same studies as white girls.

I saw on Saturday fifty wild Apache Indian youths who three months ago were with the prisoners taken by General Crook and brought to the San Carlos agency. Fifty of those boys and girls I saw reading English off the blackboard, as bright, as intelligent, as quick, as capable of comprehending what they were taught as any white children I ever saw in a school.

The Senator from Kansas libels his own race when he says that any of them are incapable of being trained and made something of. The Senator is mistaken in history, mistaken in fact, mistaken in the philosophy of our being. The Senator is against the whole history of the race. From the beginning of time till this day there has been no tribe or nation on the face of the earth which has not been capable of being educated and trained into manhood.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator yield a moment to me?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the shipping bill be laid before the Senate. I do it for the purpose of leaving it as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2228) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and for other purposes. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The shipping bill is before the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 12, 1884.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday was read and approved.

COUNTERFEITING FOREIGN SECURITIES.

Mr. LORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 1369, to prevent and punish the counterfeiting within the United States of notes, bonds, and other securities of foreign governments, and put the same upon its passage.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. LORE. Let the bill be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That every person who, within the United States or any Territory thereof, with intent to defraud, falsely makes, alters, forges, or counterfeits any bond, certificate, obligation, or other security in imitation of, or purporting to be an imitation of, any bond, certificate, obligation, or other security of any foreign government, issued or put forth under the authority of such foreign government, or any treasury note, bill, or promise to pay issued by such foreign government, and intended to circulate as money, either by law, order, or decree of such foreign government, and any person who causes or procures to be so falsely made, altered, forged, or counterfeited, or who knowingly aids or assists in making, altering, forging, or counterfeiting any such bond, certificate, obligation, or other security, or any such treasury note, bill, or promise to pay, intended as aforesaid to circulate as money, shall, upon conviction thereof in any circuit or district court of the United States, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than five years.

SEC. 2. That every person who knowingly, and with intent to defraud, utters, passes, or puts off, in payment or negotiation, within the United States or any Territory thereof, any such false, forged, or counterfeit bond, certificate, obligation, security, treasury note, bill, or promise to pay, as mentioned in the first section of this act, whether the same was made, altered, forged, or counterfeited within the United States or not, shall, upon conviction as aforesaid, be punished by a fine of not more than $3,000 and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than three years.

SEC. 3. That every person who shall, with intent to defraud, falsely, within the United States or any Territory thereof, make, alter, forge, or counterfeit, or shall cause or procure to be so made, altered, forged, or counterfeited, or shall knowingly aid and assist in the false making, altering, forging, or counterfeiting of any bank note or bill issued by a bank or other corporation of any foreign country, and intended by the law or usage of such foreign country to circulate as money, such bank or corporation being authorized by the laws of such country, shall, upon conviction in any circuit or district court of the United States, be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000, and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than two years.

SEC. 4. That every person who shall, within the United States or any Territory thereof, utter, pass, put off, or tender in payment, with intent to defraud, any such false, forged, altered, or counterfeited bank note or bill, as mentioned in the preceding section, knowing the same to be so false, forged, altered, and counterfeited, whether the same was made, altered, forged, and counterfeited within the United States or not, shall, upon conviction as aforesaid, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than one year.

SEC. 5. That every person who, within the United States or any Territory thereof, shall have in his possession any such false, forged, or counterfeit bond, certificate, obligation, security, treasury note, bill, promise to pay, bank note, or bill issued by a bank or other corporation of any foreign country, with intent to utter, pass, or put off the same, or to deliver the same to any other person with intent that the same may thereafter be uttered, passed, or put off as true, or who shall knowingly deliver the same to any other person with such intent, shall, upon conviction as aforesaid, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than one year.

SEC. 6 That every person who, within the United States or any Territory thereof, having control, custody, or possession of any plate, or any part thereof, from which has been printed, or may be printed, any counterfeit note, bond, obligation, or other security, in whole or in part, of any foreign Government, bank, or corporation, except by lawful authority, or who uses such plate, or knowingly permits or suffers the same to be used, in counterfeiting such foreign obligations, or any part thereof, and every person who engraves, or causes or procures to be engraved, or assists in engraving, any plate in the likeness or similitude of any plate designed for the printing of the genuine issues of the obligations of any foreign government, bank, or corporation, and every person who prints, photographs, or in any other manner makes, executes, or sells, or causes to be printed, photographed, made, executed, or sold, or aids in printing, photographing, making, executing, or selling, any engraving, photograph, print, or impression in the likeness of any genuine note, bond, obligation, or other security, or any part thereof, of any foreign government, bank, or corporation, or who brings into the United States or any Territory thereof any counterfeit plate, engraving, photograph, print, or other impressions of the notes, bonds, obligations, or other securities of any foreign government, bank, or corporation, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor not more than five years, or both.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEACH. This is quite a long bill——

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I would like to inquire if that has been considered by any committee of the House. It is impossible to ascertain the condition of the bill from the reading of it.

Mr. REED. It has been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary and favorably recommended.

Mr. HAMMOND. And also by the same committee in the last House.

Mr. TUCKER. That bill, Mr. Speaker, was substantially passed by the Committee on the Judiciary. I had some difficulty in my own mind about the power of Congress to pass such a bill. I examined the question therefore with a great deal of care and with an anxious desire to do what was right in the matter without invading in any degree the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

On that investigation I became statisfied that it was fully within the power of Congress to pass such an act; and the evil existing was of such a character that I believed it to be proper, looking to the character of the offenses sought to be prohibited under this act and to the maintenance of friendly relations now existing between this and foreign governments, to pass the bill. Our committee was unanimously of the opinion that the bill should pass.

This bill is substantially the same as that reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. There are some few verbal changes which the committee thought it proper to incorporate in the bill, but they are immaterial, and there is no reason why this bill should not be passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARBOUR. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. That is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. MOULTON. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw the demand for the regular order, so as to permit this bill to pass.

Mr. TUCKER. There will be no debate upon it, I imagine.

Mr. BARBOUR. I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again inquire, is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read by its title a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOULTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM WEBSTER.

Mr. EATON. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The committee directed me to report back favorably the petition of William Webster with a resolution which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the petition of William Webster and the accompanying documents be transmitted to the President, with the request on the part of this House that he will take such steps as he may deem proper to secure a speedy inquiry into the injuries which Mr. Webster claims to have suffered by reason of acts of officers of the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and the payment of a just compensation therefor.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the House Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 581) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Leavenworth, Kans., and put the same upon its passage.

Mr. HENLEY. I demand the regular order.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman will yield to permit this measure to be taken up, as I think it will occupy but a few moments.

Mr. HENLEY. I must insist upon the demand for the regular order.

DOUCET PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS, LOUISIANA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office upon the private land claim of the legal representatives of François and Susanna Doucet, in the State of Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. GEORGE D. WISE, for three days, from and after to-day.
To Mr. WEMPLE, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.
To Mr. WOOD, until the 17th instant.
To Mr. CABELL, until Thursday next.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. SLOCUM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged motion. I move that the bill H. R. 1015, the Fitz-John Porter bill, with the Senate amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table with a view to concurring in the request of the Senate for a conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on said bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. SLOCUM, Mr. MORGAN, and Mr. STEELE as the conferees on the part of the House on said bill.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill (H. R. 3967) for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle and to provide means for the suppression and extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals, be taken from the Speaker's table with a view to concurring in the request of the Senate for a conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on said bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. HATCH of Missouri, Mr. DIBRELL, and Mr. WILSON of Iowa as the conferees on the part of the House on said bill.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. TOWNSHEND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of District of Columbia business.

SEWERAGE SYSTEM OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 6526) making an appropriation for the completion of the sewerage system of the District of Columbia, which is the unfinished business coming over from the last District day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for the proviso in the fourth section:

In line 3 strike out the words "charged to" and insert the words "paid out of the funds of;" in line 5 strike out the word "charged" and insert the word "paid;" strike out the proviso and insert: "And the commissioners, if they shall deem it necessary to enable the District to meet its portion of said expenditure, are hereby authorized to add to the rate of taxation on the assessment of the property of the District a per cent. sufficient to meet the expenditures of the District authorized by this act; and the current cost of the said work shall be paid in equal portions by the District and the United States: Provided, That said commissioners may postpone the commencement of said work until such time as they may deem expedient."

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Chairman, this bill was under consideration on last Monday week, and the committee rose while a vote was being taken on that amendment. The committee found itself without a quorum and the vote was being taken by tellers when the committee rose. I believe it will be in order now for the tellers to take their places and proceed with the count of that vote.

The CHAIRMAN. At the last sitting of the House when this bill was under consideration the House was taking a vote by tellers, the question of a quorum having been raised upon the amendment just read.

It will now be in order for the tellers to resume their places and proceed with the count. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SHELLEY] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will please act as tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the pending proposition will be reported to the committee as it will stand if amended.

The CHAIRMAN. It has just been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish it to be read as proposed to be amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposition as it will stand if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 4, if amended, will read as follows:

"That 50 per cent. of the amounts so paid by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the warrants of the commissioners of the District shall be paid out of the funds of said District in the same manner that the cost of similar work is now paid, and the commissioners, if they shall deem it necessary to enable the District to meet its portion of said expenditures, are hereby authorized to add to the rate of taxation and the assessment of the property of the District a per cent. sufficient to meet the expenses on behalf of the District authorized by this act, and the current cost of said work shall be paid in equal portions by the District and the United States: Provided, That said commissioners may postpone the announcement of said work until such time as they shall deem expedient."

Mr. SPRIGGS. With the consent of the mover of that proposition I desire to have this proviso read. It is sent to us by the commissioners of the District with a statement that they have or will have on the 1st of July $100,000 applicable to this work. They desire simply that they shall not be compelled to pay interest on any more money than is absolutely necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the proviso suggested by the gentleman from New York will be read.

Mr. SPRIGGS. It is a proviso that I propose to offer in place of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. I think it will meet the concurrence of everybody.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That one-half of any unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and any amounts of money in excess of appropriations which have been deposited by the District of Columbia in the Treasury of the United States, may be applied by the commissioners to the liquidation of the amounts so charged to the District; and any excess of money required to be charged to the District for the purposes of this act over the amount so applied shall be advanced by the United States and be reimbursed, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, to the United States by the District in annual installments of not less than $50,000, commencing with the fiscal year of 1885 and 1886.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the presentation of this as a substitute for the pending amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I think it is due to the committee that there should be some explanation of the effect of that amendment.

Now, it is well understood, and the law provides, that the public Treasury shall pay one-half of the amount necessary to support the government of the District, and we make appropriations to that extent, provision being made that the other half is to come out of the money assessed upon individual property in the District. Of course, if there be money in the Treasury unexpended that was a part of the appropriation made by the Government as its proportion of expenditures for the support of the District, there has been no 50 per cent. or a like amount taken out of the taxes of the District. This proposition, as I understand it, provides that the 50 per cent. that the Government has heretofore contributed shall be placed to the credit of the people of the District of Columbia, and the amount of money taken from the taxation of the District relieved to that extent.

But does not this reappropriation on the part of the United States of a balance unexpended in consequence of the District not having the amount to call it in expenditure relieve the District altogether from that requirement? If the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPRIGGS] will make plain that this amount of money which is reappropriated on the part of the Government shall only be expended in like amount as taxes are contributed by the District, then it will be fair. But I fear from listening to the hurried reading of the paper the language might be so construed as to release the District from its contribution to that amount.

Mr. MCMILLIN. To get at the fact as to the point suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPRIGGS] is it not a fact that all or a portion of that money that is unexpended is the portion that was contributed originally by the United States Government?

Mr. RANDALL. As I understand, this is a balance of the money contributed on the part of the Government, and now it is proposed to make it a credit for the District.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Oh, no.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think the language should be carefully guarded.

Mr. RANDALL. I may not be opposed to the amendment, but I want it made plain, so that it shall not be liable to any misconstruction.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I will explain that this is not money that has been contributed by the Government of the United States. It is money that has been paid into the Treasury from time to time by the District of Columbia in excess of the amount that has been required to pay for improvements. A letter from the Commissioners, which I ask to have read, shows the condition of this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., May 3, 1884.

SIR: The commissioners are of opinion that an advance by the United States to the District of Columbia to the full extent of $250,000 for the purpose of H. R. bill 6526 will not be required, as they believe that certain moneys are now in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District, as follows:

First. No account has ever been stated between the United States and the District since the assumption by the parent government of 50 per cent. of District expenditures.

Second. In many cases full amounts of appropriations credited to the District have not been expended, and the District having deposited its full share, one-half of such unexpended balances are now in the Treasury and belong to the District.

Third. In some years since the act of June 11, 1878, deposits of money in the Treasury of the United States have been made by the District in excess of the amount required to meet the District's half of the appropriations, and that all amounts so in excess belong to the District.

Fourth. If any money belonging to the District, as stated, is in the Treasury of the United States, no advance can be required for the purposes of H. R. 6526 on behalf of the District until such money shall be expended, and interest should not be charged against the District except upon advances, and to meet the objection contained in this last proposition the proviso herewith is respectfully suggested in lieu of the one in section four.

Very respectfully,

J. B. EDMONDS, President.

Hon. C. M. SHELLEY,
Of Committee for District of Columbia, House of Representatives.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Now, the point made by the commissioners is this: that they have paid into the Treasury moneys in excess of the amount that has been used in different years; and although they are not able to state the amount precisely, they believe they have in the Treasury to their credit such moneys amounting to something like $60,000. In a conversation I had with the commissioners on Saturday they stated that on the 1st of July next they would have moneys paid into the Treasury in excess of the amounts taken out by at least $100,000. They would therefore like to have that sum which is in the Treasury appropriated or paid toward this $250,000, and then that the District should be charged with interest on that amount as it may require in addition to that amount.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. I desire to ask him by whom these accounts are kept; whether the commissioners have anything to do with keeping them.

Mr. SPRIGGS. No, sir; they are kept by the Treasurer of the United States.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I ask the gentleman whether this is not a matter of information that could be got at the Treasury Department?

Mr. SPRIGGS. We asked the commissioners as to that, and they said it was not a matter that could be easily ascertained, that it would take some months to strike the balance so as to show the exact amounts standing to the credit of the District.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think if the gentleman from New York had called at the Treasury Department he would have ascertained very easily the state of the account between the Government and the District for every year. I am very sure I have seen such a statement for one year.

Mr. SPRIGGS. The commissioners simply give their judgment in regard to it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. How is it they are not in a position to know exactly what is in the Treasury to their credit?

Mr. SPRIGGS. Simply because there never has been any final accounting between the Treasury and the District as to the moneys paid in and the moneys taken out.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The books at the Treasury Department ought to show it, I think, on very little inspection.

Mr. SHELLEY. I have here a communication from the commissioners in reply to a request to the auditor of the District for information on this point. They state that the District revenues deposited in the United States Treasury from July 1, 1878, to June 30, 1883, amount to $8,564,073.34. The total amount drawn against the same to April 30, 1884, is $8,504,613.27; leaving a balance of $59,460.07 in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District.

Mr. BLOUNT. Right there I desire my friend from Alabama to say whether he knows there are no outstanding accounts to be credited to that? I am sure in reference to other appropriations, in reference to those for the Army and Navy and everything else, there are always outstanding accounts; so that a statement of that kind is deceptive and not to be relied on.

Mr. SHELLEY. This is the accumulation of a number of years; and I presume that there are outstanding accounts of previous years which have been unsettled or unpaid that will have to be provided for in some other way. There must be something wrong about them if they are not settled from year to year.

Mr. BLOUNT. By no means. That happens with all appropriations.

Mr. SPRIGGS. This $59,000, or whatever the amount may be, the commissioners ask to have applied to the expenses of that sewer, and that the District be charged only with interest on such sum as may be necessary to be loaned by the United States under this bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that is one part of it. But the statement that there is $60,000 in the Treasury belonging to the District government is intended to do more than that and to persuade this House that instead of the amount being $250,000, it is $250,000 less $60,000. That is the impression intended to be conveyed to the House based on the communication of the commissioners of the District. Now, sir, I have not had occasion to make a particular examination of this matter, but I have seen reports of the state of accounts between the District and the Government, and it is a very strange thing if there is not an annual adjustment of those accounts. How is the Treasurer to know how much money is at the credit of the District, how much money the commissioners are allowed to draw in behalf of the District, unless this matter is adjusted from year to year?

Mr. SHELLEY. It can not exceed the appropriation made by Congress.

Mr. BLOUNT. No; that is all true. But how can they ascertain whether it is existing or otherwise when they do not know the condition of the account? They must know each year the status of the account.

Mr. SHELLEY. Here is a statement of the amount received and also the amount drawn out, showing a balance of $59,000. That is taken from the books.

Mr. McMILLIN. But your statement does not show what are the outstanding liabilities. That is the complaint of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. I suppose there is hardly an appropriation bill passed that there are no outstanding accounts. The law provides that the surplus of appropriations shall not go back into the Treasury in less than two years, with a view to having a statement made of the accounts. The statement of the commissioners that they think there is $60,000 in the Treasury to their credit is too uncertain for the House to act upon.

Mr. SHELLEY. It is not a matter of opinion; it is a statement from the books of the auditor of the District; it is not a matter of opinion at all.

Mr. BLOUNT. They declare that in their opinion there is that amount. They do not insist that that is an accurate statement.

Mr. SHELLEY. This is an actual statement from the books.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is an actual statement of the amounts paid in and the amounts paid out; but it does not show that there are no outstanding accounts.

Mr. SPRIGGS. So far as the matter of interest between the District and the United States is concerned, can it make any difference whether that money is there subject to be applied to the expense of this sewer or not? If it is there, then there is so much less interest to be paid; if it is not there, then there is so much more interest at the rate of 4 per cent. to be paid on the money received from the Government of the United States.

Mr. BLOUNT. It makes only this difference, that if it is untrue that there is $60,000 in the Treasury to their credit, as they conjecture, then the inducement offered to this House to make this appropriation on the idea that there is not to be a loan of $250,000, but a loan of $250,000 minus the $60,000, loses its force.

Mr. SPRIGGS. So far as I am concerned the statement was not made for any such purpose. I did not think the House would object to loaning the $250,000. As I understand it, the proposition is for the benefit of the District of Columbia, if they have any money in the Treasury applicable to the payment of this sewer.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will allow me, I am not objecting to the provision, but to the inference that is drawn from the statement to aid in the passage of this bill.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I do not think the committee should ask that or desire it at all.

Mr. SHELLEY. I think myself that the bill would be better without it. I am not in favor of the amendment. But I brought these facts forward for the purpose of information, and I think that we had better proceed now to take the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPRIGGS] for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. McMILLIN. Do I understand that the substitute is offered for the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana?

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute is for the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I do not understand that the gentleman from Indiana objects.

The question was taken upon the substitute, and it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was then laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

FISH-WAYS ON THE POTOMAC.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. By instruction of the Committee for the District of Columbia, I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 4651) to amend an act approved July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 3 of an act approved July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows: Add to said section the following words:

"And provided further, That the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General of the United States shall proceed to acquire to and for the United States the outstanding title, if necessary, to any land and water rights required for the erection of said fish-ways, in the manner and by the procedure prescribed in section 1 of this act for obtaining title to the right of way for the extension of the aqueduct; and so much of the sum of $50,000 hereinabove appropriated as may be necessary for this purpose shall be available for the same."

The amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia were to strike out, in line 11, the word "any" and insert in lieu thereof the word "such" before the word "land;" and also, in the same line, to insert after the words "water rights" the words "as may be;" so that it will read:

Provided, That the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General of the United States shall proceed to acquire to and for the United States the outstanding title, if necessary, to such land and water rights as may be required for the erection of said fish-ways, &c.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to hear some explanation of this bill.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. The object of the bill is to make effective the appropriation of $50,000 in the act of July 15, 1882, for the construction of fish-ways at the Great Falls of the Potomac. That act was an act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes. It provided for the extension of the reservoir and conferred authority upon the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General to condemn whatever ground might be necessary to complete that extension.

It did not, however, give authority to those officers to condemn whatever ground or riparian rights might be necessary for the construction of the fish-ways provided for, and therefore the appropriation of $50,000 for that purpose is unavailable until the authority is given and that omission supplied. The pending bill is simply to confer authority upon the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General, by the same procedure described in the bill to condemn property for extending the reservoir, to condemn property, if necessary, for the construction of the fish-ways at the falls of the Potomac. The bill also provides that whatever money may be necessary to pay for the property so condemned shall be taken out of the appropriation already made. It does not require any additional appropriation at all. The object is simply to supply the omission in the act of the last Congress so as to make it effective for this purpose.

Mr. BLOUNT. The bill to which reference is made provided that the District's share of the expense for the extension of the water-works should be paid out of the water-rents.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. It did.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not remember whether the portion relating to the fish-ways came under that rule or not.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. It did not.

Mr. ELDREDGE. And it ought not to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think so myself.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. This bill is introduced at the request and on the recommendation of the Fish Commission and the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendments reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia were agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

PROTECTION OF FISH IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 3108) to protect fish in the Potomac River in the District of Columbia, and to provide a spawning-ground for shad and herring in the said Potomac River.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after date of passage of this act, for a term of five years, it shall not be lawful to fish with fyke-net, pound-net, stake-net, weir, float-net, gill-net, haul-seine, or any other contrivance, stationary or floating, in the waters of the Potomac River within the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall offend against any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon sufficient proof thereof in the police court or other court of the District of Columbia, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100 for each and every such offense, and shall forfeit to the District his nets, boats, and all other apparatus and appliances used in violation of law, which shall be sold; and the proceeds of such sales, and all fines accruing under this act, shall be paid into the Treasury, and therefrom, to the informer, in each case where conviction ensues, shall be paid the sum of $10: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit angling or fishing with the out-line or to prevent the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, or his agents, from taking from said waters of the Potomac River in the District of Columbia, in any manner desired, fish of any kind for scientific purposes or for the purposes of propagation.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was read, as follows:

In lines 13 and 14, strike out the words "to prohibit angling or fishing with the outline or."

Mr. BARBOUR. I desire to state that on further consideration the committee desire that the amendment just read should not be adopted, but that the words which the amendment proposes to strike out be retained. The object is that the bill shall not prohibit ordinary fishing with hook and line.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I have here a statement from the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, showing that in the year 1868 219,205 shad were caught at Stony Point, on the Potomac, and 689,392 herring; that in 1877 only 15,361 shad and 249,314 herring were taken at the same point during a similar period; showing that fishing with nets, which this bill undertakes to prohibit, is destroying shad-fishing in this river.

Mr. HATCH, of Michigan. Is not the penalty proposed in this bill too severe for the offense against which it is directed?

Mr. SPRIGGS. That depends upon whether we mean to do what this bill proposes to accomplish—to protect fish in this river. If we propose to make the law effective, can the penalty be said to be too severe?

Mr. HATCH, of Michigan. Yes; it may be. It seems to me that a penalty of $50 fine or ten days' imprisonment would be ample. But this bill proposes to forfeit a man's seines and nets, which may be worth thousands of dollars. This penalty I think is out of all proportion to the offense.

Mr. SPRIGGS. If we make the penalty severe we stop the commission of the act.

Mr. HATCH, of Michigan. Why not, then, impose the penalty of death?

Mr. SPRIGGS. No; that would be too severe.

Mr. HATCH, of Michigan. This is too severe.

Mr. SPRIGGS. But the object is to stop effectually the use of nets in these waters, and thereby to preserve the fish.

Mr. HATCH, of Michigan. Does not experience in the administration of criminal law show that milder punishments are more effectual than those which are too severe? Has not modern legislation moved away from this theory of severe punishments? It seems to me the bill should be amended in the direction I have indicated.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, it was not agreed to.

Mr. HATCH, of Michigan. I move to amend as will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 6 to 12, the following words: "and shall forfeit to the District his nets, boats, and all other apparatus and appliances used in violation of law, which shall be sold; and the proceeds of such sales and all fines accruing under this act shall be paid into the Treasury, and therefrom to the informer, in each case where conviction ensues, shall be paid the sum of $10;" so that the section as amended would read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That any person who shall offend against any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon sufficient proof thereof in the police court or other court of the District of Columbia shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100 for each and every such offense: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit angling or fishing with the outline or to prevent the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries or his agents from taking from said waters of the Potomac River in the District of Columbia, in any manner desired, fish of any kind for scientific purposes or for the purposes of propagation."

Mr. SPRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if the bill is to be effective the penalty prescribed by it is not too severe. It proposes to leave a discretion with the magistrate before whom the offender is brought. The person committing the offense is to be fined not less than $10 nor more than $100. We wish to adopt penalties which shall be sufficient to prevent what the bill undertakes to prevent—fishing with nets in the waters of the District of Columbia—the object being to stop the destruction of the fish which, as appears from the report of the Fish Commissioner, is now going on. In this view I submit the penalty is not exorbitant. Of course if you leave the fishing apparatus and appliances in the hands of the party violating the law, he is prepared the next day to repeat the offense. If you remove them from his possession, he is disabled from doing again what he has already been punished for doing. I think there can be no objection to the bill as it now stands.

Mr. HATCH, of Michigan. Just a word in advocacy of the proposed amendment. The bill as it now stands will work unequally. One man who commits the offense which the bill prohibits may have fishing apparatus worth $500; another may have similar apparatus worth $2,000 or $3,000. These two men, though committing the same offense, are punished under the bill unequally. The measure of punishment will be different, while the offense is the same. Now, it seems to me the court should have power in every case where the measure of transgression is the same to impose the same degree of punishment. Under the bill as reported by the committee such will not be the result. If my amendment be adopted the court can impose a suitable fine within the limits expressed in the bill, and according to the measure of transgression can impose an appropriate measure of punishment.

But under the bill reported by the committee this can not be done. It seems to me this whole policy of forfeiture and extreme punishment should be got rid of; that we should no longer indulge in punishment disproportioned to the offense committed. I think the severe punishment already enacted by Congress impairs a good deal of our legislation. I see the punishment provided for transgression of the postal laws is out of all proportion to that inflicted by the States for offenses of equal magnitude. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SPRIGGS. This bill is deemed to be one of a good deal of importance. In reply to the remarks make by the gentleman from Michigan who offers this amendment, it strikes me it would not be possible to make a law where there is more equality of punishment than the pending bill presented by the Committee on the District of Columbia. The point my friend makes is that one man may be punished more than another because one man's apparatus may be worth more than another—that one may have an apparatus worth $500 while another may have one worth $2,000. A man who has the most expensive apparatus and one the best fitted for depredations is the man who should be punished more than the man who has the less expensive one and less fitted to commit depredations. A man having an apparatus worth only $500 is prepared only to do one-fourth the damage the man is who has an apparatus worth $2,000. Neither can be punished beyond the extent of his outfit, and the man who has a two-thousand-dollar outfit has four times the capacity to violate the law, and is punished accordingly. There is an equality about the bill as we have proposed it here which seems to me better than the amendment.

I ask for the information of the committee to have the following paper read, showing how important the passage of this act is deemed by those having this matter in charge.

The Clerk read as follows:

A few reasons why House bill No. 3108, "to protect fish in the Potomac River in the District of Columbia, and to provide a spawning-ground for shad and herring in the said Potomac River," should become a law.

First. The rapid decline of the shad and herring fisheries of the Potomac shows the undoubted necessity and imperative demand for the adoption of protective measures, whereby the complete destruction of these most valuable varieties of food-fishes may be prevented.

Second. In protecting shad and herring we protect all the other varieties of fish; and it is confidently believed that this measure promises better results in the interests of the Potomac fisheries than any other ever advanced.

Third. The waters of the Potomac within the District of Columbia, lying as they do just at the head of tide water, become the natural spawning-ground for shad, herring, and other varieties of fish.

Fourth. The area covered by said waters comprises but a very limited portion of the river, comparatively speaking, and the forming of this portion into a sort of reservation for protection of the fish and use as a spawning-ground would not militate against the interests of those plying the vocation of fishermen, as all the length and breadth of the river below the District line is at their disposal.

Fifth. The boundary line between Virginia and the District of Columbia is laid down at the low-water mark of the Potomac River on its Virginia shore, and, consequently, the entire waters belonging to the District are under the authority and subject to the provision of laws enacted by Congress. All the other portions of this river are controlled jointly by the two States of Maryland and Virginia, and all laws relating thereto made by one State must be ratified by the other before they can go into effect. This renders it well-nigh impossible to secure protective legislation.

Therefore, to sum the matter up, it is eminently necessary to inaugurate protective measures in the interests of the Potomac fisheries, and to protect the fish on these spawning-beds is of first importance. The waters of the Potomac within the limits of the District of Columbia are the natural spawning-grounds. Legislation can be had to afford such protection here as it can not at any other point, and the enforcement of a law prohibiting the molestation of fish on these grounds for a few years will work no hardship, while it promises the accomplishment of great good.

The amendment of Mr. HATCH, of Michigan, was disagreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move pro forma to strike out the last word. I understand the bill reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia is the one originally drafted by Professor Baird, of the Smithsonian Institution, and that it is intended to protect our inland fishery so far as Congress may do it. I think there will be no difficulty in passing the bill. I have given a good deal of attention to this matter, and I ask leave now, not to take up the time of the committee, to print some remarks on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly. [See Appendix.]

Mr. COX, of New York. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. PETERS. I move to strike out in lines 10, 11, and 12 the following words: "And therefrom, to the informer, in each case where conviction ensues, shall be paid the sum of $10."

Mr. SPRIGGS. I am willing to accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote must be taken on the amendment.

Mr. PETERS. I move the amendment I have suggested.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I now move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House as amended with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move that the committee rise in order that we may get back into the House to attend to other business from the Committee on the District of Columbia upon the House Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNSHEND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and had directed him to report back sundry bills with amendments thereto.

SEWERAGE SYSTEM OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The first bill reported from the committee is a bill (H. R. 6526) making an appropriation for the completion of the sewerage system of the District of Columbia, with an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the proviso in section 4 and insert the following:

"Provided, That one-half of any unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and any amounts of money in excess of appropriations which have been deposited by the District in the Treasury of the United States, may be applied by the commissioners to the liquidation of the amounts so charged to the District; and any excess of money required to be charged to the District for the purposes of this act over the amount so applied shall be advanced by the United States, and be reimbursed with interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum to the United States by the District in annual installments of not less than $50,000, commencing with the fiscal year of 1885 and 1886."

So it will read:

"That the sum of $500,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of completing the principal main drainage and the auxiliary sewers of Washington and Georgetown, in accordance with the plans on file in the office of the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 2. That notice for proposals shall be given and contracts for the construction of said sewers made in the manner now provided by law in cases of building new sewers in the District of Columbia: Provided, That notice for proposals shall be given for thirty days; and in addition to the newspapers in which notice is now required to be given, said notice shall also be given in one newspaper for thirty days in each of the cities of Chicago, Cincinnati, Saint Louis, Louisville, and Richmond.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the aforesaid appropriation, for the construction of said sewers, in the manner now provided by law for similar work done in said District.

"SEC. 4. That 50 per cent. of the amounts so paid by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the warrants of the commissioners of the District shall be charged to the said District, in the same manner that the cost of similar work is now charged: Provided, That one-half of any unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and any amounts of money in excess of appropriations which have been deposited by the District in the Treasury of the United States, may be applied by the commissioners to the liquidation of the amounts so charged to the District, and any excess of money required to be charged to the District for the purposes of this act over the amounts so applied shall be advanced by the United States, and be reimbursed with interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum to the United States by the District in annual installments of not less than $50,000, commencing with the fiscal year of 1885 and 1886."

Mr. SHELLEY demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHELLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON WATER SUPPLY.

The SPEAKER. The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is the bill (H. R. 4651) to amend an act approved July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes," reported back with an amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 11 strike out "any" and insert "such;" and after the word "rights" insert "as may be;" so that it will read:

"That section 3 of an act approved July 15, 1882, entitled 'An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes,' be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows: Add to said section the following words:

"And provided further, That the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General of the United States shall proceed to acquire to and for the United States the outstanding title, if necessary, to such land and water rights as may be required for the erection of said fish-ways, in the manner and by the procedure prescribed in section 1 of this act for obtaining title to the right of way for the extension of the aqueduct; and so much of the sum of $50,000 hereinabove appropriated as may be necessary for this purpose shall be available for the same."

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF FISH, POTOMAC RIVER.

The SPEAKER. The next business is a bill (H. R. 3108) to protect fish in the Potomac River in the District of Columbia, and to provide a spawning-ground for shad and herring in the said Potomac River, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 10, 11, and 12 the following: "and therefrom, to the informer, in each case where conviction ensues, shall be paid the sum of $10."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POLICE REGULATIONS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 3448) relating to police regulations in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. This is a very long bill, and I ask by unanimous consent its first reading for information be dispensed with, and that it be read by paragraphs for amendment.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no person shall be licensed to conduct the business of a pawnbroker, or to keep a junk-shop or a second-hand clothing store, until it be shown that he or she is of good moral character, and has executed a bond to the District of Columbia, with surety to the satisfaction of the commissioners of the District, in the sum of $1,000, that the applicant will conform to the requirements of the law.

The Clerk will read the amendment reported by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 5 and 6 strike out the words "moral character" and insert in lieu thereof the word "repute."

The amendment was agreed to.

Section 2 was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. That no person so licensed shall receive on deposit or purchase, in such business, any personal property or thing before the hour of 7 o'clock ante meridiem, nor after the hour of 9 o'clock post meridiem, during the months from September to May of each year, nor before the hour of 6 o'clock ante meridiem, nor after the hour of 8 o'clock post meridiem during the months from April to October of each year.

The committee recommend the following amendments:

In lines 3, 4, 6, and 7, strike out the word "meridiem" and insert the word "meridian;" and add at the end of the section the following words: "nor charge for loans more than 3 per cent. per month."

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

Section 3 of the bill was read, as follows:

SEC. 3. That every person so licensed shall keep a book or registry in which shall be entered, plainly written in the English language and figures, the name and general and particular description of the person from whom every article is received, as well as his residence or dwelling place, and the name and description of the article pawned or sold, its fair estimated value, and the sum advanced upon such property, and also the period for which the pawn is given. The pawnbroker shall at the same time deliver to the said person pawning or pledging the said article or thing a certificate or ticket to correspond with the number and description of his or her original entry. In the case of sale other than the regular advertised sale, the name and description of the buyer shall also be recorded in the book of entry. All the entries in the book or registry shall be written in ink; and no entry shall be erased, obliterated, or defaced: Provided, That in the case of junk-dealers, rags, bones, old iron, and paper be excepted. And that any person who shall give to the pawnbroker, junk-dealer, or second-hand dealer a name or residence not the true one, for the purpose of defeating the intent of this law, shall, on conviction thereof in the police court, be dealt with under the provisions of the ninth section of this act.

No amendment offered.

Section 4 of the bill was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That every person so licensed shall prepare and deliver to the chief of police, every day before the hour of 12 o'clock m., a legible and correct copy from such book or registry of the description of all personal property or things received on deposit or purchased on the preceding day (except in the case of junk-dealers when purchasing rags, bones, old iron, and paper), together with the hour at which the article was received, together with a description of the person by whom left in pledge or from whom the same was purchased.

Mr. BELFORD. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I hope I may have the attention of this committee for the five minutes that I wish to address myself to the defects of this bill, and in opposition to its passage. There are thousands of poor women in this city who are absolutely compelled, by virtue of their poverty, to pawn dresses and their jewelry to these men in order to obtain food by which they can support themselves and their families. I want any gentleman connected with this committee to stand up on the floor of this House and defend as infamous and unconstitutional a measure as this. Suppose I am poor and can not raise money to support myself in a temporary exigency, why would I not have the privilege of going to a pawnbroker in this city and tell him to take my coat upon the principle that he agrees to give me money by which I can buy bread and meat for my suffering children? No more infamous a bill, in my judgment, was ever presented to the consideration of Congress, nor one which oppresses and outrages the poor and laboring people of this country more than this. I am speaking, sir, from a personal knowledge of the condition of many people in this country and this city, because I have endeavored during my term in Congress to be always charitable and just to the poor. But this says you shall not if you want bread, nor if you want butter, if you want meat for your children, you shall not sell your coat or other articles that you may be willing to dispose of to save your wife and children from suffering and want. That is the extent and spirit and purpose of this bill, and I hope that the American Congress will have the courage and the decency to vote it down.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER (Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair). The Clerk will report the next section.

The next section of the bill was read, as follows:

SEC. 5. That no personal property of any kind received on deposit, purchased, or pledged by any such pawnbroker, junk-dealer, or second-hand dealer shall be sold or permitted to be redeemed or removed from the place of business of such pawnbroker, junk-dealer, or second-hand dealer for the space of twenty-four hours after the copy and statement provided for in the last section have been delivered, nor shall such property be disfigured or its identity destroyed in any manner so long as it continues in pawn.

No amendment offered.

Section 6 of the bill was read, as follows:

SEC. 6. That such licensed persons shall not receive by way of pledge, pawn, or purchase any goods, articles, or things whatsoever belonging to or claimed by any minor or intoxicated person, nor from any person known to him or whom he may reasonably suppose to be either a minor, an intoxicated person, a notorious thief, or one convicted of larceny, burglary, house-breaking, or robbery.

No amendment offered.

Section 7 of the bill was read, as follows:

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of every person so licensed to admit to his or her premises, at any time, the major of police, or any officer of his force duly authorized by him, to examine any pledge or pawn books or other records on the premises, as well as the articles pledged or purchased, and to search for and take into possession articles missing or stolen, without the formality of the writ of search-warrant, which search or seizure is hereby authorized.

No amendment offered.

Section 8 of the bill was read, as follows:

SEC. 8. That every pawnbroker, junk-dealer, or second-hand clothing dealer shall be liable to the penalties hereinafter prescribed for every violation of any of the provisions of this law by his, her, or their agent or clerk; and no such agent or clerk shall be employed who is under twenty-one years of age, except in the purchase of paper, rags, bones, or old iron.

The committee recommend striking out all after the word "clerk," in line 4, as follows: "And no such agent or clerk shall be employed who is under 21 years of age, except in the purchase of paper, rags, bones, or old iron."

The amendment was agreed to.

Section 9 was read, as follows:

SEC. 9. That the penalty for violating any provision of any of the preceding sections shall be for each offense a fine, upon conviction before the police court, of not less than $10 nor more than $100, in the discretion of the court; and upon failure to pay such fine upon final judgment, the party convicted shall be committed to the work-house for a period not exceeding ninety days, and his or her license may be revoked at the discretion of the commissioners.

No amendment offered.

Section 10 was read, as follows:

SEC. 10. That all vagrants; idle and disorderly persons; persons of evil life and fame; persons who have no visible means of support; persons found begging or drunk in or about any street or public place, or loitering in or about tippling-houses; all suspicious persons who have no fixed place of residence or can not give a good account of themselves; persons guilty of grossly indecent behavior in the streets, or in any other place where the same may be publicly observed; all persons known to be notorious or professional thieves, burglars, pickpockets, or confidence persons, suspected of an unlawful purpose within the District of Columbia, and all persons found in the possession of burglars' tools, and unable to give a good account of such possession, shall, on information made before the police court, be deemed guilty of vagrancy, and be required to enter into security for their good behavior for a space of time not to exceed one year; and in case of refusal or inability to give such security they shall be confined in the work-house of said District for a time not exceeding one year, unless such security shall be sooner given; and the same proceeding shall be had against such person or persons so offending for each and every offense.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Strike out, in line 2, the words "persons of evil life and fame;" also, in line 3, strike out the words "begging or." After the word "drunk," in line 3, insert the words "and disorderly." Strike out, in lines 11 and 12, the words "suspected of an unlawful purpose within the District of Columbia." In line 13, strike out the word "good" and insert "satisfactory." In line 14, strike out the word "information" and insert the words "complaint or oath." In lines 17 and 19, strike out the words "one year" and insert in each place "six months;" so that if amended the section will read as follows:

"SEC. 10. That all vagrants; idle and disorderly persons; persons who have no visible means of support; persons found drunk and disorderly in or about any street or public place, or loitering in or about tippling-houses; all suspicious persons who have no fixed place of residence or can not give a good account of themselves; persons guilty of grossly indecent behavior in the streets, or in any other place where the same may be publicly observed; all persons known to be notorious or professional thieves, burglars, pickpockets, or confidence persons, and all persons found in the possession of burglars' tools, and unable to give a satisfactory account of such possession, shall, on complaint or oath made before the police court, be deemed guilty of vagrancy, and be required to enter into security for their good behavior for a space of time not to exceed six months; and in case of refusal or inability to give such security they shall be confined in the work-house of said District for a time not exceeding six months, unless such security shall be sooner given; and the same proceeding shall be had against such person or persons so offending for each and every offense."

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in lines 2 and 3 of section 10 of this bill, the following words: "persons who have no visible means of support." Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I do not properly comprehend what the committee may have meant by the language used. In the first line of this section they provide "that all vagrants," "idle and disorderly persons," shall be subject to the provisions of the act, and I can not reasonably conclude that the committee repeated in the very next line. I can draw a conclusion by the aid of an occurrence that happened in Iowa a few years since, about the date of the hard times of '73. The executive of that State ordered to be posted, or it was so ordered, in every village and city of that grand State, posters or placards containing similar statements—statements that "persons out of employment," "having no visible means of support," should be arrested and treated as vagrants. I then denounced that act on the part of the executive of my own State as an outrage and a stultification of the Christian (so-called) civilization of this the nineteenth century.

I believe, sir, that the words I have mentioned should be stricken from this bill, so that persons seeking employment with no visible means of support, except their brain and muscle and will to earn honest bread, should not be classed with vagrants and disorderly persons.

I believe if these words remain in this section and the bill thus becomes a law, that it will not only be possible, but my knowledge of the history of the dealings of money capital with the laboring classes assures me that it is probable, that many an honest poor man will be oppressed, arrested, tried, and convicted as a vagrant for the ostensible reason that he has no visible means of support except his muscle, brain, and will to work, which in very truth and fact may be all the means he has in all the wide world except perchance the universally free gifts of God's blessing to humanity showered on every hand. These blessings with his other named qualifications might be ample for all his reasonable wants.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are many persons in this country to-day who, under and by the influences of the financial policy that has been foisted on the Government by the manipulators of the Republican party, have been brought to those conditions of dependence in which they could not have any visible means of support except that which the God of Nature gave them—muscle, brain, and will. There are many features of this bill that I am pleased with, but there are some that I denounce as outrageous. The second section contains a statement that to my mind is most monstrous. This is the language to which I refer:

Nor charge for loans more than 3 per cent. per month.

To whom does this language apply? To the pawnbrokers, the scavengers that feed and fatten on the misfortunes of their fellow-men! I am minded to think that some of the language used by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] to this bill might with some degree of propriety be reiterated by me as an expression of my views, but I refrain from use of his statements. The idea that here, under the very door of the Treasury vaults of the United States Government, here in the District of Columbia, a place solely under the jurisdiction of Congress, a bill should be presented asking this House to permit these pawnbrokers, these scavengers, these Shylocks, the outrageous privilege of charging 3 per cent. per month for the use of money advanced on pawns or pledges, ofttimes of the very choicest of family relics and keepsakes, that poverty compels them thus to part with! What a comment on the financial prosperity which is the boast of the manipulators of the policies and politics of the party that has been in power for almost twenty-five years! The idea that these men—human beings—at the very seat of our Government, even under the very shadow of the Capitol, should come to this House with such an amazing proposition as to ask permission of Congress to charge and receive 3 per cent. per month for the use of money is a proposition not only amazing but worthy of the most serious contemplation, but also in my judgment of the most severe rebuke.

This proposition can be entertained only on the fact that there are people at the very capital of our Government so reduced by the circumstances surrounding their lives that they are compelled to pawn their household furniture, even the very coat on their backs, to get money to buy bread and meat and hold a shelter for themselves and families, and for this to pay 3 per cent. per month.

I say that a financial system that will permit or make possible such outrages as this is a most damnable system, and this House ought to see it wiped out, and that forever. I trust that my amendment will prevail; that no law shall be made to subject any honest man, who even begs for leave to toil to earn his bread, to prospective arrest, trial, conviction, and incarceration with infamy because his only visible means of support is, and only is, his brain, teeming with hopes and honest purposes to win bread; his muscle, weak with ofttimes overwrought effort, but willing with desires for success; his purposes, strong only in the foolish notion that it is God's plan that he should be poor and continually produce wealth, while others should be rich, and so only by absorbing that which labor produces. I repeat, I hope the words I have indicated will be stricken out, and at least that the Democratic side of this House will not vote for this bill in its present shape.

The amendment proposed by Mr. WELLER was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 11, as follows:

SEC. 11. That whenever any person shall hereafter be convicted before the police court of vagrancy or other violation of any municipal law of this District, and shall be required by such law to give security for his or her good behavior, or against his or her becoming a charge upon said District, such security shall consist of a bond for a penal sum not exceeding $1,000, with such surety or sureties as the judge of said court shall approve, conditioned to secure this District against a repetition of the offense of which the person so charged stands convicted.

The committee propose to amend by striking out in line 7 "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 12, as follows:

SEC. 12. That upon complaint to the said police court by any officer or respectable citizen of any violation of the condition or conditions of the said recognizance during the period of its legal efficacy, a summons containing a statement of the breach or breaches complained of shall issue to require the obligors in the said recognizance to appear before the court, on some early day to be named in the summons, to show cause, if any they have, why judgment should not be rendered and execution issued for the sums secured by such recognizance; and the said court, upon the day on which said summons shall be returned served, shall hear and determine the truth of such complaint, and render judgment, and issue execution therefor and for costs.

The committee propose to amend by inserting, after the word "complaint," in line 1, the words "on oath."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 13, as follows:

SEC. 13. That any person or persons who shall fail or refuse to comply with the provisions, or any portion thereof, of section 425 to 430, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, shall, for each offense, be fined in any sum not exceeding $500, or shall be imprisoned in the jail of the District for a time not exceeding six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The committee propose the following amendments:

In line 2, strike out the word "section" and insert the word "sections."
In line 5, after the word "Columbia," insert "regarding private detectives."

Mr. PETERS. I should like to have a little explanation as to this amendment to insert the words "regarding private detectives." I presume it has reference to sections 425 to 430, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes for the District. I do not know what those sections are.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Those sections of the Revised Statutes have reference to the regulation of private detectives. They provide for giving certain persons licenses as private detectives. This provides the penalty for failure to comply with the provisions of those sections.

The amendments of the committee were adopted.

The Clerk read section 14, as follows:

SEC. 14. That the act of Congress approved April 29, 1878, entitled "An act to prevent the sale of policy or lottery tickets in the District of Columbia," be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting the word "lottery" before the words "policy, lottery or policy shop," wherever the latter, or either of them, are contained in the said act.

The committee proposed to amend by striking out the section.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I should be glad to know why the Committee on the District of Columbia recommend the striking out of this fourteenth section. By reference to page 39 of the Statutes at Large for 1877–'78 it will be seen there is an act of the Congress of the United States "to prevent the sale of policy or lottery tickets in the District of Columbia." The first section of that act provides—

That if any person shall, within the District of Columbia, keep, set up, or promote, or be concerned as owner, agent, clerk, or in any other manner, in managing any policy-lottery or policy-shop, or shall sell or transfer any ticket, certificate, bill, token, or other device purporting or intended to guarantee or assure to any person, or entitle him to a chance of drawing or obtaining a prize, or share of, or interest in, any prize to be drawn in any lottery, or in the game or device commonly known as policy-lottery or policy; or shall, for himself or another person, sell or transfer, or have in his possession, for the purpose of sale or transfer, or shall aid in selling, exchanging, negotiating, or transferring a chance or ticket in, or share of a ticket in, any policy-lottery, or any such bill, certificate, token, or other device, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, &c.

This first section relates wholly to persons engaged in the business of policy-lotteries, the selling of lottery tickets, insuring, as it seems, the holder to draw some sum of money by reason of its investment. The second section of this act provides—

That if any person shall knowingly permit in any house under his control, in the District of Columbia, the sale of any chance or ticket in, or share of a ticket in, any lottery or policy-lottery, or shall knowingly permit any lottery or policy-lottery or policy-shop in such house, he shall be deemed guilty, &c.

So that the second section is directed against the person who shall permit his house in the District to be used in the sale of a ticket or chance in a lottery or a policy-lottery ticket.

Now, why is it we should not denounce the penalties of the statute against persons engaged in keeping, setting up, or promoting lotteries in the District? Will some gentleman tell me why? It is a crime, it seems, to keep a building or house in which a lottery is to be held or in which lottery tickets are to be sold; but it is only an offense against the statute under the first section for a person to set up and promote a policy-lottery. I must confess I can not see why it is that this committee proposes to strike out the provision which inserts the word "lottery." I can not see why it was not included in the original act. I can not for my life see why it is not as criminal to sell a lottery ticket as it is to sell a policy-lottery ticket. The sale of these tickets is prohibited by law in almost every State in the Union. It is in a way prohibited in the District of Columbia by another statute. It seems to me that the committee fear that there may be some respectable gentleman or a number of respectable gentlemen in the District of Columbia who are engaged in keeping, setting up, and promoting lotteries, and are concerned as owners, agents, clerks, or in some other manner in selling tickets in the colossal swindle of the age known as the Louisiana Lottery, about which I shall have something more to say when we come to the fifteenth section. I therefore object to this amendment, by which it is proposed to strike out the fourteenth section of this bill.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to ask my friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] just one question. Would he prohibit a company of respectable gentlemen having a quiet game of poker in a private room? We do not want any of this Puritanical cant about this bill. Let us understand the substantial point. I have known some of the most respectable men of this nation that sat down at a private dinner party and played poker. They took their chances. And if they go and buy a lottery ticket have they not that same right? They may lose or they may win.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Well, having had no experience in playing poker at private dinner parties or anywhere else, I can not answer the question of the gentleman. I never played but one game of poker in my life, and that was about thirty years ago, and when I got up from that private game I had no money left to play another with and I quit. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRIGGS. In answer to the gentleman from Indiana, I desire to say that I do not think the committee intended to make any distinction between lottery tickets and policy-lottery tickets. There was a division in the committee, and the idea was not to legislate in regard to lotteries so far as the District of Columbia is concerned. That was the reason which led us to report an amendment to strike out this section.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. One word further. I understand the gentleman in charge of this bill to say that it was not the intention of the Committee on the District of Columbia to legislate on the lottery question at all. Now, if they intend that there shall be no legislation against lotteries in this district, it would be well for them to repeal the act of Congress of which this fourteenth section is a proposed amendment. I imagine that it is quite as reputable to engage in a policy-lottery business as it is in the lottery business itself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the proposition of the Committee on the District of Columbia to strike out the fourteenth section of this bill as read.

The question was taken and the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

Section 15 was read, as follows:

SEC. 15. That whoever knowingly prints, publishes, or circulates, or knowingly causes to be printed, published, or circulated, any advertisement of any lottery ticket or scheme or drawing, or any share in such ticket or scheme or drawing; or exhibits any symbol or other representation of a lottery, or the drawing thereof, or in any way indicates where a lottery ticket, or any share thereof, or other lottery symbol or token may be purchased or obtained, or in any way invites or entices, or attempts to invite or entice, any other person to purchase or receive the same, shall, for each offense, be fined not exceeding $500, and in default thereof shall be committed to jail until the fine and costs shall have been paid.

The Committee on the District of Columbia recommend that section 15 be stricken from the bill.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The section which it is proposed to strike out of this bill is one declaring a penalty against the publication in the District of Columbia in a newspaper or otherwise of a lottery enterprise. Of the thirty-eight States of this Union twenty-seven have prohibited lotteries both by their constitutions and by statutes. There are eight States that declare lottery enterprises and the sale of lottery tickets, &c., misdemeanors by statute, making thirty-five of the thirty-eight States of the Union that have either in the one way or the other declared lotteries and the sale of lottery tickets to be misdemeanors. Two States, the States of Delaware and Vermont, prohibit lotteries except as they may be authorized by a special act of the General Assembly.

In the State of Louisiana it is provided by the constitution that lotteries and gambling-houses shall be lawful until the year 1895. I believe that the Legislature of that State has by law authorized the licensing of gambling-houses and lottery establishments upon the payment of $10,000 per annum, provided that the business is run on the first floor. Of this kind of legislation Louisiana has a monopoly. It is certain that there is to-day no State in the Union under whose statutes the lottery business is lawful except that State. That State allows the morals of its people to be debauched for $10,000 a year.

It is the purpose of this section more particularly to protect the people of the District of Columbia from the Louisiana Lottery, which is to-day perhaps almost the only institution of the kind that is engaged in such business, and it does so in defiance both of public opinion and of law. It has its drawings in the city of New Orleans periodically, perhaps monthly.

It furnishes no capital for the prosecution of its business. The dupes who are permitted to draw back about 5 per cent. of their contributions furnish all the capital for this colossal establishment. For every $100,000 that its victims deposit in the exchanges of the concern they are permitted to take out about $5,000. It is a fact that the people of this country contribute to the net profits of that concern from one to two millions of dollars every year. This monster gambling establishment is reaping a harvest of over one and a half millions of dollars every year to be distributed in salaries to officers, for the payment of its agents, and the support of its lobbyists.

The headquarters of this enterprise is here in the District of Columbia. A gentleman who knows, standing near the head of one of the Executive Departments, tells me that from his observations he believes the clerks in that Department alone contribute to this Louisiana lottery cheat not less than $10,000 every month. A gentleman who stands near the police of the District of Columbia, and who, through them, has investigated something of the manner in which the business is being transacted here, reports that during the last year there were at one time in the streets of this city not less than seventy men who were engaged in selling chances in this lottery, and who were gathering in from the poor, ignorant colored people and white people of the District harvests for this institution, and earning for each of themselves about $5 every day. For this illegal business, this business denounced as a crime by the constitutions and statutes of all the States, these agents plying their business publicly upon the streets of this city were putting into their own pockets not less than $350 a day. They were taking that amount as their share of this infamous swindle.

It is impossible to form an estimate of the amount of money they take from these poorer classes to be invested in this gambling enterprise. The commissioners of the District of Columbia state to me that this business of purchasing chances in lotteries has become a mania with many of the poor and ignorant people of the District; that they are induced to spend almost everything they can earn or beg in these purchases, and when the winter time comes they are without fuel, without clothes, and without bread, and become subjects of charity to be supported out of the treasury of the District.

These lottery tickets may not be sold in the State of Virginia. Dealing in such tickets is there denounced as a crime. The language of the constitution is that—

No lottery shall hereafter be authorized by law, and the buying, selling, or transferring of ticket or chances in any lottery shall be prohibited. (Article 5, section 18.)

The statute of Virginia provides that—

Persons buying or selling lottery tickets or setting up or promoting a lottery shall be liable to imprisonment in jail not more than one year or fined not more than $500.

That is what Virginia provides on one side of this District. On the other side, Maryland by her constitution prohibits lotteries and declares that no lottery shall hereafter be authorized by the General Assembly. It provides further by statute that "if any person shall by printing, writing, or in any other way publish an account of any lottery," &c., he shall be subject to a fine of $1,000, or imprisonment for sixty days.

So that Virginia on one side of the District prohibits, both by constitution and statute, lotteries or the dealing in lottery tickets; and on the other side Maryland not only prohibits its General Assembly from authorizing lottery schemes, but denounces a penalty of not less than $1,000 and sixty days' imprisonment against any person who prints or causes to be printed any publication concerning a lottery or a lottery drawing.

I find here in a report made upon this subject at the other end of the Capitol a quotation from the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Phelan vs. Virginia. I will read it:

The suppression of nuisances injurious to public health or morality is among the most important duties of government. Experience has shown that the common forms of gambling are comparatively innocuous when placed in contrast with the wide-spread pestilence of lotteries. The former are confined to a few persons and places, but the latter infests every class; it preys upon the hard earnings of the poor; it plunders the ignorant and the simple.

I wish also to call attention to a case recently decided in the State of Pennsylvania. A suit was brought by M. A. Dauphin, the general manager of the Louisiana Lottery, against the Philadelphia Times for libel. The words charged as libelous consisted in characterizing this baseness as "one of the most stupendous robberies of our history," and declaring that the company had "subsidized many of the professedly reputable newspapers of the land to aid it in its systematic robbery of millions from the people."

Dauphin believed that he and the institution in which he is concerned had been libeled by this statement, and hence brought suit. Judge McKennan declared that Dauphin's business was entitled to no protection whatever.

It is not only unlawful—

Said he—

but it is worse. It is an infamous crime. Is it possible that a business stigmatized by the law of Pennsylvania can not be so characterized here by the editor of a newspaper or any other citizen, notwithstanding the fact that the business may be lawful in Louisiana? Is it possible that the citizens of Pennsylvania may not express their approval of the laws of Pennsylvania? It seems extraordinary, after Congress has said that a man who conducts such a business as the one now in question ought to go to the penitentiary, that a citizen dare not express his opinion or approval of a law on the books. We will say that a man is not amenable to the laws of Pennsylvania for characterizing this business as robbery.

Mr. Speaker, let this suffice. I need not discuss, nor have I intended to discuss particularly, the general character of the lottery business. The courts properly characterize them as infamous robberies. Lotteries are already prohibited in the District of Columbia; but this section which the committee propose to strike out makes it unlawful for any person to knowingly print, publish, or circulate, or knowingly cause to be printed, published, or circulated, any advertisement or drawing in the District of Columbia. Now let me put the question seriously to the House, if this business is unlawful and is so denounced by the statute, ought it to be permitted that any person shall by advertisement, by printing, by circular, by newspaper article, or otherwise, invite the people to commit the crime. If it were a felony, under the well-settled rules of law any person counseling, aiding, or procuring the commission of the offense would be a principal, or at least an accessory before the fact.

All that was intended by this section as it originally stood in this bill was to prohibit any person from inviting people by circular, handbill, newspaper advertisement, or otherwise to commit this offense against the statutes of the United States. If it be agreed that the lottery business is unlawful, if the man who sells tickets and those who buy them are to be held subject to the penalties of law, it is indeed very strange that we are unwilling to say it shall be unlawful for others to invite, encourage, or advise them to commit these offenses. All that this section is intended to do, all that it pretends to do, is to declare that the encouragement of this offense shall be a crime subject to the penalties of the statute.

It is a fact—and I would not speak of it if it were not a fact of which the Congress of the United States is bound to take notice—that the New Orleans Lottery Company has defied public opinion, defied the statutes, and defied the Government Departments; and I ask now whether it and its lobby are either to defy or intimidate the Congress of the United States?

In conclusion, I would like to have read by the Clerk an extract on this subject from the report of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Congress has prohibited lotteries, and declared the sale of tickets in this District to be a crime, but has omitted, what has been found necessary in most of the States in order to make the prohibition effectual, to forbid the advertising of lottery schemes and drawings, or to prohibit the importation and purchase of tickets by mail. One State only, as the commissioners are advised, for the sake of the great revenue derived thereby, tolerates lotteries. Twenty-eight States prohibit them by constitutional provision; others prohibit by statute. The advertisement of lottery schemes is forbidden in most of the States. Some, like Virginia, declare the purchase as well as sale of tickets to be a crime. Others, like Maryland or New Hampshire, forbid the importation of tickets or traffic therein by mail.

Such concurring and almost universal legislation has driven lottery advertising to this District, where, through nearly all of the newspapers, the Havana and New Orleans lottery companies not only reach the people and evade the laws of the States, but carry on a large traffic through the mails, take large sums from the District, and especially from the improvident and poor, and hold high carnival at the capital despite the intended prohibition by Congress.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. These mammoth iniquities must hold high carnival in this District no longer. The people must be protected from the sharpers who fleece them of their earnings for the benefit of respectable gamblers in lottery schemes.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker, we have heard some extraordinary arguments here touching the character and the merits of this bill. It seems that the statesmen of Indiana have taken charge of the morals of this nation. [Laughter.] We have one who conspicuously appears as an objector, and we have one who conspicuously appears as a debater. In my judgment both should be linked together like the lovebirds of Africa and allowed to float into the fields of infinite and immeasurable space. [Laughter and applause.] Suppose I have five dollars in my pocket—which is hardly a supposable case. [Laughter.] I have the right to buy tobacco if I choose to do so; I can buy cigars with it if I choose; I can get a glass of champagne if I desire to do it; and what right has the Congress of the United States to put any prohibition on my right as an individual?

What right has my moral and Puritanical friend from Indiana to attempt to deprive me of my legal and constitutional right of spending my own money in the way I choose to do it?

Suppose I desire to buy a lottery ticket, why should I be prevented from doing it? As I said a while ago, suppose I desire, in my own parlor with four or five gentlemen, to put up $100 on the table in a quiet game of poker, what has Congress to do with that? [Laughter.] Is Congress going to work to enact a bill of fare I shall have at my table? Is Congress going to work to enact a bill whereby amusements in my parlor shall be conducted? If that is permitted, next will go the banquet and then the disappearance of the company and the end of the scene. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, this whole thing is a humbug, and I give notice that when you get to the end of the bill I will move to strike out the enacting clause. I will then commit the morality of the nation, as we already have committed the politics of the country, to the State of Indiana. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SPRIGGS. What I said in reference to the fourteenth section is applicable to the fifteenth section. I agree with the gentlemen who have spoken that lotteries or lottery-policies do not improve the morals of any community. In committee we disagreed in reference to what should be done as to this class, and we believed it would be better to allow the law already enacted on that question to remain as it is. We thought it would be better.

Mr. WELLER. I move as a substitute section 15 as it is found in the original bill, and it is as follows:

SEC. 15. That whoever knowingly prints, publishes, or circulates, or knowingly causes to be printed, published, or circulated, any advertisement of any lottery ticket or scheme or drawing, or any share in such ticket or scheme or drawing, or exhibits any symbol or other representation of a lottery, or the drawing thereof, or in any way indicates where a lottery ticket, or any share thereof, or other lottery symbol or token, may be purchased or obtained, or in any way invites or entices, or attempts to invite or entice, any other person to purchase or receive the same shall, for each offense, be fined not exceeding $500, and in default thereof shall be committed to jail until the fine and costs shall have been paid.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I raise a point of order on that proposed amendment. The committee report this bill back with the recommendation that that fifteenth section be stricken out. Voting against that motion to strike out has the effect of keeping that section in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is undoubtedly correct, and the Chair therefore rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. WELLER. I am content if my purpose can be accomplished in that way, and I shall therefore vote against striking that section, the fourteenth section, out.

Now, Mr. Speaker, but for the able remarks made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] in favor of the position he has taken I would seek to make extended remarks myself at the present time, for I am, as I have said, in favor of retaining the fourteenth section of the bill, as also the fifteenth section. I am opposed to lottery schemes and swindles of all kinds. I am opposed to all chance games. I am opposed to anything of the sort. We have already had too much of it in the United States, and especially in our leading cities in the last few years; and it seems to me unless the people shall become speedily aroused to the importance of this question that the time is not far distant when we will find monopolies coming up and claiming they have a corner not only in the cereals, meats, lights, and other materials supplying human want, but also on the very breath of life, and if they ever get a corner of that kind they will make us pay dear for the atmosphere we breath.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that we now want to begin right and in earnest to wipe out the great array of swindling institutions that find lodgment in almost every city within our Government. This proposed section I regard as a step in the right direction. In my judgment it is a proper beginning. The gentleman from Indiana has characterized the lottery system as the great colossal swindle of the age. I regard it as one of the minor swindles as compared with others under which this country is laboring to-day. The great colossal swindle of the age in my opinion is the product of the manipulators of the Republican party for the last twenty years, and finds its summing up in their infernal financial policy, evidenced in the national banking system. They are to-day before this House with their measures looking to a perpetuation of that swindle, that colossal outrage on a people's government of, by, and for themselves. They are to-day before this House with measures seeking to perpetuate this the most outrageous monopoly that the Government has ever known since the days of the United States Bank that Jackson throttled, and that is the national banking system. But I expect and hope that this House on this very measure will take the initial steps in the line of correcting some of these evils; and when they have taken the initial steps I trust at least that the Democratic side of the House will take the further step of wiping that consummation of all villainous systems, the national banking system, from the statute-books of our Government.

I would be pleased, Mr. Speaker, if opportunity might now be accorded me or if I were permitted to occupy the attention of this House, to make an amendment to the second section of this bill. But I am satisfied that it would be contrary to the practice to go back to it. When it came before the House for consideration I was then busily engaged with another matter and did not note the action being taken in time to offer the proper amendment. But the idea that we, the representatives of the people, should be called upon here in our relations to the people as national legislators to make or permit the passage of a law limiting the exactions of the money-lenders upon their patrons, the unfortunate people, to 3 per cent. per month is not simply strangely absurd, but shows the present financial system to be in bad working order, at least in the District of Columbia.

To permit the extortionist of this District or any part of this country to demand and receive on loans for the use of money 3 per cent. per month, while also having the exclusive right of determining the class of security he takes and the terms of conversion in case of failure to pay at maturity, is in my judgment a bald-faced outrage on good government. To think of the existence of conditions and circumstances that make it needful to restrict any class of money-lenders to 3 per cent. per month by law is a terrible comment on the policy of the party that has had the reins of government in their sole executive hands for over twenty years. To think that any one would seek to take such interest as the product of any system is awful, and the bare proposition is a stultification and a disgrace to our boasts that we have a people's government—a government the genius and theory of which is a government of the people by and for the people.

It seems to me, sir, that it is high time for us to move in the line of a sweeping reform. I had hoped the other day that the bill presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] would receive such favorable consideration from the hands of members on this floor as that at least permission would be given to us who desire to vote solidly for some of its provisions, and to amend others to conform to the wishes of our constituencies to offer such amendments, and thus to perfect the bill to correspond to the demands of the people for a revision of the tariff in the interest of labor as against Eastern manufacturing corporate monopolies.

But permission was destroyed by one fell blow, the motion to strike out the enacting clause. There was a consolidated effort on the part of eastern Republican monopolists, and I regret to say, also members of the Democratic party, that in my judgment are in league with them, which prevented us from doing that which I think the times and the business of the whole country demanded. We now have presented to our attention a question where we can do something in the line of reform, something in the line of striking a blow in the face of a swindle and in favor of labor, and I hope this step will be taken. I hope that this section of the bill will be voted upon and retained as a part of the present bill. And when we have taken this one step I trust there will be information before us sufficient to enable us to go right on in this direction, and that the laws or bills passed upon by this House shall prove an everlasting monument in favor of a people's government for the people, for future generations to look back to with a certain knowledge of benefits to them and no small degree of pride for such as had a part and lot in their creation.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask the Chair to notify me when we reach the section of this bill referring to the national banking system, as I want to move to strike it out. [Laughter.]

Mr. WELLER. I am glad to find the gentleman ready to place himself on record in favor of my proposition. [Renewed laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the recommendation of the committee to strike out the fifteenth section.

The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That it shall not be lawful for any person to keep open any place of business for the sale of any article or articles of profit during the Sabbath day, excepting apothecaries, for the dispensing of medicines; undertakers, for the purpose of providing for the dead; the owners of barber-shops, newsdealers in hotels, and others for the purposes of charity or necessity; and for any violation of this section the person offending shall for each offense be fined not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars.

The committee recommend the following amendments: Consolidate sections 16 and 17 into one section, to be numbered 14. In line 3, strike out the words "articles of profit during the Sabbath day," and insert "openly prosecute any trade or business during Sundays."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment recommended by the committee was to insert, after the word "dead," in line 6, the words "street-railway companies, hacks, livery owners, and other common carriers," and strike out the words, "the owners of barber-shops."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee further recommend, in line 8, to strike out the words "in hotels," and insert the words "and proprietors of barber-shops before noon."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also, in line 10, strike out the word "and," and insert the word "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee further recommend the striking out of the following words in lines 10, 11, and 12, "and for any violation of this section the person offending shall for each offense be fined not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars."

Mr. SPRIGGS. I think these words were recommended to be stricken out by a mistake, and I ask that they be restored.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A negative vote on the motion to strike out will be equivalent to a motion to retain them in the bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. The amendment proposed by the committee to strike out in lines 10, 11, 12, is a proper amendment for the reason that these two sections 16 and 17 are consolidated into one section, and these words are added to the end of the section, as will be shown if the remainder of the section is read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will complete the reading of the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall not be lawful for the proprietor of any billiard, bagatelle, Jenny Lind, or pool table, bowling alley, shuffling board, or shooting gallery to keep open his or her place of business, nor to allow such table, alley, or place to be used, for hire or otherwise, on Sunday, nor to allow or permit any minor under the age of 16 years to frequent any of said places of business, or to engage in any of said games, at any time; and that for any violation of this section the person so offending shall, for each offense, be punished by a fine of not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee to strike out the words which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And for any violation of this section the person offending shall for each offense be fined not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment proposed by the committee, as follows:

Strike out the words "Sec. 17. That" and insert the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment proposed by the committee, as follows:

After the word "board" strike out the word "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment proposed by the committee, as follows:

After the word "gallery" strike out the words "to keep open his or her place of business, nor to allow such table, alley, or place to be used, for hire or otherwise, on Sunday, nor" and insert the words "or bar-room."

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman in charge of this bill. I notice the amendment proposes to insert the words "or bar-room," and there is still the retention of the amendment as to persons under the age of 16 years. The inquiry I want to make is whether the police regulations, as authorized by the act of Congress, do not prohibit the sale of liquor to "minors?"

Mr. SPRIGGS. I think so.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then why not use the word "minor" instead of "person under the age of 16 years?"

Mr. SPRIGGS. The committee thought that the age of 16 years was a proper age to fix.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think in all legislation of this character it is usual to prohibit the sale to minors.

Mr. SPRIGGS. We intended that the provisions of the bill should be pretty rigid, and it was thought a boy under the age of 16 years should not be permitted to frequent such places.

Mr. DINGLEY. I merely wanted to call the attention of the committee to the matter.

Mr. HAMMOND. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to state why it is proposed to strike out the provision as to keeping open these places on Sunday.

Mr. SPRIGGS. It is provided by an amendment in a previous part of the section that it shall not be lawful to keep open these places or to openly prosecute any trade or business during Sundays with the exceptions mentioned. That made the provision in this part of the section unnecessary.

Mr. HAMMOND. I asked the question merely for information, as some gentlemen did not seem to understand why it was proposed to strike out those words.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. In line 3 of the section the words "during the Sabbath day" are stricken out.

Mr. HAMMOND. But then there are substituted for those the words "openly prosecute any trade or business during Sundays." I thought myself it was all right. But I asked the question in order that it might be distinctly understood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment proposed by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6, strike out the word "minor" and insert the word "person."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment proposed by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8, after the word "violation," strike out the words "of any provision."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMMOND. The committee's amendments having been disposed of, I now offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "business" in line 7 insert the words "or drink intoxicating liquors therein."

In line 8 strike out the word "gains" and insert the word "games."

Mr. HAMMOND. It is clear the word "gains" in line 8 is a typographical error; it should be "games." As the section now stands reported by the committee a minor is forbidden to frequent any of the places of business named, including liquor saloons, and he is forbidden to engage in any of the games at any time; he is not forbidden to drink intoxicating liquors therein. A man may not allow a minor to play billiards, bagatelle, or Jenny Lind under this statute, but he could allow him to drink intoxicating liquors, unless he allows him to do it so much as to make him a frequenter of his place. I think the intention of the committee is to take temptation away from minors entirely, and if they are prevented from playing games they should be prevented also from drinking intoxicating liquors in a saloon.

The amendments proposed by Mr. HAMMOND were agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to further amend by striking out in the sixth line the word "sixteen" and inserting the word "eighteen," so that it will read "under the age of eighteen years."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I move to amend by striking out the word "openly" in the third line, so that it will read:

That it shall not be lawful for any person to keep open any place of business for the sale of any article or prosecute any trade or business during Sundays, &c.

Mr. SPRIGGS. We will accept that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 18, as follows:

SEC. 18. That it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to destroy, injure, disfigure, or place any filth upon any property, public or private, real or personal, within the District of Columbia, nor in any case to write, mark, or print obscene or indecent words, language, or figures thereon, nor, without the consent of the owner or custodian, to write, mark, draw, or paint any other words, sign, or figure, or place any ashes or rubbish thereon; and for any willful violation of any provision of this section the person so offending shall be punished by a fine of not less than $5.

The committee proposed to amend by striking out in line 1 the words "or persons" and insert "without consent of the owner."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 19, as follows:

SEC. 19. That it shall not be lawful for any person to ride or drive any horse, mule, or other animal of the horse kind in or on any street, avenue, alley, public road, or reservation of this District in any reckless or careless manner, or to make trial of speed between such animals, or to drive such animals at a rate of speed faster than eight miles per hour within the cities of Washington and Georgetown; and any person violating any provision of this section shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10 for each offense.

No amendment offered.

The Clerk read section 20, as follows:

SEC. 20. That any person who shall keep or store in any one building or place within the thickly populated districts of the city of Washington or Georgetown any coal-oil, petroleum, burning-fluid, or other highly inflammable substance, in any quantity in excess of that designated by the commissioners of the District, and which shall in the aggregate in no case exceed five hundred gallons, shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $100 for each and every day such excess shall continue.

Mr. HAMMOND. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill who is to be the judge of what is a thickly populated district of the city of Washington or Georgetown? Is that to be subject to the discretion of the commissioners?

Mr. SPRIGGS. I think so. You can hardly regulate this matter unless you put it entirely under the control of the commissioners.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is what I was about to suggest. The provision of the section as it stands is indefinite. A man might say that he could keep five hundred gallons in his store because it was not in a thickly settled district, while another might think it was a thickly populated district. That ought not to be uncertain. The places and the quantities ought to be designated by the commissioners.

For instance, the commissioners should say that these articles shall not be kept in larger quantities than so and so within certain boundaries, to be indicated by them, just as you have limits fixed for fire districts.

Mr. BARBOUR. The gentleman can move such amendment as he thinks necessary.

Mr. HAMMOND. Before moving any amendment, I desire to get the opinion of the committee upon the subject.

Mr. WELLER. I wish to inquire of the members of the Committee of the District of Columbia if they will not accept as an amendment "not less than 150° fire test" for coal-oil and illuminating-oil?

Mr. BARBOUR. We had better leave that to the commissioners of the District; they have charge of the safety of the city.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. WELLER. Then will the committee accept "120° fire test?"

Mr. BARBOUR. That is not necessary.

Section 21 was read, as follows:

That every person who shall extinguish or cause to be extinguished any of the public gas-lamps without proper authority, or before the time designated by law, shall be subject to fine not to exceed $25, and in default of payment be committed to the work-house.

No amendment was offered.

Section 22 was read, as follows:

That the commissioners shall have power to locate the places where hacks, newsboys, boot-blacks, and licensed venders on streets and public places shall stand, and change them as often as the public interests require, and to make all necessary regulations governing the same and the manner of conducting such business; and any person violating any regulation lawfully made in pursuance of this power shall be subject to a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $100.

The Committee on the District of Columbia recommend an amendment, to insert after the word "business," in line 6, the following:

And to make needful regulations for the orderly disposition of carriages or other vehicles assembled on streets or public places, and to require vehicles upon the most frequented streets and avenues to pass along on the right side; to prohibit droves of animals upon most-frequented streets; to prohibit the deposit upon sidewalks of fruit, or any part thereof, or other substance that might cause injury to pedestrians; to regulate or prohibit loud noises with horns, gongs, or other instruments, or loud cries, upon streets or public places; and to prohibit the use of any fireworks or explosives within the thickly populated portions of the District, such regulations to take effect ten days after public notice thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Section 23 was read, as follows:

That section 354 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, amended so far as to authorize the commissioners of said District to appoint, at their discretion, persons as policemen and watchmen other than those who have served in the Army or Navy of the United States.

No amendment was offered.

Section 24 was read, as follows:

That in place of section 1060 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the District of Columbia, the following be inserted:

"The clerk and his deputy shall have power to administer oaths and affirmations."

No amendment was offered.

Section 25 was read, as follows:

That in all prosecutions in the police court by information in the name of the District of Columbia the said information shall be filed and signed by the attorney for the District, or either of his assistants, or any authorized representative, who are hereby authorized to administer oaths or affirmations relating thereto. That the supreme court of said District shall have power to enforce its sentences by fine or imprisonment, or both, in all cases appealed from the judgment of said police court; and that the justice holding the special term of the supreme court of said District for the trial of causes appealed from the said police court may, in his discretion, order any issue of law in such causes to be heard in the first instance at a general term of the said supreme court; and sections 1042 and 5296 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to any person convicted by any court of the District of Columbia.

The committee recommend that in lines 2 and 3 the word "information" be stricken out and the words "complaint on oath" inserted.

Also to strike out the words:

And sections 1042 and 5296 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to any person convicted by any court of the District of Columbia.

The amendments were agreed to.

Section 26 was read, as follows:

That all processes issuing from the police court, and subpœnas from the criminal court, in behalf of the District of Columbia, excepting the process of commitment to jail, may issue to the major of police and be served by any policeman.

The committee recommend that the section be amended by adding the following:

And all fines, penalties, forfeitures, and costs imposed or taxed by the police court shall be collected by the major of police and paid over to the District.

The amendment was agreed to.

Section 27 was read, as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for farmers, their assistants, or other persons, to offer at retail any meats, vegetables, or other farm products within one square of any market-house in this city, other than between the hours of 4 o'clock a. m. and 12 o'clock m., under a penalty for each and every offense of not less than five nor more than ten dollars.

The committee recommend that section 27 be stricken from the bill.

The recommendation of the committee was adopted; and the section was stricken from the bill.

Section 28 was read, as follows:

That all existing regulations, ordinances, and rules in relation to hucksters; sales by dry measure; sales of bread, ice, charcoal, milk, lime, oysters, wheat, corn, and grain of all kinds; hay, straw, fodder, and coal; sealers of weights and measures; gaugers and inspectors of spirituous liquors; inspectors of flour and salted provisions; and inspectors and measurers of wood and lumber may be changed or modified by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, upon public notice being given thirty days previous.

The committee recommend that the section be stricken from the bill.

The recommendation of the committee was agreed to; and the section was stricken from the bill.

Section 29 was read, as follows:

That any dog, whether licensed or not, found in any market-house, may be seized, impounded, and disposed of as though unlicensed: Provided, That he shall not be finally disposed of until three days after such seizure.

No amendment was offered.

Section 30 was read, as follows:

That when snow has remained for six hours after a snow-storm upon any of the sidewalks in the cities of Washington and Georgetown such sidewalks may be cleaned by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the expense thereof, duly certified by the commissioners, but not exceeding for each removal 2 cents per lineal foot of such sidewalk, shall immediately be assessed against such property and be collected as other realty taxes: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed to exempt any property-owner or his agent from the effect of any law or laws imposing fine and penalty upon owners, tenants, occupants, or agents for neglecting to clean sidewalks.

The Committee on the District of Columbia recommend that the section be amended by inserting after the words "District of Columbia," in line 4, the words "as they deem necessary;" in line 8 strike out the words "such property" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the lot bordered by the sidewalk so cleaned, which assessment shall be a lien and tax upon such adjacent lot whether exempt from other taxation or not;" also in line 14, after the words "fine and penalty," insert the words "or civil damages;" also add to the section the following: "Provided further, That sidewalks bordering upon lots owned by the United States or District of Columbia shall be kept clear of snow by the custodians of such lots, and the expense thereof paid out of any appropriation applicable thereto."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I move as an additional section that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all laws or parts of laws imposing a tax, penalty, or license upon any commercial traveler or travelers, manufacturers or their agents, who sell by sample in the District of Columbia, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRIGGS. It seems to me that it is new legislation and not germane to the bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. I desire to say that we have an independent special bill of that character now pending before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I think we had better wait until the committee report that bill.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I hope the gentleman from New York who has charge of this bill [Mr. SPRIGGS] will withdraw his point of order. This is a bill relating to police regulations in the District of Columbia. I submit that the law which now imposes a license upon commercial travelers in this District is a police regulation.

Mr. SPRIGGS. No; it is a matter of revenue.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. It is a matter of revenue; but do you not depend upon the proper officers of the District to enforce that law? I do not know whether there is any bill on this subject pending before the Committee on the District of Columbia or not; if so, I have not seen it. I have simply drawn this amendment in my own words to apply strictly and solely to the District of Columbia. Whether or not any bill embodying this amendment is before any committee I am not informed, except that the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia [Mr. BARBOUR] tells me that a bill relating to this subject was introduced this morning. If the gentleman will waive his point of order a moment I should like to speak upon my proposition.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I can not do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that he is aware that a general bill is pending as to commercial travelers, not limited to the District of Columbia but applicable to all the United States. The Chair himself has introduced such a bill, but that would not apply to this case.

Mr. SPRIGGS. There is a general license bill in reference to the District of Columbia now pending before that committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not decide that point of order without the bill before him.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I make the other point of order, that the proposed amendment is not germane to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would overrule that point of order. This is a bill "relating to police regulations in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes." The Chair is perfectly aware that under the law as it now exists commercial travelers are subject to license in the District of Columbia, and to police regulations for the collection of such license.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I can send and get the bill if the Chair desires.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like to see the bill.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I understand the point of order has been overruled.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One point of order—that raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPRIGGS]—has been overruled, but the point raised by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] is in abeyance, the Chair reserving his decision until the production of the bill upon which the point is based.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am aware that a bill to regulate the commerce between the States, pertaining to commercial travelers, has been reported favorably to this House from the Committee on Manufactures. I hope it will be pressed at every opportunity and become a law. I ask to present the bill as reported, together with the report made thereon, as a matter of information:

A bill to regulate the commerce between the States pertaining to commercial travelers.

Whereas several of the States of the United States have imposed taxes or licenses of various kinds upon commercial travelers traveling from another State, notwithstanding the said laws have been pronounced unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States; and

Whereas sundry States of the United States continue to arrest and fine and annoy in various ways the aforesaid commercial travelers selling by sample goods, wares, and merchandise of various kinds, in the face of the aforementioned decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any person, acting in an individual capacity or as an officer of a State or municipal corporation, interfering in any way with any commercial traveler selling by sample goods, wares, and merchandise of any kind, traveling from another State other than the one in which said traveler lives or in which the manufacturer or merchant does business for which said traveler is acting, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be liable to indictment before the United States grand jury in the district in which the interference or assault occurs; and, if convicted, the said person or persons shall be liable to pay a fine not exceeding $100 and costs, or to be imprisoned three months in the county jail, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The Committee on Manufactures, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 986) to regulate the commerce between the States pertaining to commercial travelers, report back the same with the recommendation that it do pass, and beg leave to make the following report:

The committee find that the laws of several of the States impose a tax upon commercial travelers, which in effect is a tax upon the people of other States seeking to extend the trade and traffic between the States. The committee believe these laws are made to please the selfishness of local jobbers and unscrupulous informers—or "spotters," so called—and are not for the purpose of raising revenue for the States. That these tax laws of the States are in direct conflict with the Constitution of the United States the committee has no doubt.

The committee also find that several of the States, notwithstanding their laws have been pronounced unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, continue to enforce their fines, penalties, and taxes, relying upon the belief that the trouble and costs of redress through the courts will protect them from the law. As these cases, when carried to the Supreme Court, take three years of time and at least $1,000 in money to defend, it can be seen at once why business houses submit to the imposition.

Your committee is, therefore, of the opinion that Congressional action is necessary, and that this bill is a step in the right direction in order that the commerce between the States may not be restricted and the "citizens of the several States" debarred from the exercise of that freedom guaranteed them by the Constitution.

Your committee also believe that these several States imposing the beforementioned taxes are also obstructing free trade between the States, and preventing thereby that healthy competition so necessary for the protection and education of the masses as to their rights and privileges. Not only are these laws unconstitutional, but they are, in the judgment of the committee, inimical to the best interest of the consumers and the masses in these various localities.

Every enterprising wholesale house and manufacturing establishment in the United States, along with 200,000 commercial travelers, pray for the relief afforded in this bill, and for its passage at this session of Congress.

The amendment which I have offered aims to repeal an obnoxious section of existing law now in force in the District of Columbia—a section which is unworthy to stand as any part of the law by which the capital of our country is governed. Although I am a pretty strict protectionist when questions of international trade are considered, when commercial relations between the States or between the States and this District are brought in question I am a believer in the freest of free trade. There is now a law upon our statute-books which compels commercial travelers or owners or manufacturers coming into the District of Columbia to pay a license of $200 per year before they are at liberty to sell goods here by sample or otherwise.

The section of the bill referred to is as follows:

Commercial agents shall pay $200 annually. Every person whose business it is to sell or offer for sale, or solicit orders for the sale of goods, wares, or merchandise by sample, catalogue, or description, whether owner or agent, shall be regarded as a commercial agent.

This law is a restriction upon commerce; a selfish, narrow provision against enterprise and progress; a discrimination against every manufacturer or dealer of the country; a relic of the past, when conditions were entirely different from those existing now; an inheritance of the old blue laws, founded in selfishness and proscription, and has no place in a statute governing a great city like Washington, where it is to be supposed only good and just laws are made.

We owe it to ourselves, to our own dignity, to the people of the country to strike it out.

I am informed that the existing law is evaded in many cases in the most scandalous manner, and by the connivance of those who are supposed to enforce the obnoxious requirements. A strict construction of the law would give an immense revenue to the District, but the manner in which it is evaded makes it ridiculous and reduces the revenue far below the point which would be reached by a strict enforcement. There is almost an appearance of right in the evasion of such a law, and it is not to be wondered at that commercial travelers take advantage of any method to throw ridicule upon it, and escape the penalties. Commercial travelers desire to come to this capital freely, like other honest men, and to pursue their calling as unmolested as they would be in their own houses. It is right that they should. It is not right in any sense to impose such an unjust tax. It is not right to tempt any person to evade such a law, to compel gentlemen in pursuit of honest callings in order to escape such an unjust tax—unjust penalties, or arrest—to come to this city almost by stealth, like escaped criminals, fearing detection, registering under assumed names, cautiously inviting people to come to their rooms to examine samples. They feel more like thieves than gentlemen, and yet feel justified in evading the law.

In many cases arrangements are made with those who pretend to enforce the law by which for a small fee these agents are allowed certain privileges for a day or more. In some instances, as related by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], one agent will pay the fee, $200, and then act as the representative of a score or more of manufacturers, exacting a fee of $50 or $75 from each one, thereby making a considerable sum for himself. He feels justified in this by the nonsense of such a law, and he will show his ingenuity to nullify it. The principle of the thing is entirely wrong; in fact there is no principle in it, or underneath it. There are nearly two hundred thousand of these gentlemen, representing every manufacturing industry in the country. They are honorable, active, sensible men, they add largely to the enterprise of the different States in which their industries flourish, and we can do no more sensible act than to repeal now and here a bad custom which has already prevailed too long.

In the last Congress this House struck the section in question from a revision of the code, but the code did not become law. We also attached a repeal of the section to a tax bill, which also passed the Senate and was lost in conference between the two Houses.

I believe the sentiment of this House is, like the last, in favor of repeal, and I hope that no license bill or tax bill can become a law for this District which does not carry with it the repeal aimed at in the amendment I have offered.

During the debate in the last Congress the honorable gentleman who now occupies the chair [Mr. COX, of New York] made a gallant fight for this repeal, and presented the case fully to us, including facts, complaints, and methods of evasion. They are matters of record. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BREWER] is also familiar with this question, and, were he present, would unite with us to-day in urging this action. He is the author of the bill above quoted, which seeks to regulate the commerce between the States so far as relates to commercial travelers.

Public sentiment everywhere will sustain this repeal, and I know that all gentlemen who will consider the matter carefully and fairly will vote to strike out the obnoxious section of the law as it now stands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is now ready to rule on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], which is based upon the rule that—

> No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House.

The point of order has been made that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] is not in order under this rule because its substance is embraced in a bill introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] to regulate licenses, &c., in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. This bill, according to the ruling of previous occupants of the chair, is to be taken in its entirety.

Section 36 of this bill, to which the Chair is referred, provides for a tax on commercial agents. That is all there is in that section. The other section to which reference has been made is section 49, which provides for a tax on commission merchants, with an exceptional proviso. But neither of these provisions will justify the Chair in holding that the amendment proposes to incorporate in the pending bill the substance of another bill now before the House. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I hope that this amendment of my distinguished colleague [Mr. SKINNER] will not be adopted at this time, because I think it would be very hasty legislation. Whatever may be said against the propriety of imposing a tax of $200 on these persons who come here as commercial agents, my friend should take into consideration the fact which does not exist in his city or any city to which any of us belong—that every person engaged in business here pays taxes; so that if commercial agents are permitted to come here and sell goods without paying tax a discrimination is made in their favor.

Whether $200 is a proper amount of tax to be imposed is a question I am not prepared to discuss. For myself, whenever the question comes up properly, I am in favor of doing away with all sorts of taxes on business.

But the law exists here, and everybody engaged in business pays an annual tax. The merchant pays a tax.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. But is not that the case in every other town of the United States?

Mr. SPRIGGS. No, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. They do not begin to pay the taxes in Washington they pay in the city of New York.

Mr. SPRIGGS. They pay a license tax here, and they pay all the tax your merchants pay. But, Mr. Speaker, I am not opposing the amendment. I am not prepared to say what I should do on further consideration. It strikes me that it would be unjust to the people here who pay a license tax to allow these commercial travelers to come here and do business without the payment of any tax at all.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I wish to say to my colleague from New York that he must not forget the fact which exists, that the present license law here is not enforced.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Where?

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Here.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Oh, yes; it is.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. It is evaded every single day in the year.

Mr. SPRIGGS. If you are going to strike out all the laws in our statute-books which are not enforced, we should not have any penal laws.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. It is notorious in the District of Columbia this license tax is not enforced at all. I tell my colleague the effect of the law provided here for the District of Columbia will prevent a manufacturer from his own district or one from mine coming here and selling his wares unless he pays this District $200. I received a letter from a manufacturer in my own city in reference to taxes in certain other cities, and he said before he could send his agent to sell his machines here he had to remit $200 in payment of this tax.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Does your amendment apply to commercial travelers alone? I understand it does. Now, whatever tax is placed on the merchant he must pay, but, as we all know, the consumer pays it after all.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I would like to see a proper provision in the law compelling merchants in this city and all others to pay such license tax as is necessary for the support of the government here. It is notorious they do not pay the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, but that on the contrary the United States pays a certain proportion of them. I say, while the Government of the United States is so lavish in spending its money, expending millions of dollars in erecting public buildings in this city, that when we ask on behalf of our constituents they should be permitted to trade here it is the height of injustice to impose a special tax upon them which in effect amounts almost to prohibition.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I have but a few remarks to make. This is not a new question. It has been discussed in many of the States. Only a few years ago it was discussed in the Texas Legislature, and since then in the General Assembly of my own State. Wherever a law has been passed imposing this tax the courts have held it unconstitutional, so far as I know. It is said a similar tax is imposed upon the merchants of this city. If Congress deems it sound policy to impose a tax of that character on the merchants of the city, that is one thing, one, too, that does not meet my approbation. But it is entirely a different thing to impose a similar tax upon the commercial traveler. Does not every one know who pays the tax in the end? The drummer pays it to the city; his employer restores it to him, and adds the amount to the price of his goods, and then sells them to the merchants in this city, who in turn sell to the consumer with the tax and the profits added. So that in the end it is the consumer you tax, not the drummer. It is one of those vexatious obstructions to the freedom of commercial intercourse that should have no recognition in our codes. It induces frauds, deceit, evasions, and petty prosecutions, and in the end the burdens all fall on the consumer. The principle is wrong and its operation necessarily bad.

Mr. STEVENS. Then you are in favor of the amendment?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I am.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, more interest is felt perhaps in this amendment than gentlemen of the House will believe. My colleague said there were some 200,000 of these commercial travelers in the United States. They are a peculiar class of men and they do a peculiar class of work. They have hitherto been taxed in many of the States and by certain municipalities in the country, from New Orleans perhaps to Boston, but in nearly all the States recent legislation and recent municipal action have abrogated this tax against commercial travelers so that there only remains this and three or four other cities, and I think mostly in the South, which still place a particular discrimination against commercial travelers.

A bill is pending, of which this is a very small part, to abrogate all of these statutes in the States which discriminate against this class of people. I hope that bill will pass. It has been reported to this House. I think it has the sanction of the Committee on the Judiciary as well as the Committee on Manufactures. It has the sanction of the Supreme Court of the United States, which has already decided in several cases that these taxes are unconstitutional.

But, Mr. Speaker, when we come to this District, where our legislative power is paramount, we are met with a different state of affairs. These agents are taxed here an enormous price. There is no reason why we should not regulate this matter in the interest of liberal communications between all parts of the country. Men who come here to sell by sample should have the right to show their samples, instead of being compelled to pay $200 taxation for that privilege. And, sir, let me ask what is the practical operation of this system? Are gentlemen familiar with it? I will tell you what it is. A man comes down here and, as I proved before this House, a man comes here, or lives here, who may be in collusion with the authorities, as was once shown, and who takes out his license for $200. Then he is permitted to exhibit his samples. What does he do? I furnished the facts in reference to a similar case some time ago. He hires himself out to a dozen or twenty different commercial travelers who come here, who pay him $50, $60, or $75 each for the privilege of acting under his license. This individual, therefore, has the opportunity of making a speculation of a thousand dollars or so out of the process, and the local government is defrauded to that extent. And yet whenever a man undertakes to sell or show his samples of merchandise in this city, unless he has this license he is at once arrested and fined. Fifteen were taken up the other day and fined some $200 or more, and I believe imprisoned for a time. I think they were imprisoned. Fifteen men, men who came here in good faith, representing well known, respectable houses, were arrested and fined.

Mr. Speaker, there is a demand on the part of our people, on the part of our manufacturers from all parts of the country, from Chicago to New Orleans, from Boston to Baltimore, from New York to Pittsburgh, from all of the great manufacturing centers of this country, that this thing should be rectified. It was done in the last Congress, as I have said. It should be done now. The reason it did not pass the last Congress was because the tax bill failed between the House and Senate. Therefore it still remains as a provocation to parties trading in the District of Columbia. It is a restriction that should be at once removed.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a single word in support of the amendment of the gentleman from New York. I hope this House will accept the amendment. The method of transacting business of this character, as is well known to us all, has changed very much in recent years. Some years ago it was the custom of country merchants to go to wholesale dealers and to manufacturers to make their selections. That was the case until within the last few years. Now the process has changed and the manufacturer or the merchant sends out his agents, who having these samples exhibit them to the merchants and from which they can make their selections without cost to themselves. It is a great injustice to these men who are engaged in this business to compel them to pay $200 tax in this District. It is an injustice that this section should remain upon the statute-books; and in the name of these people, and in the name of the people of this country, of our worthy manufacturers and commercial men of all classes, I am in favor of the adoption of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment of Mr. SKINNER was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 26. That all violations of this act shall be prosecuted in the ~~police~~ cou upon information in the name of the District of Columbia.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment: Srike out the word "information" in the second line and insert the words "complaint on oath."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOLLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to return to the seventh section of the bill for the purpose of moving an amendment. It is to strike out all after the word "purchased" in the fifth line, being the following words:

And to search for and take into possession articles missing or stolen, without the formality of the writ of search-warrant, which search or seizure is hereby authorized.

I am not in favor, Mr. Speaker, of setting the example by Congress in the government of the District of Columbia of permitting any search or seizure to be made without the formality of a search-warrant, or to expose anybody to the spying of an official without he has a proper warrant or authority for so doing. Therefore I move to strike out these words.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio to return to the seventh section for the purpose of offering the amendment suggested?

There was no objection.

The question was taken; the House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 12.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I ask unanimous consent to return to section 16 for the purpose of adding some words which were omitted inadvertently when that section was under consideration, and which it was suggested should there be incorporated.

After the word "medicines," in line 5, I move to insert the words "ice dealers for delivering ice."

Mr. BARBOUR. I move a further amendment, to add "milk dealers."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If there be no further amendments the question is on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 231) providing for the distribution of the Congressional Globe; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 239) to fill vacancies existing in the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed the bill (H. R. 1319) to adjust the accounts of John B. Monteith, deceased.

TAXATION OF BANK SHARES.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 6629) taxing shares of incorporated banks in the District of Columbia as other personal property.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all the shares of any and all incorporated banks located in the District of Columbia shall be assessed and taxed in said District in the same manner and at the same rate as other moneyed capital therein, and shall be paid by the corporation issuing such shares, respectively.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF CHILDREN IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia the bill (S. 729) for the protection of children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

VACATION OF AN ALLEY.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 4994) to vacate an alley in square 234 in the city of Washington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia, in their discretion, are hereby authorized and empowered to convey to the owners of abutting lots the ground occupied by the alley running east and west in square 234, between lots 101, 102, of 16, of 15, of 14, 115, 116, 117, 118, and 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, and to vacate and close up said alley: Provided, That said owners shall appropriate for public use, as an alley, an area of ground in said square equal to that in the alley to be conveyed as herein authorized.

Mr. SHELLEY. The parties owning this property own the property on both sides of the alley. It affects no one but the owners of the property there, and they are all in favor of closing up the alley and placing it at another point. And there is no objection to it on the part of the commissioners.

Mr. COBB. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama whether he has consulted the public opinion in that neighborhood as to closing up this alley. It may be a serious matter to close up an alley where the squares are so large as they usually are in this city; and I know very often such things are done for the benefit of private interests to the great inconvenience of public interests.

Mr. SHELLEY. The property is owned by the Washington and Georgetown Street Railroad Company. They own the entire block. It is a matter of decided convenience to them to have the alley closed up where it now is, the same amount of ground being opened at another point in the block.

Mr. COBB. It may be a very important matter to the public that that alley should be kept open. It may be for the interest of certain parties to close it, and at the same time the public interests might be injured.

Mr. SHELLEY. The alley is not much used, and it is proposed that an equal amount of ground shall be appropriated for public use as an alley in another part of the square.

Mr. COBB. Where is this square?

Mr. SHELLEY. Where the company have their stables.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. COBB. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 1.

So (further count not being called for) the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SAINT LUKE'S PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4652) for the relief of Saint Luke's Protestant Episcopal church, in the District of Columbia, and that the same be considered in the House.

Mr. WELLER. Reserving the right to object, I desire to inquire as to the nature of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which objections, if there be any, will be in order. The motion to discharge the Committee of the Whole can only be made by unanimous consent.

The bill was read.

Mr. WELLER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa objects to discharging the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. TOWNSHEND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call up the bill H. R. 4652.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4652) for the relief of Saint Luke's Protestant Episcopal church, in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act a certain piece of land situated in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, known as lots 38, 39, 40, and 41, in square 194 of the plan of that city, and occupied by the stone church known as Saint Luke's Protestant Episcopal church, and all the buildings, grounds, and property appurtenant thereto and used in connection therewith, in the District of Columbia, shall be exempt from any and all taxes or assessments, national, municipal, or county; and all taxes, together with the interest and penalties, now due and unpaid upon said property, shall be, and they are hereby, remitted.

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPRIGGS] who reported this bill.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I will briefly explain the purpose of this bill and why the committee recommend its passage. This society purchased these lots in 1875 for the purpose of building thereon a church edifice. The society was poor and unable at once to proceed with the building of the church, but laid the foundation in 1876, and as rapidly as they could obtain means proceeded with the work of construction, and finished the building in 1880, since which time it has been in actual use and occupation by them as a church.

The commissioners of the District of Columbia, to whom application was made for its relief, upon what they deem authority held that property exempt under a general provision must be "strictly in use" for the purpose to which the exemption applies, and refused to relieve the society from taxes levied upon the lots after their purchase and before the church was completed and ready for occupation, holding that said property was not "strictly in use" until the church was completed.

The Committee on the District of Columbia differ with the commissioners in their construction, and think that the property in question has been in actual use by the society for the purpose for which it was purchased from the date of the purchase, although the building was not immediately erected. It was erected, however, as soon as the society could obtain means for the purpose. The society was poor and unable to complete the building at once. There is no pretense that the property was not purchased by the society in good faith for the purpose of building a church thereon, nor is there any pretense that they did not proceed to erect a church as rapidly as they could, and as fast as means could be obtained for the purpose. The committee think this is a case which commends itself to the consideration of the House.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPRIGGS. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is not all other church property in the District exempt from taxation?

Mr. SPRIGGS. It is.

Mr. HAMMOND. And has this property been used since its purchase for any other purpose?

Mr. SPRIGGS. For no other purpose. The church edifice was constructed as rapidly as it could be, and since its completion it has been occupied solely for church purposes.

Mr. WELLER. I do not care to discuss at this time the propriety of taxing church property, for I do not consider that that question is involved in the bill under consideration. By the way, I will state that I have been unable to secure a report on this bill, having requested one of the pages to obtain one for me, and he informs me there is none to be had. As I understand the bill, it is to exempt this property from the taxes levied upon it prior to its purchase.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Oh, no.

Mr. HAMMOND. Since its purchase.

Mr. SPRIGGS. The taxes have all been paid upon it up to the time of its purchase by this church society. This bill only proposes to exempt the property from taxes which have accrued since the purchase by the society and before the church edifice was erected.

Mr. WELLER. Is church property taxed in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SPRIGGS. Certainly not.

Mr. WELLER. Then how is it that this property was taxed?

Mr. SPRIGGS. Because the commissioners of the District held that under a strict construction of the law this property was not in use for church purposes until the church edifice upon it had been completed. The Committee on the District of Columbia hold, on the other hand, that the property has been used for church purposes from the time the society made the purchase, the purchase having been made by them in good faith for the purpose of building a church, and the property not having been used for any other purpose. The law, we think, should be so construed as to relieve the society from taxation upon this property from the time of the purchase.

Mr. WELLER. It was purchased for church purposes exclusively?

Mr. SPRIGGS. Certainly.

Mr. WELLER. And these taxes have all accrued since the date of the purchase?

Mr. SPRIGGS. Since the date of the purchase; there is no question about that. This church is needy and poor.

Mr. WELLER. With the explanation of the gentleman, who is a member of the committee, I shall make no further opposition to the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN CONNOLLY.

Mr. BARBOUR. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 2858) for the relief of John Connolly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to refund to John Connolly, of the city of Washington, the sum of $91.80, the amount paid in error by him as administrator of the estate of one James Barwood, deceased, to the District of Columbia, for general taxes for the years ending June 30, 1877, and June 30, 1878, respectively, on certain real estate in the city of Washington, theretofore owned by said Barwood, but which had escheated to the United States upon his death, prior to the assessment of the said taxes.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WORTHINGTON] for any statement he may desire to make.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I ask the Clerk to read the report accompanying the bill.

The Clerk read the report (made by Mr. WORTHINGTON) as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2858) for the relief of John Connolly, submit the following report:

Similar bills were introduced and favorably reported to the Forty-sixth Congress and also to the Forty-seventh Congress, but were not acted upon.

The facts of the case appear to be as follows:

It appears from record evidence taken from the files of the supreme court of the District of Columbia that one James Barwood, a British subject by birth, but for many years a naturalized citizen of the United States, domiciled in the District of Columbia, died in said District on the 28th day of March, 1876, seized and possessed of divers lots and parcels of land in the city of Washington, D. C., and leaving no heirs of inheritable blood. John Connolly was duly appointed by the supreme court of the District of Columbia administrator of the estate of the deceased Barwood, and when general taxes for the years 1877 and 1878 were assessed by the District of Columbia against Barwood's real estate, the administrator paid them, the aggregate amount being $91.80.

Certain creditors of the deceased Barwood having filed their bill in equity in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, to subject the said realty of the deceased to the payment of his debts (his personal property being insufficient to pay all claims), that court, on the 9th day of July, 1878, decreed that the title to the realty became vested by escheat in the United States upon the death of said Barwood on the 28th of March, 1876, subject, however, to the payment of all just claims against Barwood and all liens against the property subsisting at the time of Barwood's death. As, however, the general taxes for the years 1877 and 1878 were not assessed against the property until after Barwood's death and until after his title to the property had vested in the United States (when of course the property was not liable to taxation), to permit Connolly to reimburse himself for this erroneous payment of tax out of the proceeds of the sale of the realty, which sale was made by trustees under the direction of the court (the net balance of proceeds, after paying all lawful demands, being paid over to the United States), the commissioners of the District of Columbia now decline to refund the taxes so erroneously paid on property which was not taxable.

Your committee are of the opinion that the said taxes, amounting to $91.50, should be refunded, and report back the bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move the committee now rise and report its action to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNSHEND reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar had had under consideration the following bills, and directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment and recommend that they be passed:

A bill (H. R. 4652) for the relief of Saint Luke's Protestant Episcopal church, in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 2858) for the relief of John Connolly.

SAINT LUKE'S PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the following bill, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 4652) for the relief of Saint Luke's Protestant Episcopal church, in the District of Columbia.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to inquire whether this bill was accompanied by a report from the committee.

Mr. SPRIGGS. It was.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. A printed report?

Mr. SPRIGGS. Yes, sir.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN CONNOLLY.

The bill (H. R. 2858) for the relief of John Connolly (being the next District of Columbia bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar) was taken up, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC.

Mr. BARBOUR. I ask that the bill (S. 1477) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, D. C., be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read twice and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARBOUR. As the Committee on the District of Columbia has now concluded all its business in readiness to be presented, I move that the House adjourn.

Pending the motion to adjourn, the following business was transacted by unanimous consent:

EXTRADITION OF CRIMINALS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, in answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 6th of February last, a communication from the Secretary of State respecting the extradition of criminals under the treaty of 1842 with Great Britain.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, May 12, 1884.

TESTIMONIAL TO BRITISH CONSUL AT CHIN KIANG.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State transmitting a draught of a resolution providing for the presentation of a testimonial to Mr. E. L. Oxenham, British consul at Chin Kiang, in acknowledgment of services rendered the United States.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, May 12, 1884.

JACKSON BARRACKS, LOUISIANA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Quartermaster-General and asking an appropriation of $20,088.94 for repairs, &c., at Jackson Barracks; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WINANS, of Wisconsin, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. ELLIOTT, for five days.

To Mr. SPRIGGS, for ten days from the 14th instant, on account of important professional business.

To Mr. ROWELL, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BUCKNER, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. CLARDY, for ten days.

TARIFF ON FOOD.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7006) to abolish tariff taxes on articles of food; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN W. MORGAN.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7007) for the relief of John W. Morgan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MAILING OF MARKED PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York, by unanimous consent, reported back with amendments from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads the bill (H. R. 6739) to permit publishers to send marked copies of their publications at second-class rates; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BARBOUR that the House adjourn, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 67, noes 25; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 13, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter of the Quartermaster-General and accompanying estimate for repairs, &c., at Jackson Barracks, Louisiana, with recommendation that the amount named, $20,088.94, may be appropriated at the present session of Congress; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a memorial of citizens of Canajoharie, N. Y.; a memorial of citizens of Gloversville, N. Y.; a memorial of citizens of McGrawville, N. Y.; a memorial of citizens of Berkshire, N. Y., and a memorial of citizens of Little Falls, N. Y., remonstrating against the establishment of a governmental monopoly of the telegraph business; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I present a petition which I will take the liberty of reading. It is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, merchants, ship-owners, and others interested in the commercial prosperity of the port of New York, respectfully represent:

That the condition of the principal entrance to this port, as indicated by the frequent striking of vessels of large draught on Sandy Hook bar for many months past, and lately demonstrated by careful soundings made on said bar, has become a matter of anxious concern, involving the welfare of our city, and the existence of the vast interests centering here.

The soundings lately made show that the natural action by which the channel had been deepened to a maximum of twenty-five feet at low water has been reversed, and a shoaling has now set in by which the depth has been seriously decreased. While this process of filling the channel has been going on, the commercial necessity of the time has compelled the building of ships larger and of greater draught in order to meet the demand for cheaper and quicker transportation, and if the port of New York can not receive them its commercial supremacy is seriously impaired.

We therefore respectfully request that your honorable bodies will make such suitable and ample provision for the deepening and improvement of the approaches to this port as the case requires.

This petition is signed by a very large number of the most prominent shipping merchants and importers of the city of New York, and also by nearly all the marine underwriters of the same city. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. In connection with this same matter I present a preamble and resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, which reads as follows:

At the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce held May 1, 1884, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas the memorial to Congress of the merchants, ship-owners, and others interested in the commercial prosperity of the port of New York, praying for the improvement of Sandy Hook Bar, has been formally approved by the Legislatures of New York and New Jersey, respectively:

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York hereby approves the said memorial, and that the standing committee on the harbor and shipping be authorized and empowered to adopt such measures as they may deem suitable and proper to promote the immediate passage by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of a law making provision for deepening and improving the approaches to this port.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution, authenticated by the seal of the chamber and by the signatures of its officers, be transmitted to the President of the United States and to both Houses of Congress.

The resolutions are signed by the president and secretary of the Chamber of Commerce. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I present a memorial of several citizens of East Marshfield, Mass., remonstrating against the passage of any law that shall take away from existing telegraph companies what the memorial calls "the property of individuals who have embarked in legitimate enterprise to provide ample facilities for the public accommodation." I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I also present a petition of citizens of Wellington, Kans., praying that justice be done the Nez Percé Indians. As the Indian appropriation bill now before the Senate has a provision for that purpose, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I present a memorial of a large number of business men of Provincetown, Mass., who, I judge from their names and the statement of the occupation which is annexed to each name, are the persons in that town principally using the telegraph, in which they "remonstrate against the enactment of any measure relating to the telegraph which shall increase the number of public officials or establish a governmental monopoly of the telegraph business," stating that they "believe the interests of the people will be better conserved by leaving this branch of commercial business free to the competition of private enterprise." I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I present a memorial of A. P. Slade and some 20 others, residents of Somerset, in the State of Massachusetts, of the same character, which I move be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a memorial of a large number of residents of Marietta, Ohio, many of whom I know, and who seem to be the leading business men of the city, similar in character to the memorials just presented by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], remonstrating against the enactment of any measure relating to telegraphs which shall increase the number of public officials or establish a Government monopoly of the telegraph business. I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition of a number of citizens, calling themselves the pioneer or old citizens of the Pacific coast, now in the Atlantic States, some of whom are in the military and naval service of the United States, all of whom were in California during the early settlement of that State, respectfully requesting that favorable consideration be given the bill authorizing the Government to retire General John C. Frémont as a major-general in the Army of the United States, or some similar measure of that kind, setting out fully the grounds of their prayer. This petition is signed by a large number of officers of the Army and other distinguished citizens formerly of California. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the Board of Trade and Transportation of Cincinnati, Ohio, in favor of the passage of the so-called shipping bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SEWELL presented a petition of the citizens of New Jersey, praying that the Nez Percé Indians be restored to their reservation in Idaho; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present the petition of John McNaughton, of Lawrence County, Ohio, setting forth that there is due him a certain sum of money from the United States as pay and emoluments of his rank as second lieutenant for a certain period in the volunteer Army of the United States, and praying that he be paid the same. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I present a petition numerously signed by citizens of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and Iowa, deploring the curse of the liquor traffic in the United States, and petitioning Congress to enact a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic beverages within the District of Columbia. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, which has the subject now under consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented two affidavits to accompany the bill (S. 1613) granting a pension to Columbus C. Kerr; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1406) for the relief of Simon Severe, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Peter J. Reuss, late surgeon of the Seventh Regiment New York Volunteers, praying for an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2129) to provide for the erection of necessary buildings upon the Government reservation at West Point, New York, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1781) to provide for the sale of the Kickapoo diminished reservation, in Kansas, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 581) to define the routes of steam railroads in the city of Washington, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1530) for the relief of the estate of John Cook, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2003) to correct the military record of William S. Smith, of Tennessee, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BLAIR. By direction of the Committee on Pensions, I report the bill (H. R. 4682) granting a pension to Ward B. Burnett adversely, and I ask that it be placed on the Calendar. I also present the views of the minority of the committee in behalf of myself favoring the passage of the bill. I make the report by direction of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the majority of the committee, and the views of the minority will be printed.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3669) granting a pension to Robert M. Flack, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1171) for the relief of Robert M. Flack, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. 1114) granting an increase of pension to William Shannon, to report it adversely. The committee have re-examined the case, and see no reason for changing their views. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4706) for the relief of Charlotte Day, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1954) making an appropriation to pay the expenses of a military expedition for the exploration of the Territory of Alaska, reported it with amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 369) for the relief of John F. Bair, to report it back and ask to be discharged, and that it lie on the table. The Secretary of War has already considered and acted upon the case.

The committee were discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 315) granting a pension to William Reinhardt; and

A bill (H. R. 1076) granting a pension to Miles B. Farlin.

UNVEILING OF MARSHALL STATUE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Joint Committee on the Library to report the proceedings had under the order of the two Houses of Congress in respect to the statue to the memory of Chief-Justice Marshall, and to accompany it with a resolution for the printing of extra copies of the proceedings, which I suppose will be referred to the Committee on Printing in the ordinary way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution reported by the Senator from Ohio will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 10,000 extra copies of the report of the Joint Committee on the Library respecting the erection of a statue to John Marshall, late Chief-Justice of the United States, 3,000 for the use of the Senate and 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator from Ohio if that includes an engraved likeness of the statue of Chief-Justice Marshall?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it includes nothing but the proceedings that were had on Saturday.

Mr. MAXEY. I should be glad if it did include that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know whether that would be possible without sending to private parties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing, and the report placed on file.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1883, have instructed me to report it favorably and without amendment. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1883 be printed, and that there be printed 10,000 extra copies, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and 500 for sale by the Public Printer under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereto thereon added, the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing.

GENERAL ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Mr. LOGAN. I am directed by the Committe on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2169) to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General of the Army of the United States, upon the retired-list of the Army, to report it favorably and without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not see any particular objection to putting the bill upon its passage. It seems to me that there will be no objection to it under present circumstances, and I would be very glad to have it acted upon at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President of the United States, in recognition of the eminent public services of Ulysses S. Grant, late General of the Army, to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint him a General on the retired-list of the Army, with the rank and full pay of General of the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEXICAN WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to give notice that when the bill (H. R. 5667) granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes, is taken up for consideration I shall offer an amendment to that bill to strike out lines 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25 of section 1, being the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions. I also give notice that I shall move, when the bill comes up, to reinstate lines 2 and 3 of section 6, which have been amended by the Senate committee. I give this notice to the committee so that they may look into the matter. I am very much in hope that they will agree to strike those propositions out of the bill. I give the notice merely for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to these two points that I find in the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. What are the propositions? Please state them.

Mr. LOGAN. The principal amendment is that proposed by the Senate Committee on Pensions which allows no one to have a pension except those who are unable to make a living, that is to make them all paupers, and put them on the pension-list provided they are paupers. I propose to strike that out if a majority of the Senate will agree with me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I give notice to the Senate that on this day week, next Tuesday, I shall move to take up the bill to pension the soldiers of the Mexican war, and I hope the friends of that measure will all be on hand on that day.

Mr. VOORHEES. What day does the Senator name?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Next Tuesday, this day week.

Mr. VOORHEES. At what hour?

Mr. WILLIAMS. At 2 o'clock.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2204) for the relief of Nancy B. Leach; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2205) for the relief of Mrs. Rebecca Adams, widow of John L. Adams, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2206) providing for the sale of saline lands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, introduced a bill (S. 2207) correcting the pension of Second Lieut. G. W. Graham, Company A, One hundred and forty-fourth Regiment, New York Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LAPHAM introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 86) to furnish copies of certain military records to the State of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MAXEY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 87) providing for an engraving of the statue of Chief-Justice Marshall, to accompany the report of the proceedings on the unveiling of said statue; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. LAPHAM, it was Ordered, That the papers on file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, including the resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York recommending the payment to that State of the amounts proposed in Senate bill No. 470, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSENGER TO SECRETARY OF THE SENATE.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger, who shall be paid, out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $720 per annum.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3448) relating to police regulations in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 4652) for the relief of Saint Luke's Protestant Episcopal church, in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 2858) for the relief of John Connolly.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. SLATER. I ask the Senate to excuse me from further service upon the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks to be excused from further service upon the Committee on Commerce. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator is excused.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask unanimous consent that the vacancy made by the declination of the Senator from Oregon be filled by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the vacancy occasioned by the retirement of the Senator from Oregon from the Committee on Commerce be filled by the Chair. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY] to be a member of the Committee on Commerce, in place of the Senator from Oregon, excused.

LANDING OF RALEIGH'S COLONY.

Mr. VANCE. I gave notice yesterday that I should ask unanimous consent this morning to call up the joint resolution (S. R. 45) to provide for the commemoration of the landing of Sir Walter Raleigh's colony on Roanoke Island, North Carolina, in 1584.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Senate now take up for consideration, in order that he may submit some remarks thereon, the joint resolution indicated by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate. Does the Senator from North Carolina desire to have the joint resolution read?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas the first landing and settlement of any people of the Anglo-Saxon race upon the shores of the United States occurred on or about the 4th day of July, 1584 (old style), at Roanoke Island, in the State of North Carolina, by a company of Englishmen sent out by Sir Walter Raleigh, under the command of Captains Phillip Amadas and Arthur Barlow; and

Whereas it is meet and proper that this remarkable event in the history of our race upon this continent should be fitly commemorated, and honor done to the names of those whose enterprise and courage achieved it: Therefore,

Resolved, &c., That a joint select committee to consist of three Senators and five Representatives, to be selected by the presiding officers of the two bodies, respectively, is hereby appointed to prepare a design and arrange for the erection of a suitable monument or column at or near the spot where Raleigh's first expedition landed, on Roanoke Island, and to secure sufficient ground therefor, and to cause to be placed on said monument such inscriptions as will properly commemorate the event and honor those who planned and executed it.

SEC. 2. That for this purpose the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior; and the corner-stone of said monument or column shall be laid on the 4th day of July, 1884, in the presence of the said joint committee, the governors of Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina (the States which constitute the "Virginia" of the first settlers), and such officers of the Executive Departments as the President may see proper to designate.

SEC. 3. That on the request of the Secretary of the Interior any officer of the Army or Navy may be detailed for superintending or directing the work of erecting said monument; but not more than $2,000 of the sum herein appropriated may be used in defraying the actual expenses of the persons herein designated to witness the ceremonies of laying the corner-stone of said monument.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, the 4th day of July, 1584, was the midst of an age of the most remarkable activity which Europe has known since the revival of learning. Every element of its society was aroused. The germs of modern civilization were sprouting and taking root in all soils. Says the historian Green:

The sphere of human interest was widened, as it had never been widened before or since, by the revelation of a new heaven and a new earth. It was only in the later years of the sixteenth century that the discoveries of Copernicus were brought home to the intelligence of the world by Kepler and Galileo, or that the daring of the buccaneers broke through the veil which the greed of Spain had drawn across the New World of Columbus. Hardly inferior to these revelations as a source of poetic impulse was the sudden and picturesque way in which the various races of the world were brought face to face with one another through the universal passion for foreign travel. While the red tribes of the West were described by Amerigo Vespucci, and the strange civilization of Mexico and Peru disclosed by Cortez and Pizarro, the voyages of the Portuguese threw open the older splendors of the East, and the story of India and China was told for the first time to Christendom by Maffei and Mendoza.

The invention of printing had extended learning beyond the confines of the cloister, and the Reformation had greatly stimulated the spirit of inquiry and mental unrest. In addition to these causes of intellectual motion the discovery of America had opened a field of adventure to the spirit of enterprise such as it had not seen since the westward migration of the Aryan tribes. Stories of inexhaustible wealth to be found in the mines and forests of the New World fired alike the cupidity and the ambition of the nations.

The fleets of all were upon the seas. Spain, then in the zenith of her power, took precedence of all Europe upon the land and the water. Her expeditions traversed the new continents from shore to shore, possessing and fortifying, while her great war-ships convoyed her richly freighted galleons through every sea. Her sovereigns, in the plenitude of their pride, styled themselves dominators of three worlds. About that very time the heroic Henry of Navarre assumed the crown of France, and by a series of splendid victories was making good his title to the throne.

England was striving with incredible activity in all directions of human endeavor, and under the control of her greatest sovereign was fast assuming a leading place in Europe, under whose shadow the new religion was to find its surest foothold and resting-place. Her small but admirably built and skillfully handled ships, in traversing the seas and doubling the capes of the world under her great admirals, the Howards, Drakes, Hawkinses, the Gilberts, and the Grenvilles, had disciplined the fleets and the seamen, who by their own steady courage, aided by the tempests of God, were to crush the Armada and save their country from foreign conquest.

Nor was this turmoil all legal warfare. Piracy in the name of patriotism roamed the oceans, and coast-lying cities were stormed, sacked, and burned in the name of God by those who could find them sleeping or unprepared.

In better ways, too, were the activities of that age employed, and well for us it was so. In the midst of all these fierce strivings, this passionate intermingling of good and evil, there also came forth many pure and precious things, even as serene and perfect crystals are evolved from the vilest compounds by the alchemy of nature. Simultaneously with the opening of the slave-trade, which for three hundred years has cursed America, the spirit of English liberty in the House of Commons made its first decided stand against the despotic Tudors, and won. Bacon took time amid the general confusion to perfect the inductive system of philosophy, which was to become the new birth of science. Shakespeare was then upon the earth.

The Faerie Queene came forth from the brain of Spenser, and Ben Jonson, Beaumont and Fletcher with joy drew overflowing vessels from the wells of song. Sir Philip Sidney, the scholar, poet, and soldier, of whom it was said, "He walked 'mid incense and flowers from his cradle to his grave," was then delighting with his genius half the courts of Europe. Amid them all, and fellow with all, Sir Walter Raleigh, the enthusiastic soldier and politician, in the pauses of his career dreamed of the founding of peaceful homes and the building of busy cities in the shadowy forests and by the rivers of the yet unknown and undiscovered Virginia—truly the noblest dream of them all.

Uncorrupted by the bigotry and unstained by the vices of his time, his lofty and chivalrous soul was filled with generous conceptions of the true glory which might be attained by the establishment of new commonwealths. A soldier, admiral, accomplished scholar, historian, poet, statesman, and Christian gentleman, he was the English Bayard; and there is not a generous man or woman of our race who does not contemplate his character with admiration and his brave and melancholy death with sorrow.

This beneficent dream resulted in a scheme of discovery and colonization of that unexplored portion of our North American coast lying between Florida and Newfoundland. Obtaining letters patent from Queen Elizabeth on the 25th of March, 1584, and in the sixth year of her reign, authorizing him to search for, discover, and occupy any countries in America not already in the possession of any Christian prince or people, Raleigh fitted out an expedition at his own expense and dispatched it on its voyage in the following month. It consisted of two small barks of so light a tonnage as would now be thought unsafe for our coasting trade, the larger not exceeding one hundred and forty tons burden. As Queen Elizabeth refused to permit him to accompany his expedition, it sailed under the command of Captains Amadas and Barlow. A narrative of their voyage and proceedings, which is given by the historian Hakluyt, tells the simple story of the discovery of our country.

The 27 day of Aprill, in the yeere of our redemption 1584, we departed the West of England, with two barkes well furnished with men and victuals; having received our last and perfect directions by your letters, confirming the former instructions and commandments delivered by yourselfe at our leaving the river of Thames.

Having touched at the Canaries on the 10th of May, and made the islands of the West Indies on the 10th of June, where remaining some days to "refresh themselves with sweet water and fresh victuall," they continued their voyage toward our coast, as the narration runs:

The second of July, we found shole water, wher we smelt so sweet and so strong a smel, as if we had bene in the midst of some delicate garden abounding with all kinde of odoriferous flowers, by which we were assured that the land could not be farre distant; and keeping good watch and bearing but slacke saile, the fourth of the same moneth we arrived upon the coast, which we supposed to be a continent and firme lande, and we sayled along the same a hundred and twentie English miles before we could finde any entrance or river issuing into the sea. The first that appeared to us, we entred, though not without some difficultie, and cast anker about three harquebuz-shot within the haven's mouth, on the left hand of the same: after thankes given to God for our safe arrival thither, we manned our boats, and went to view the land next adioinyng, and "to take possession of the same, in the right of the Queenes most excellent majestie, as rightfull queene, and princess of the same, and after, delivered the same over to your use, according to her Maiesties grant and letters-patents, under her highnesse great seale. Which being performed according to the ceremonies used in such enterprises, we viewed the land about us, being, whereas we first landed, very sandie and low towards the waters side, but so full of grapes as the very beating and surge of the sea overflowed them, of which we found such plentie, as well there as in all places else, both on the sand and on the greene soil on the hils, as in the plaines, as well on every little shrubbe, as also climing towardes the tops of high cedars, that I think in all the world the like abundance is not to be found; and myselfe having scene those parts of Europe that most abound, find such difference as were incredible to be written.

We passed from the Seaside to the toppes of those hilles next adioyning, being but of meane higth, and from thence wee behelde the Sea on both sides to the North, and to the South, finding no ende any of both wayes. This lande lays stretching it selfe to the West, which after wee found to bee but an island of twentie miles long, and not above sixe miles broade. Under the banke or hill whereon we stoode, we behelde the valleyes replenished with goodly Cedar trees, and having discharged our harquebuz-shot, such a flocke of Cranes (the most part white) arose under us, with such a cry redoubled by many ecchoes as if an armie of men had showted all together.

This Island had many goodly woodes full of Deere, Conies, Hares and Fowle, even in the middest of Summer in incredible abundance. The woodes are not such as you finde in Bohemia, Muscovia, or Hercynia, barren and fruitles, but the highest and reddest Cedars of the world, farre bettering the Cedars of the Acores, of the Indies, or Lybanus, Pynes, Cypres, Sassaphras, the Lentisk, or the tree that beareth the Masticke, the tree that beareth the vine of blacke Sinamon, of which Master Winter brought from the streights of Magellan, and many other of excellent smell and qualitie. We remained beside this Island two whole dayes before we saw any people of the Country; the third day we espied one small boate rowing towardes us having in it three persons; this boate came to the Island, foure harquebuz-shot from our shippes, and there two of the people remaining, the third came along the shoreside toward us, and wee being then all within boord, he walked up and done upon the point of the land next unto us: then the Master and the Pilot of the Admirall, Simon Ferdinando, and the Captaine Philip Amadas, my selfe, and others rowed to the land, whose comming this fellow attended, never making any shewe of feare or doubt.

And after he had spoken of many things not understood by us, we brought him with his owne good liking, aboord the ships, and gave him a shirt, a hat and some other things, and made him taste of our wine, and our meat, which he liked very wel: and after having viewed both barkes, he departed, and went to his owne boat againe, which hee had left in a little cove or creek adioyning: as soone as hee was two bow shoot into the water, he fell to fishing, and in less than halfe an houre, he had laden his boate as deepe, as it could swim, with which he came againe to the point of the lande, and there he divided his fish into two parts, pointing one part to the ship and the other to the pinnesse: which, after he had (as much as he might) requited the former benefites received, departed out of our sight.

This was the beginning of our national history. These few sentences contain the genesis of the mightiest revelation of modern times. The goodly reports taken back by this expedition excited the imagination of all England. Much encouraged, Raleigh procured an act of Parliament confirming his title to the country which he had discovered and which he had named Virginia, and immediately fitted out another expedition to take permanent possession. This expedition consisted of three vessels, under the command of his illustrious kinsman, Sir Richard Grenville, and a hundred and eight persons, under the governorship of Ralph Lane.

How this colony on Roanoke after many struggles became disheartened and returned home with Sir Francis Drake's fleet; how the supply-ship which was sent by Raleigh to the help of Lane reached Roanoke just after the colony had left; how still another colony arrived under the convoy of Grenville and was left at Roanoke under the governorship of John White, in which company appeared for the first time women and children, and how was there born the first child of our race on this continent, Virginia Dare; how, after many hardships, White went back to England after help, and how after the ships were fitted out for that purpose they were impressed for service against the great Armada, and it was not until 1590 that White again returned to Roanoke to look for his colony, in which he had left his wife and daughter and his American-born granddaughter, and found no trace or vestige of any—all that is written in the story of Raleigh's ill-fated attempts to fulfill his noble dream of planting a commonwealth in the New World. He had spent a sum equal to a million of our money, almost beggaring himself in the effort, and saw it turn to dust and ashes before his eyes, the sad precursor of the clouds and darkness amid which his own sun was soon to set under the cowardly treachery and damnable injustice of a prince who was signally unworthy to rule an honorable people. And yet he had not failed. He had indeed builded wiser and better than he knew. The results of his labors justify the high opinion of his genius which mankind have universally accorded him, and he takes rank as one of the noblest and greatest men of a remarkably great age.

Virginia, the virgin land of his poetic fancy was settled, by other hands than his, it is true, but in pursuance of his designs, in consequence of his discoveries, in the track marked out by his genius, and by his own countrymen. Three great Commonwealths, instead of one, shore upon the waters which his ships explored; more than five millions of people, chiefly descended from the British Isles, dwell there in happiness and prosperity; for, so far as restless and imperfect human nature will permit, the promises of this goodly land to those newcomers have been fully realized to their more fortunate successors. The luxuriant flora, the fruitful vines, and the sweet-scented stately forests still bedeck the land, save where they have given place to fields and homesteads, and in all of them, on mountains and plains and streams and seas which he never saw, his name is honored and he is claimed as their founder. The "City of Raleigh" which he chartered for his capital, on surf-beaten Roanoke, is perpetuated as the beauteous capital of the State of North Carolina, and many towns and counties bear his name elsewhere among us.

And now, Mr. President, I am here to-day to ask this small appropriation, in order to do honor to this remarkable event and this most illustrious man. I refuse to consider it as something to be done for North Carolina alone—though I believe no similar request has ever before been made on her behalf—for there are three States most nearly interested therein, and the widening circle embraces the whole land. It so happens, however, that the locality to be commemorated is in North Carolina. In her name, always so modest in self-assertion, yet ever so faithful to duty, I ask of Senators the adoption of this resolution. An English historian has well said that no spot in Britain can be so sacred to Englishmen as that which first felt the tread of English feet. Have we not all a similar reverence for the spot which felt the primal footsteps of our American glory?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILSON in the chair). What action does the Senator desire to take with regard to the joint resolution?

Mr. VANCE. The resolution is before the Senate, and I ask a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear it read at length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. Has this resolution been referred to any committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been referred to a committee. It was read twice and laid on the table, and has been called up this morning.

Mr. INGALLS. I think that in pursuance of the rule in all such cases, without exception so far as I know, the resolution ought to be referred to the Joint Committee on the Library, so that we may have some report and some information on which to base our action. I have no doubt the object is entirely worthy and meritorious, but I am unwilling to establish the precedent of voting large sums of money for the commemoration either of men or of events without the report of a committee on the subject. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that he ask the reference of this joint resolution to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. VANCE. I suppose under the rule I shall be compelled to do so if there is any objection made to the immediate adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Library. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, being the shipping bill.

Mr. HAMPTON. Before that vote is taken I should like to call up Order of Business 296. It will be remembered that we had it under discussion, and just as we were about coming to a vote the morning hour expired and subsequent to that for several days special orders intervened. I shall be away to-morrow unavoidably, and I should be very glad to have a vote on the bill. I do not propose to discuss it, and I think nobody else will; I hope not at any rate. With the consent of the Senator from Maine I should be glad to have that taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine withdraw his motion?

Mr. FRYE. If it is only for a vote; but if there is to be any discussion, then I should not feel like doing it.

Mr. HAMPTON. If there is discussion, I shall not press it. I simply ask that it may keep its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine withdraw his motion?

Mr. CONGER. I was not able to hear what the proposition was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, being the shipping bill, pending which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] has appealed to the Senator from Maine to withdraw his motion in order that the bill for the relief of the trustees of Isaac R. Trimble be taken up for consideration. Does the Senator from Maine withdraw his motion?

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from South Carolina has stated that there will be no discussion whatever, only a vote.

Mr. CONGER. I can not quite see by what authority that statement is made.

Mr. HAMPTON. The Senator from Maine is mistaken in saying that I said there would be no discussion.

Mr. FRYE. It was my statement that I would yield if there was no discussion.

Mr. CONGER. If I remember right, that matter was under discussion and I was left with remarks unfinished.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine withdraw his motion?

Mr. FRYE. Under the circumstances I can not.

Mr. CONGER. I shall wish to be heard further on that bill.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask consent then that the Trimble bill retain its place on the Calendar until my return, without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine, pending which the Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Trimble bill retain its place on the Calendar under Rule VIII until the return of the Senator from South Carolina. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the shipping bill.

The motion was agreed to.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2228) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is, Shall the decision of the Chair overruling the point of order made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] stand as the judgment of the Senate, on the appeal of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]?

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, if I may be allowed, I wish to withdraw the appeal although the yeas and nays have been ordered upon it. I suppose it can be done by unanimous consent. But I desire to state the reason why I do withdraw the appeal. It is because the Senate has declared by agreeing to the Journal of Thursday last that the motion as presented was not for a conference on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses as I thought it was and as I thought the Senator from Maine made it; and that being the case, I do not care to prosecute the appeal any further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand whether the Senator from Kentucky made any suggestion.

Mr. BECK. I said I would withdraw the appeal, the record having been read and approved. I think on examination that there is no matter to be conferred about, as the record stands. I think the conference can not confer on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses when there is in fact no disagreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky asks leave to withdraw his appeal from the decision of the Chair. Before putting the question the Chair will state to the Senator from Kentucky in reference to the remarks made the other evening in relation to the precedent of 1879 that the Chair has the RECORD here which shows that the point did not pass sub silentio, but it was discussed, and the decision of the Chair that the motion for a conference was in order was acquiesced in. The Senator from Kentucky now asks leave to withdraw his appeal. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection and the appeal is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BAYARD. The question now is upon concurring in the motion of the honorable Senator from Maine that a committee of conference be appointed, by the Chair I suppose, in respect of the bill in relation to shipping, and the amendments which have been made thereto by the Senate. It seems to me that whether it be strictly in order to move for a conference the very instant that one House has amended a proposition of the other House, and before the amendment has been submitted for the purpose of concurrence or rejection to the other, will lead to this result, one that I think is to be deprecated, a practice of legislation through committees of conference rather than through the deliberations of the respective bodies.

Mr. President, these two Houses of Congress are well termed a deliberative assembly, and the weight of their action and the wisdom of their action depends upon the character of the deliberation which shall precede the adoption of measures. Therefore any system which shall substitute discussions in committees of conference, which are necessarily confidential and conversational between a very limited body of conferees, usually three representing each House—any system that shall substitute the consultations and the conversations of six men for the deliberations of the two Houses at large is not in my judgment a thing that is to be desired.

The Chair, in response to an inquiry from me as to whether there had been in the practice of this body a precedent for asking a committee of conference in advance of the submission of amendments which might give rise to various expressions of opinion between the two Houses, read a precedent which seems to me scarcely to meet the present case. The case read from the Chair was the case of an appropriation bill passed, as is customary, in the very last hours of a session, and with but a limited time prior to our final adjournment. Appropriation bills are not bills of general legislation; they are simply for providing amounts of money to execute existing laws; and the differences of opinion between the two Houses resolve themselves actually in such cases into a mere question of the assessment of amounts. Therefore when we had before us, as in the case read from the desk, an appropriation bill and a session approaching midnight of Saturday, it was obviously, in the absence of any objection or discussion, a very reasonable facilitation of the public business to have the committee of conference pass over with the bill itself, in order that at a time when the session was to be measured by hours there should be no delay whatever in considering differences of opinion merely as to amounts, not as to the principle of the subject-matter or as to any general law.

No such reason exists in the present case. There is ample time for discussion. The bill is important and affects important principles as well as important amounts. It is not worth while to describe what they are; the discussion is fresh in the mind of the Senate. Now, I would submit to the honorable Senator from Maine that this bill, with its amendments adopted by the Senate, had better go through the regular, orderly, deliberate forms of legislation as to the variant opinions of the two Houses.

The formal language used in the appointment of this committee would show the necessity of a disagreement of votes between the two Houses before the committee of conference was called into operation. There has been no disagreement between the two Houses. The House of Representatives submitted a proposition. The Senate have assented to nine-tenths of the proposition of the House, amending as to one particular by omitting a feature of the bill, and adding three or four more that never were before the House at all. What a mere perversion of terms, therefore, it is to speak of disagreeing votes where there has been no opportunity for the expression of disagreement?

I say, then, that desiring to see this legislation become effectual and not desiring to see the powers of legislation merged in a single committee, or transferred to committees of conference until the disagreement and the exact points of disagreement between the two Houses have been made known to each other, I hope the Senator from Maine will not ask for his committee of conference now.

I think the whole system of legislation through committees of conference is to be discouraged. It is the last resort. Non constat that the House of Representatives will not accept and approve, if the opportunity be given them, the amendments to the shipping bill adopted by the Senate, but certainly these amendments ought to be deliberated upon by the House, and not their bare dissent from them anticipated and presumed, and presumed without authority. I shall regret to see this form adopted, because it presupposes what may not exist at all, an ultimate difference of opinion between the two branches of Congress. According to the current of practice of this body, according to the reasoning given by the writers on parliamentary law, or the precedents rather, for the writers are not very numerous, but from the collection of precedents, mainly from the British system and from our own manuals on this subject, it is time enough to ask for a committee of conference when there has been a disagreement as to an amendment by the body proposing the committee. There has been no disagreement here; no expression of it yet; no means of ascertaining it. I am very clear that in advance of a submission of an amendment for the consideration of the associate branch of the legislature there ought not to be the intimation and the presumption that they are to differ from that which we have submitted as the opinion of the Senate. It will be time enough for this committee of conference when the House shall move, as they may move at once, to non-concur with the amendments of the Senate and to apply for a committee.

I am right in saying that if the exception proves the rule, the rule of the Senate has not been to ask for a committee of conference before the amendments of the Senate have been submitted for the judgment of their associate branch. The single precedent is the case of a bill of appropriations in the very last hours of a session, when our time was so limited for the transaction of business before the legal expiration of the term, and surely that is no answer in a case like this. The facts of the case and the reason of the case do not apply. There is no similarity.

In the present case I am sure that this bill ought to go back to the House with the Senate amendments and be submitted for their action, for their deliberation, and that we ought not to anticipate the action or the judgment of the House by throwing the thing, not before the House, but into a committee of conference. We have had some specimens of legislation in committees of conference that I think were dangerous and very much to be reprehended. I refer especially to the tariff bill of last spring, in which the most unauthorized and the most unwarranted assumptions of power were indulged in by the committee of conference, changing the law, changing that upon which both Houses of Congress had expressed their agreement, and in many ways assuming to do that which had never met the deliberate assent of either branch of Congress.

I am favorable to the passage of this bill, which passed the Senate with very little opposition; and I do not see here any reason for the extraordinary demand, for such it is, for a committee of conference in advance of the submission of the amendments of the Senate to the House of Representatives. I hope therefore that the motion, if not withdrawn, will not be consented to by the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I am certainly very desirous to have this bill passed; nor have I seen any indication in either House of any serious opposition to the bill, although there may be differences of opinion as to some of its details. I should be very glad to vote for this motion of the Senator from Maine to expedite the bill and give it an advantage in the other House; but according to my understanding of the laws of intercourse between the two Houses we can not give it that aid. If we did in that way give this bill an advantage, it would be setting a dangerous precedent which would come back hereafter to trouble us many times.

The Constitution gives to each House the power to make its own rules to govern its own proceedings. There are at this time, I believe, no joint rules between the two Houses, though they usually exist; but for some reason or other lately they are not in force, not having been agreed to between the two Houses at this Congress. So the intercourse between the two Houses rests simply upon the parliamentary law; and if any question should arise as to the intercourse between the two Houses we would naturally go to Jefferson's Manual as the highest authority to settle the question.

That being the case, I do not see how any advantage is derived to this bill by the passage of this motion and now asking a committee of conference. Naturally, if this bill were so sent to the House nothing would be considered in the House except action upon the request made for a committee of conference. That can not be so, however. If this bill goes back to the House with amendments which involve appropriations of money, especially in such large sums as are proposed by this bill, and properly proposed, it must necessarily go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in the House. The House can not, without a surrender of all its power and a transfer of its power to a committee of conference, take up the bill and agree to the conference until it has acted upon our amendments in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Can it be said or supposed by any one that if this bill is sent to the House with these amendments, involving such large sums of money, they will pass on the bill simply by agreeing to our request for a conference? They can not send amendments which have never been read in the House to a committee of conference. If such a practice as that should be established it would be dangerous to the last degree.

I assume, therefore, as a matter of course, that the House, having the power over this bill, the moment it receives our message will send amendments to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and what advantage, then, is given to this bill by having pending upon it a request from the Senate that up to that time is ignored? Would that request be considered in Committee of the Whole when the House were considering the amendments? I do not see how it could give any advantage whatever. The only advantage that could be given to this bill by the adoption of this motion would be on the assumption that the House would act upon our request for a committee of conference and send to a committee of conference amendments which have never been read or considered by the House. Such a practice as that once adopted and ingrafted into the parliamentary law or the practice of the two Houses would be dangerous, as I said a moment ago, to the last degree.

We have by our practice heretofore gradually extended the powers of committees of conference until now a proposition to send a bill to a committee of conference sometimes startles me when I remember what occurred in the committee of conference on the tariff bill last year. I feel that both Houses ought to make a stand on the attempt to transfer the entire legislative power of Congress to a committee of three members of each body, selected not according to any fixed rule, but selected probably according to the favor of the presiding officer or the chairman of the committee that framed the bill; so that in fact a committee selected by two men, one in each House, may frame and pass the most important legislation of Congress.

Sir, I do not want to extend that practice. I have seen it abused. I do not desire to see it extended. I do not believe it will be done in this case. This is a bill in which I have no doubt a committee of conference could be formed in both Houses which would fully represent the judgment of the two Houses. But, sir, if it is done without sending these amendments to the Committee of the Whole in the House it would prevent the House from considering the most important branches of this important bill. Therefore I can not see any advantage to be derived from it, unless the House out of deference to the Senate, in the absence of all joint rules between the two bodies, should give to the request of the Senate an undue weight and importance and attach it as a privileged motion in all the stages of progress to this bill through the committee and in the House.

I do not wish to interfere with the passage of this bill. I shall content myself with saying that I do not believe in this kind of legislation. I do not believe that this is a wise proposition and I shall therefore reluctantly vote against it. I believe myself that the Senator from Maine will not aid his bill by it. His bill will go through although many other bills may fail, this being a House bill and having been considered by the House, so that there is no great opposition to it there, and having been considered by the Senate and amended in good faith without any extraneous matter put upon it. In some way or other the House according to its own rules will act on our amendments, and then a committee of conference may in the ordinary course of legislation be appointed.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I suppose that the Senator from Ohio will give me the credit of being a friend to this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. FRYE. And also accord to me some reasonable familiarity with the rules of the House, having revised them all under the instruction of the committee myself and been a member of the Committee on Rules for some time.

Now, Mr. President, I desire first to reply to the Senator from Delaware, who says that one precedent has been found and that that applied to an appropriation bill in the very last days of the session, where it became necessary to resort to this unusual method. I call the Senator's attention to the Senate Journal for the second session of the Forty-second Congress, page 850, May 27, 1872, where a bill for the purpose of revising, consolidating, and amending the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department—not an appropriation bill—was under consideration. It was House bill No. 1. It came from the House to the Senate. It was amended in the Senate, and having been passed by the Senate—

On motion of Mr. Ramsey,
Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, and ask a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.
Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President; and
The Vice-President appointed Mr. Ramsey, Mr. Hamlin, and Mr. Casserly.
Ordered, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives thereof.

Not an appropriation bill, not at the close of the session, but a bill consolidating the Post-Office laws, and under consideration May 27, 1872.

I call the Senator's attention to another precedent, June 7, 1872, the Senate having under consideration an appropriation bill termed the sundry civil bill. The Senate passed the bill, after having made certain amendments, and—

On motion by Mr. Cole,
Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill, and ask a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.
Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President; and The Vice-President appointed Mr. Cole, Mr. EDMUNDS, and Mr. Stevenson.

Mr. BAYARD. How long before the adjournment was this motion?

Mr. FRYE. This last one? I do not know.

Mr. BECK. I believe only one day before.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know how long before, but the one that I read about the other bill was long before the adjournment. As to the other precedent cited by the Presiding Officer, on which discussion arose, the question of time was not an element in that discussion at all, and such Senators as ANTHONY, of Rhode Island, and Blaine, of Maine, certainly two as good parliamentarians as there are in this country, both argued in favor of the proposition and it was adopted. Senator Thurman raised the question, but did not argue against it. He simply raised the question that it did not seem to him to be the usual parliamentary course, or something of that kind.

Mr. BAYARD. That it was premature.

Mr. FRYE. That it was premature, or something of that kind. I stated the other day that I knew of a great number of precedents in another place.

Now, Mr. President, here is a very important bill, as important as any before this Congress. It is the result of over four years of hard work; it is the result of a special committee spending some six months; it is the result of at least three or four regular standing committees of the Senate and the House. It removes every burden existing by law that I know of from the merchant marine. These committees have searched the statutes during all this time to find why it was that our merchant marine was crippled, and they have found every one of the statutes this bill repeals to be crippling that service, and without justice and without cause. In my judgment there is no difference of opinion as to every section of the bill in either House, except the question of admitting foreign-built ships to American registry, and perhaps a question as to the nineteenth and twentieth sections, and as to them simply as to the one-dollar clause and the authorization of a contract to carry the mail.

Mr. President, I never have heard a Senator, I never have heard a member of the other House say that those two sections of the existing law which provide for the seizure of ships and the carrying of the mails on them perforce ought not to be repealed. No Senator said so here on the floor. The whole question has been on the rest of the provisions contained in those two sections. Now, in my judgment there is no division of sentiment between the two Houses on anything in this bill except those two sections. So far as I am concerned myself I am entirely willing, as the result of a conference or the result of the action of the other House, to repeal those two sections of the statute and do nothing more.

Again, there is a fair chance to discuss the question of whether or not our American registry ought to be open to the admission of foreign-built ships. I admit it. It is a fair field for argument, for honest difference of opinion, for discussion. I recognize the proposition of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] as a pre-eminently fair and just one, provided we determine that a foreign-built ship shall be admitted to American registry. The House by a large yea-and-nay vote, contained in the RECORD, have determined in favor of the admitting of these ships to American register. I would not stand out a single moment as the result of a conference, or the result of the action of the other House, against the proposition of the Senator from Alabama, and I do not believe that any friend of this bill would.

Therefore it is entirely possible by an agreement of these two Houses to remove every single burden to-day subsisting by law on our merchant marine. And yet if the bill is sent to the other House without a request for a conference, if there is one single member who is opposed to any provision of the bill it goes under an iron rule to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union with one hundred and thirty-six bills on top of it and cannot be reached in nine months' time. The bill is just as dead and I would just as lief the United States Senate to-day would indefinitely postpone it as to send it to the House of Representatives to take its place at the foot of that Calendar. A bill at the foot of the Calendar under the House rules can only be taken up by a two-thirds vote or by unanimous consent. Thus instead of a committee of conference, one man, one member objecting has the control absolutely of it unless two-thirds will vote on call to take it from its place and put it at the head of the Calendar. So send the bill, as the Senator from Ohio proposes who says he is friendly to it, to the House, and your bill is dead.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator whether he thinks it is right for the Senate of the United States to attempt by our action to change the rules of the House of Representatives? If there are troubles in regard to their rules, is not that a question which they themselves must determine and settle? And how, I ask him further, can this motion made here change the rules of the House? That is the point I want to get at.

Mr. FRYE. If it was in the power of the United States Senate to change the rules of the House of Representatives by a trick I would not resort to the parliamentary trick to do it. And here again I reply to the Senator from Delaware there is no power in the United States Senate to take this bill away from the Committee of the Whole House. There is no power in a request for a committee of conference, there is no power by any parliamentary trick, by any skill of the most experienced parliamentarian in the Senate, to take this bill away from the Committee of the Whole House. There is no power by which you can deprive them of the right to consider every section of the bill in that committee. There is no power by which you can prevent them from agreeing to as many amendments as they please, refusing to agree to as many as they please, and there is no attempt on my part to do that, and I should stultify myself in the attempt to do it, because it is an absurdity on its face.

There is an iron rule of the House of Representatives which says that any bill containing an appropriation directly or indirectly or any amendment made by the Senate to any House bill containing an appropriation directly or indirectly shall first be considered in a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and, sir, the United States Senate has not power enough to prevent that. So the Senator from Ohio has fears that are utterly groundless. This bill goes to the Speaker's table, and there goes with it a request for a conference. It is idle to suppose that the House will not agree to a committee of conference asked by the Senate. They will do that; it never has been refused within my memory, and it will not be refused now, and with that request of the Senate it is taken from the Speaker's table, on motion; it is read, and a point of order is made that it contains an appropriation. It goes to the Committee of the Whole at once under the rules of the House, and then the House proceeds to consider it, concurs or refuses to concur, and when the House in Committee of the Whole has completed its action, then the result, if there is any disagreement, goes to that committee of conference which has been agreed upon; but your committee of conference—and I deal frankly with the Senator from Kentucky and with other Senators—your committee of conference agreed to by the House, as the majority has a right to agree to it, carries the privilege into a Committee of the Whole House, and that privilege is that a majority may move and take up from the Calendar at the foot of one hundred and thirty-six other bills that House bill amended by the Senate and proceed to its consideration.

Mr. President, that is all there is in this; it is all there is in the proposition. You take an appropriation bill in the House, it goes to the Committee of the Whole under the rules. You take a bill raising revenue, it goes to the Committee of the Whole precisely as that goes to the Committee of the Whole, and either bill takes its place in its turn. But there is another rule of the House which extends a privilege to an appropriation bill and a privilege to a revenue bill. That privilege goes into the Committee of the Whole and accompanies those bills, and a majority can take up an appropriation bill or a revenue bill any day and any hour in a Committee of the Whole. This request for a conference complied with takes the place of that rule in the House, goes into the Committee of the Whole, goes there as a privilege, makes this a privilege, and will enable a majority to say that the bill shall not lie dead under one hundred and thirty-six other bills, and that it shall be taken up out of its order, discussed as amended, agreed to or disagreed to, and then when that Committee of the Whole have reported it back to the House if there are any disagreements it simply goes to this committee of conference you have agreed upon.

Now, what is the objection to that? What I have said answers the objections of the Senator from Ohio as to the legislation of a conference committee, it answers the objections of the Senator from Delaware on his propositions. Suppose the Senator from Ohio takes the ground that it will not have the effect I say it will, to make it privileged in Committee of the Whole, it has done no harm. He ought not to fight that proposition, as a friend of the bill, because there is no harm in it. Then, if a friend of the bill, why should he not consent to a proposition under which it is utterly impossible for the conference committee to legislate without first the House acting? Especially why should he not consent to it when I ask him as a friend of the bill, if there is no harm in it at all, if it does not even extend a privilege?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. BECK and Mr. FRYE called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). On this proposition I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]. If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. JONES, of Florida (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. I do not know how he would vote. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is compelled to be absent to-day for the first time in twenty-nine years' service in the Congress of the United States. He would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS].

Mr. SEWELL. I am paired on this question with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VAN WYCK. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE]. I understand that he would favor this proposition. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. KENNA. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. The Senator from Nevada would vote "yea" and my colleague would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. CONGER. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], with the understanding that I should vote on the shipping bill if I chose. I vote "yea."

Mr. FAIR. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. FARLEY. On this question I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MILLER, of California], who is necessarily absent to-day and requested me to pair with him.

Mr. GEORGE. On this bill and all questions I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE].

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. My colleague would vote "yea" and the Senator from Delaware would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—28.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How shall the conference committee be appointed? ["By the Chair."] If there be no objection it will be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. FRYE, Mr. MILLER, of New York, and Mr. VEST were appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. On motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] there was a print made of the House bill as amended by the Senate. That edition is nearly exhausted, and unfortunately it was not printed in any way to indicate the Senate amendments. I ask unanimous consent that the bill as it now has passed the Senate may be printed, the Senate amendments being in italics.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent for an order that the House shipping bill with the Senate amendments as proposed be reprinted for the use of the Senate. That order will be entered if there be no objection.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 3448) relating to police regulations in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 4652) for the relief of Saint Luke's Protestant Episcopal church, in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 2858) for the relief of John Connolly.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I move to proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6092) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended, to make lines 1083 and 1084 read:

For support and education of Indian children of both sexes at industrial schools in Alaska, $25,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to call the attention of the Senator having charge of the bill to the fact that the Alaska bill containing an appropriation of $25,000 for schools has passed the House, and I ask whether there should not be something which would prevent a duplication of this sum? Twenty-five thousand dollars seems to meet the judgment of the Senate in regard to the amount to be used for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. DAWES. When did the bill pass the other House?

Mr. PLUMB. This morning; I have just received notice of it. I think we should not duplicate that appropriation. In that measure there is the same special direction given about the expenditure of the money which was made the subject of consideration in the Senate, and I think that it ought to prevail, and not this proposition.

Mr. DAWES. When the Alaska bill was before the Senate I urged that the $25,000 appropriated in that bill should be at least $40,000. I was met by the statement that the $25,000 appropriated then would be supplemented probably by the same amount in this appropriation bill, making the amount to be appropriated under both bills $50,000. I think that the amount adopted by the Senate in the pending amendment is an amount which can be fairly and economically, and therefore wisely, expended in Alaska. I hope that the amendment as adopted yesterday will not be changed, notwithstanding that the Alaska bill has passed the other House.

Mr. CONGER. I can not hear the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. I am happy to be informed that the Alaska bill has passed the House of Representatives, which contains an appropriation of $25,000 for educational purposes in Alaska. The Senator from Kansas now appeals to the friends of this amendment to modify it in view of that fact. I was speaking to that proposition of the Senator. In my opinion it should not be modified on that account. It should rather be retained and the effort to do something for the education of those Indians should be made with earnestness and with effectiveness. If I supposed that a dollar of the appropriation would fail of accomplishing all that a dollar given that way could accomplish, I should feel very differently, but I do not think so; and therefore for one I should be very much opposed to any modification of the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That the sum of $25,000 shall be the total amount expended under all appropriations for the education of Indians in Alaska during the fiscal year 1885.

It is now proposed by indirection to take advantage of the fact that a bill has heretofore passed the Senate giving this amount, and to double the amount. In the first place, I believe it will be conceded by any thoughtful person that there can not be practically $50,000 spent there this year under the existing machinery, and yet I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts would respond to that, "Then it will not be spent." But that is not the way we appropriate money. We appropriate it expecting that it will be spent if we appropriate it in any way, whether the necessity exists for its expenditure or not. I do not mean to state that very broadly, but there will be ways found of getting it out of the Treasury and getting it into Alaska, which is so far away that there will be practically no supervision over the expenditure. To dump $50,000 out there this year, the first time the expenditure is begun for this purpose, is going to result in a misappropriation of money.

If that is the method to be adopted in regard to these matters, then as a matter of course so far as I am concerned I propose to contend at every step against every item in the bill. I do not regard it as at all fair to those who have so far made some concessions on this point as against a very decided judgment as to the wisdom of the money to be expended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas is not in order in this place until the pending amendment is disposed of. It is in a different part of the paragraph. It will be in order when the pending amendment of the committee is disposed of. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

Mr. CONGER. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas is not in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not yet in order, as it comes in at another place. When the pending question is disposed of, it will then be in order to move the amendment.

Mr. CONGER. There is nothing in the remarks of the Senator from Kansas to affect the merits of the pending proposition. The Senate bill providing a civil government for Alaska makes an appropriation of $25,000 by which the Commissioner of Education shall make needful and proper provision for the education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska without reference to race. The object of that bill was to enable schools to be established for all classes of children, miners' children, citizens' children, soldiers' children, if any were there, anybody living there, with no contribution, with no power to raise any money for school purposes even among the whites there. That is a distinct provision under a different department and for a different purpose. I hope the amendment as amended will be adopted.

Mr. DAWES. I do not wish to ask the Senate to appropriate an unreasonable sum. I want the Senator from Kansas to understand that I am not here because the House of Representatives may have acted upon another measure since we were here yesterday to ask to hold the Senate to $1 more than it is wise to expend. If the Senate does not believe that it is wise to undertake education in Alaska to the extent of $50,000 ($25,000 for general school purposes, the erection of schoolhouses, and the like, under the bill establishing a government for Alaska, and $25,000 under this bill), I do not want the Senate to vote it. It is my judgment that it can be wisely expended.

The Senator from Kansas seems to think that I am desirous of taking advantage in some way of those who are not willing to vote so much money for education. I could not do it if I was desirous of doing it. I do not want a dollar appropriated for educational purposes in this bill that does not carry with it the judgment of the Senate. This departure from old methods can be successful only as it is earnestly and sincerely sustained, and no spasmodic effort will be of the slightest service whatever. If I differ with the Senator from Kansas in my convictions as to how much may be done in this new policy in reference to these people, my convictions are as earnest and as sincere as I am willing to accord to him that his are, and I have presented them to the Senate. Others have presented theirs to the Senate. It should be the judgment of the majority of the Senate, with which he and I should both of us be satisfied.

I beg the Senator from Kansas to disabuse himself of any idea that I want to get out of those opposed to so large appropriations for educational purposes any advantage under the circumstances. I want the judgment of the Senate upon this question.

Mr. PLUMB. I give notice that if this amendment is carried I shall move to reconsider the vote by which the other items were put in. The appropriation, so far as it is contained in the bill, is the result of a compromise. I have compromised with the Senator from Massachusetts, who has been very zealous in this regard, upon matters that I consider vital, just as vital as he does; and I have surrendered my conviction to him on this bill in the belief that the sums total that came in here would be all that would be asked for. If we are to pursue the other method and after having received what is regarded as extravagant by myself and some others, gentlemen are now to take advantage of the fact that a bill has passed the other House giving $25,000 more, then I propose to consider this matter de novo, and I do not propose to be bound by anything that has been done.

This amount is simply something that has been found by the way during the debate. The whole amount that has been asked for has been $25,000. There has not been a suggestion, not a hint, that any more could be properly used or that more was desired, or anything of that kind. A bill has passed the other House making an appropriation of $25,000. It is only fair to let it stand at that and let that be the total appropriation. It is not correct, as stated by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER], that the money is to be spent by different agencies, because the Alaska bill as it passed the Senate provided that it should be spent under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and not under the direction of the Commissioner of Education; and that appropriation is therefore to go through the same channels and to be devoted to the same purposes as the appropriation in this bill.

I do not care about the amounts, but I have a conviction which is abiding and which is based upon experience, as I think, satisfactory to my mind, and which is not controlled by any sentimental consideration, that this money is being misspent largely. I do not speak of this for the purpose of reflecting upon any individual. As the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] said himself yesterday, taking the words out of my mouth, for I was about to utter them, this whole system began in the idea of holding Indian children as hostages. It was the foundation of the present Indian school system to get children away from their tribe into a school in order to keep them as bonds for the good behavior of their parents and other members of the tribe.

Mr. HOAR. My friend from Kansas I suppose did not understand me as saying that.

Mr. PLUMB. No, I did not understand you as putting it so broadly as that.

Mr. HOAR. I said, if the Senator will pardon me, that the expenditure would be well warranted as an economical expenditure in the saving of Indian wars by the mere fact of the possession of these hostages for the good conduct of the tribe; but I did not say that was the reason for it, or that it began in that way, or that that ever had been a motive of anybody who voted for the expenditure.

Mr. PLUMB. That was the beginning of the present system. It was "cheaper to feed than to fight" was the way it formulated itself, and it has been carried on in that way. Education for practical purposes has been subordinated to that idea. We have got beyond that. However useful that might have been in its time, it is no longer necessary to consider that as in the situation at all. We are now to consider this question with reference to the uses to be made of education by the Indians and the results to be acquired. As I said before, no results practically have yet been reached. I am aware that we have entered to some extent upon a new field. I am not criticising wholly the present administration of things, because I do not know that some better results will not come, but I do know that so long as Congress is tolerant with the vices of the present system and so long as it is content to empty money into the laps of the people who are now to spend it, without attaching conditions, or without making it understood that greater results are to be required than have heretofore been had, we shall go on in the present incompetent way without achieving anything as the result of the money that we have spent.

What I have said refers largely to the entire management of the Indian system. There are items of appropriation in this bill that have been repeated, without the variation of a comma even, for twenty years, and I do not know but there are items that have been there for thirty years. The system has become indurated. The system of administration in connection with it is vicious. Two years ago, when I first had to do with the framing of amendments to the Indian appropriation bill as it came from the House of Representatives, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and myself found, as we thought, some errors that had been perpetuated from time to time, not only in language but in substance, and we sought to amend them in order to unify the administration of the Department, changing words in order to make the bill more harmonious, striking out provisions for collecting Indians that had been collected years before. When the bill as it was amended in committee went to the Indian Office, there came down an angry protest, protesting against every single word of change. They were not willing even that the item for collecting Indians should be stricken out notwithstanding the Indians had been collected from the reservations for ten years, and no more could be collected.

In other words, in the direction where this system started the paraphernalia with which it was equipped is to be kept up, no matter whether the necessities exist or not. The administration of Indian affairs, as I said, has become indurated; it has become hide-bound to a very large extent. It is not in the power of any one man, the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs either, to relieve against it. We have at the head of the Indian Office now I think as good a man as could be there in many respects, a man for whom every one who knows him has the highest respect, a man of great ability, a man of perfect conscientiousness. We have a similar man as Secretary of the Interior. However these men come and these men go, but the institution itself of Indian administration goes on for ever and without change. The man who comes into an administration of that office, coming in by a tenure very slight, liable at any day to go out, certain not to stay longer than four years in any event, is not in a condition to make himself felt upon it; he can not do as he would. The men of whom I have spoken will be the quickest to acknowledge that that is the case. They deal with agencies that go on, that are independent of them to a very large extent, and which we to a certain extent have made more independent of them by providing substantially against their removal. The only way to get at this matter is by legislation. We have got to run a plowshare through the whole system; and among it all there is nothing that is worse and more calculated to do wrong to the Government and to do wrong to the Indian than the method in which education is carried on among them. It is not fitting them for self-support. As a result of all the millions of money we have spent, it does not yield to-day a handful of Indians who can support themselves in competition with white people.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] in his very eloquent address yesterday spoke of the Indian children at Carlisle, of the number of bed-quilts and the towels and table-cloths and all that sort of thing that they made; but he forgot to tell the Senate that notwithstanding all that it costs $175 a year for each one of those scholars. There is no credit whatever against that charge. All that they can do, however you may call it, results simply in saying that whatever they do costs five or six times as much as it does for anybody else to do it. It is like Mr. Greeley's cabbages that he boasted of as being worth twenty-five cents in market, but which he reluctantly confessed cost him two dollars and a half to raise. So with everything that these Indians do, it is more expensive. It is expensive supervision, expensive living, expensive schooling, and all of that carried on not with the expectation (or certainly not with an expectation that is justified by the results) of putting these people in a condition to take care of themselves. The more we do of this, the greater is the necessity for us to continue. If this is to go on in this way unchecked, every year enlarging the appropriations without increasing the responsibility or without changing the system, so far as I am concerned I propose to make all the opposition I can to it at every stage; and altogether I know the viciousness of it will appear more fully year by year.

If this amendment shall be adopted, making the sum $25,000, I propose to add the proviso I suggested, so as to let it be understood whether we are to do that which it has been confessed we can not wisely do, taking advantage of an accident merely in regard to the passage of another bill to double the amount that anybody heretofore has claimed as necessary. That is sentiment run mad. It is a violation, I think, of all proper rules that ought to be observed in regard to the appropriation of money by legislation.

Mr. DAWES. I am not going over the argument in behalf of this system. I have a little personal matter with the Senator from Kansas, and then the Senate may dispose of it. The Senator from Kansas says that all these provisions for education are the result of a compromise in the Committee on Appropriations, of which I was a part, and complains that I have not stood by the arrangement there entered into; and in consequence of what he says is a departure by me he proposes to turn upon the whole bill.

If the Senator from Kansas can point out one single thing in this bill in which I have not fairly and honestly and to the best of my ability represented the Committee on Appropriations, then I shall consent to his undoing all that has been done. I have stood by every provision in the bill precisely as it was reported from the committee with the exception of the provision with reference to Alaska. It was known in the committee that I did not agree to that amendment. It was stated distinctly in the committee that I was at liberty to take any course in reference to that amendment which my judgment should dictate. As to anything else in the bill, whatever my private judgment has been, I have stood by the report of the committee. I stated as well as I knew how the reasons why the committee had agreed to that provision in the bill, and then I stated what I supposed the committee expected I would state—that my own judgment did not agree with that of the committee in that respect. I made no motion to defeat the action of the committee in that measure. I contented myself with the statement on the record of my opinion. The motion was made by some one else. I voted for it in accordance with what I stated in the committee to be my own private judgment, which the committee said I was at liberty to assert in the Senate Chamber.

Now, after the Senate has adopted an amendment on the motion of another Senator, the Senator from Kansas asks me to co-operate with him in undoing what the Senate has done, and because I have omitted, in conformity with my own private judgment, to co-operate with him in undoing what the Senate, not what the committee or what anybody on my motion has done, the bill is to encounter the hostility of the Senator from Kansas, and the responsibility is to be laid at my door. The Senator from Kansas is not quite just to me in that respect.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will state that there has been any proposition, until he made it himself, to make the appropriation $50,000 anywhere, in committee or elsewhere, then I shall admit that I am mistaken. If not, then I must insist that I was correct in saying that he was going beyond the understanding.

Mr. DAWES. I have made no proposition to make the appropriation $50,000.

Mr. PLUMB. You resist a proposition to limit it.

Mr. DAWES. I have stated my own private judgment, which the committee told me I was at liberty to state, in conformity with the views and with the authority of the committee to do it.

The Senator ought not to arraign me before the Senate on the charge that I have not fairly represented the committee. If there is any other member of the committee who is of opinion that I have not fairly presented the bill before the Senate and as well as I could maintained its report, I am ready to withdraw from the further support and management of the bill; but I am not to take it from the Senator from Kansas unless there is some ground for it. I am open to criticism. I am ready to be criticised. I am ready to make acknowledgment whenever I depart from the proprieties of my place here, or whenever I can be made to see that I have so departed. But I am not to be arraigned by the Senator from Kansas upon any such statement as he has made to-day, because he is laboring under a mistake when he makes it.

As regards the pending amendment, it is the Senate's amendment; it is not the committee's amendment; it is not my amendment. If the Senate shall, in view of what has been done in the other branch, conclude to leave the appropriation at $15,000 or at $10,000, I shall be perfectly content.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, when I moved to make the appropriation $25,000 instead of $10,000, I knew nothing about discussions in committee, or agreements in committee, or anything of that kind; nor are they usually brought in here to influence our votes. I know what the courtesies of the Senate are in that matter, and I am very sorry to find any little feeling between the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Kansas. But of course we are acting entirely upon our own discretion here, upon our judgment of what is best. I had heard more or less——

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will excuse me, I do not understand that anybody has said that the Senator from Massachusetts has violated any understanding with the committee. I am simply relieving myself from any responsibility in regard to the bill, as I claim that I am. All I want to do is to justify myself. I am now justified, as I said, in going back and attacking every item in the bill in regard to the subject; that is all. I do not care to justify the Senator from Massachusetts or to attack him. He can take care of himself. I am simply saying that so far as I am now concerned I am freed from any obligation to stand by any of the items in regard to this matter in the bill.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator understand the arrangement of the committee to be that each one would stand by the bill provided the Senate stood by it?

Mr. PLUMB. No, sir.

Mr. DAWES. Then I am not to be blamed if the Senate does not stand by the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. I moved the amendment to make the appropriation $25,000 upon consideration, wholly independent of whatever the committee might have discussed and thought within its own circle. I had heard something about this matter. I was aware that nothing had ever been done by this Government for education in Alaska, and I thought $25,000 was a very moderate sum indeed for the beginning, as the beginning of the system is more costly than its annual maintenance. There are school-houses to be built; there are apparatus, and books, and various things to be conveyed to that Territory; teachers to be transported, &c.; all that which is necessary to start a school. Suppose $25,000 would start schools for 2,000 pupils this year; less than $25,000 of course would run them next year. I think myself that the whole $50,000 would be none too much. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that it was discussed here; the question was asked whether it was possible for us to make it $50,000, and for a time I thought we could, until I noticed that the recommendation of the President and Secretary of the Interior for $50,000 was the last year's recommendation; and they estimated this year for but $25,000, I suppose with the idea that they could get only that. I know the friends of education there believe that they can very wisely expend the $50,000. It is not a very large sum when you consider a people of 25,000, with a school population of not less than 4,000 or 5,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Thirty thousand is the population.

Mr. HAWLEY. Thirty thousand is the population, the Senator from Indiana informs me. That would give a school population of 5,000 or 6,000. That is not a large appropriation when you reflect that we have done absolutely nothing for them. We have the foundations to lay. Besides, this clause in the appropriation bill proposes to give this sum for industrial schools, and of the wisdom of that general policy I believe no one has a doubt.

Of course nobody wishes to take any such judgment, to take any special advantage of the very happy fact that the bill for the government of Alaska, to the great credit of this Congress and the country, is finally passed; but I shall be very glad to have this appropriation of $25,000 stand as it is. If it can not, in the judgment of the Senate, wisely stand at $25,000, then I hope certainly it may not all be wiped out. Industrial schools should be commenced there. For myself I shall vote against any change in the item, and certainly against defeating it entirely.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. INGALLS. I wish the Senator from Indiana would allow me for a moment to make an inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. This subject is not quite clear to me, and I wish either the Senator from Indiana or my colleague would be more explicit. I have an indistinct recollection generally that the bill for the government of Alaska so called contained some provision for educational purposes. Was that a definite annual appropriation, to be continued from year to year?

Mr. PLUMB. No; it was just an appropriation of $25,000.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will allow me I will read that section of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I shall be glad to be advised on that subject, for I did not suppose yesterday that it was intended by the vote on this amendment to double the appropriation already made.

Mr. HARRISON. It is section 13 of the bill providing a civil government for Alaska, and upon the reported passage of which I congratulate the country, as it has removed a very long standing reproach against our Government. The section reads as follows:

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make needful and proper provisions for the education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska, without reference to race, until such time as permanent provisions shall be made for the same; and the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for this purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. How is it to be expended?

Mr. HARRISON. "The Secretary of the Interior shall make provision." It is put under the control of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. HARRISON. It is Senate bill No. 153. I have read the section of the bill as it was reported to the Committee of the Whole of the other House. I will remind the Senate that this section 13 was moved by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] as a substitute for sections 13 and 14 as they were reported by the Committee on Territories of the Senate. Those two sections in the bill as it came from the committee, in the opinion of the Senator from Kansas, as he will recollect, seemed to provide for the inauguration of a school system. They provided for the detail of some teacher to act as a superintendent or supervisor of the schools of the Territory of Alaska. The criticism was made by the Senator from Kansas that it contemplated too much of a scheme, and it was upon his motion and from his hand that this section 13 in the bill as it stands now was substituted for sections 13 and 14 of the bill as it came from the committee.

I had occasion the other day to call attention to the debate that took place at that time. Several Senators (and that was the expression, so far as we had any) criticised the bill because the appropriation provided in it was too meager. The sum of $40,000 was suggested by several Senators, and the Committee on Territories was criticised for having misjudged the liberality of the Senate with reference to the duty of the Government to provide education in Alaska. My response at that time was that we had reported as much as we supposed the Senate would in that form adopt. It was then suggested, and no one met the suggestion by any counter suggestion, that there would be an additional appropriation in the Indian appropriation bill when that came to be reported.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not hear it.

Mr. HARRISON. That will appear by reference, I think, to the debates, and certainly Senators about me will recollect that that suggestion was made, whether in a form to go into the RECORD or not. So it was certainly in my contemplation, and operated upon me as a reason why I did not accept the suggestion and move a larger appropriation in that bill, that an additional appropriation would be made in the bill containing the appropriations for the Indian service.

As I said the other day with reference to the boarding-schools which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and other Senators have described as the only suitable and effective way of imparting education, involving as it does the separation of the children from the homes of their parents, it is here provided that the boarding-schools which are to be erected under another provision of the bill shall not exceed in cost $15,000. I do not contemplate that such a large limit as that would need to be reached in the construction of the boarding and industrial school-houses in the Territory of Alaska; but if in that vast Territory, with its enormous stretch of seacoast and island-coast, only five were built, and the cost were only $5,000 apiece, it would absorb the appropriation contained in the pending bill. In inaugurating a system of education in that vast Territory of 580,000 square miles, though of course the system will extend over a very small part of the great area, as it will be chiefly if not exclusively along the coast or along the river Yukon, is it too great a thing that the Government after all these years of neglect should contemplate the erection in Alaska of five such school-houses? I do not think so. I think it would be illiberal and parsimonious to contemplate less than that. If our contemplations or purposes are so limited, the appropriation which is proposed in this bill would be entirely consumed in that purpose, and we should have the appropriation of $25,000 contained in the Alaska bill to be expended in the maintenance of those schools.

While when the motion was made to amend the pending bill so as to increase the appropriation to $25,000 it was not certain, indeed it seemed to be improbable, that we should get the benefit of the appropriation contained in the Alaska bill proper, yet now that we are to have that there is no reason for reducing this appropriation. On the other hand, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has explained, the motion would have been subject to a point of order if it had contemplated more than $25,000 in the pending bill.

It seems to me, therefore, in view of the history of that Territory, the necessity of the appropriation, and the fact that it is a start, and that it involves expenditures which will not need to be duplicated the second year, instead of starting with a smaller appropriation there is a demand for a larger one the first year to supply that school outfit which being once supplied will not need to be repeated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. At the end of line 1084 I move to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the sum of $25,000 shall be the total amount expended under all appropriations for the education of Indians in Alaska during the fiscal year 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Although this is technically an amendment of the text, the Chair thinks, as it relates in substance to the amendment of the committee, it is in order to propose it now. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know exactly how to speak about the action of the other House without trespassing on the rules, but we have from the House an appropriation of $40,000 now. By sending an appropriation which contains $15,000 before it was touched by the committee, and by the concurrence in the passage of the bill for the government of Alaska, which contains a distinct $25,000, we have the will of the other legislative body in regard to the gross amount of these appropriations. I myself am of the opinion that $50,000 can be wisely expended, but I am willing, if compromise is the order of the day, to agree on the sum of $40,000 and have this $25,000 made $15,000, and then that $15,000 with the $25,000 in the bill for the government of Alaska makes a gross amount of $40,000.

Mr. CONGER. I would rather take $50,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. So would I. My personal preference is to let the $50,000 remain as it is, but I am certainly opposed to making the whole now $25,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think there is anything at all in what the Senator from Connecticut says about the action of the House. If the House had been considering the Alaska bill as an original proposition, no doubt they would have amended it in a great many particulars. They passed it now as a matter of urgency as it came from the Senate, irrespective of whether the House concurred in every provision or not. No debate has been had upon it of consequence. I venture to say there has not been a single word uttered about that provision, and the attention of the House has not been called to the fact directly that $15,000 for this purpose was contained in this bill. It simply has gone without any attention being called to it whatever, and it is not the deliberate judgment of the House that $40,000 should be appropriated for this purpose; on the contrary the item which the House did vote upon with intent was $15,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must remind Senators again that the Chair thinks it is not in order to comment upon proceedings of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PLUMB. I am commenting on what the Senator from Connecticut said about the proceedings of the House.

Mr. INGALLS. It seems to me this is a rather important matter; and under the ruling of the Chair is resulting in great embarrassment. I understand the rule to be, and this is upon the suggestion of the Chair, that it is not in order to refer to the particular votes or majorities by which any measure has passed the House, or to anything that was said in the House when a measure was pending, but I respectfully dissent from the opinion so frequently expressed by the Chair, that it is not in order to refer to anything that has been done in the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair wishes to be correctly understood in what he said. He has not laid down any rule so broad as that named by the Senator from Kansas. The Chair finds it in the parliamentary rules under which the Senate proceeds, that it is not in order for members of either House to refer to or comment upon the proceedings that have proceeded in the other House at the same session; but they may refer to what has transpired in former Congresses. In this particular instance the Senate has yet no official information that the measure which has been sent from the Senate has passed the House of Representatives. It is only the desire of the Chair to administer the rules in such way as to preserve the harmony that ought to exist between the two Houses, and hence to enable the business to be carried on in a satisfactory way. It is not at all pleasant for the Chair to remind Senators of these provisions in the rules between the two Houses.

Mr. HAWLEY. I confined myself very carefully in what I said to stating what the House had done, supposing that was quite a harmless subject of reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair in reply to that would suggest that another Senator may rise, if he has a right to do so, and comment on the observations of the Senator from Connecticut and proceed to answer his argument by being obliged to refer to the reasons why the House did or why it did not do so and so; and the debate was taking that turn when the Chair interrupted the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HAWLEY. I submit nevertheless that I might be right and the other Senator might be wrong if he went into the details of the proceedings of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That may be.

Mr. PLUMB. I suppose I can refer to this bill which the House has passed. I now refer to this bill. The House has passed this bill because it has come here from the House, an appropriation bill. The House did have under consideration a provision contained in line 1083, providing a fund for the support and education of Indian children in industrial schools in Alaska. They appropriated for that purpose, as far as they could, $15,000. That was done in face of the fact that the Secretary of the Interior had recommended $25,000. There was an issue, there was a controversy, and the House decided it in favor of $15,000 as against $25,000, and I take it that the decision in favor of $15,000 was not only against $25,000 but also against any larger sum.

So far as that matter is concerned, therefore, it seems to me that the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut that we should take the two sums, because by the method I have spoken of the House has passed two bills, one which becomes a law by the act of the House, and the other which it has sent here; that the action of the House in passing the appropriation bill is that which should govern in regard to what the House intended to do. I say if the action of the House is to have any effect at all, it is in favor of $15,000 and not of $50,000 nor of $40,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 1084 it is proposed to add:

Provided, That the sum of $25,000 shall be the total amount expended under all appropriations for the education of Indians in Alaska during the fiscal year 1885.

Mr. HOAR. What has become of the amendment which was pending before this was moved?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was agreed to. The amendment of the committee as amended increasing the sum to $25,000 and inserting the words "of both sexes" has been agreed to. The question now is on agreeing to the proviso moved by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. PLUMB called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. CAMDEN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. CONGER (when his name was called). Since I made the announcement on a previous vote that I was paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] I find that he is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL]. During the absence of both that relieves me, and I vote "nay."

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. FARLEY (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MILLER, of California] on political questions, but I am satisfied that if here he would vote the same way I do on this amendment; therefore I shall vote "yea."

Mr. JACKSON (when the name of Mr. HARRIS was called). My colleague [Mr. HARRIS], who is necessarily absent, is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER].

Mr. JONES, of Florida (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], but I am advised that if he were here he would vote "nay;" therefore I vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on questions generally. I do not know how he would vote if present. I withhold my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. I do not know how he would vote on this question.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 9, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—9.

Cockrell,	Ingalls,	Maxey,	Slater,
Coke,	Kenna,	Pugh,	Walker.
Farley,

NAYS—24.

Allison,	Dolph,	Jackson,	Mitchell,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Palmer,
Call,	Frye,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Conger,	Hawley,	Manderson,	Voorhees,

Camden,	Hampton,	Morrill,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Pa.,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Vest,
Colquitt,	Hill,	Pike,	Wilson.
Cullom,	Jonas,	Platt,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no quorum voting. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and 43 Senators answered to their names.

During the roll-call,

Mr. GEORGE said: Mr. President, I did not vote on the last roll-call because I was paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It appears from the roll-call that 43 Senators are present—more than a quorum. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. PLUMB. Let my amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. PLUMB.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE].

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. JONES, of Florida (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], but I am advised he would vote "nay," and therefore I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I do not know how he would vote on this question. It would give me great pleasure to vote "yea," but I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be withdrawn.

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—10.

Camden,	Kenna,	Pugh,	Walker.
Coke,	Maxey,	Slater,
Ingalls,	Plumb,	Van Wyck,

NAYS—30.

Allison,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Sawyer,

Cameron of Wis.,	Gorman,	Miller of N. Y.,	Wilson.
Conger,	Harrison,	Mitchell,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Palmer,

ABSENT—36.

Aldrich,	Farley,	Jonas,	Pendleton,
Anthony,	George,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,
Beck,	Gibson,	Lamar,	Platt,
Bowen,	Groome,	Lapham,	Ransom,
Brown,	Hale,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,

Cockrell,	Harris,	Miller of Cal.,	Saulsbury,
Colquitt,	Hill,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Fair,	Jackson,	Morrill,	Vance.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move to amend that item by adding:

That no portion of the money herein provided for shall be expended in the erection of school buildings.

We have another sum of $25,000, which is presumably to be used for something, and I think we had better not duplicate the expenditures all around.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add, after line 1084:

Provided, That no portion of the money herein appropriated shall be used in the erection of school buildings.

Mr. DAWES. Before that amendment is voted on, is it in order to move a reconsideration of a previous vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of reconsideration is a privileged motion, and the Chair thinks it would be in order.

Mr. DAWES. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted the amendment making the sum $25,000. I will state to the Senate what my purpose is. If the motion to reconsider prevails, I shall ask the Senate to concur with the House or to reject the amendment proposed by the committee and leave the item to stand at $15,000, as in the text of the bill. If the Senate should reconsider and reject the amendment and then concur with the House in the text of the bill, it would stand $15,000. I make that motion for the purpose of getting the best bill that I think is possible under all the circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted with an amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. Is it in order for the Senator to make that motion at this time with another question pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks so. The Chair thinks the motion to reconsider is a privileged motion which can be called up at any time when other matters are not pending in regard to ordinary measures. When a motion is made to reconsider a subsidiary motion on the passage of a pending measure, like an amendment, the Chair is of opinion that that is privileged over all other motions connected with the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. The Chair will pardon me, however, for suggesting that the question is not whether the motion can be called up at any time, but whether it can be made at any time. There was another motion pending, and the rules very clearly define what motions may be made when another motion is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that a motion to reconsider a vote affecting a pending bill takes precedence, from the necessity of the case, of other motions connected with the same bill, whether a motion to make a later amendment or a motion to pass the bill to a third reading or to be engrossed.

Mr. DAWES. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas is dependent upon this amendment as adopted, and therefore it is not necessary to determine the question on his amendment before we can determine that. I have stated the purpose for which I move the reconsideration so that the Senate may vote understandingly. If it is reconsidered, I shall then propose to concur with the text of the House bill.

Mr. PLUMB. If this is correct practice, then the Senator can go on and move to reconsider everything which has been done in this bill pending a motion to amend the bill. I do not pretend to know very much about the rules, but it seems to me that the extent to which the Senator could go would be to enter his motion in order to save the question of time, but that he has no right to have that motion voted on while another proposition is pending before the Senate and in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. CONGER. The very object of this appropriation is to build school-buildings for industrial schools for Indian children, boys and girls to be educated together. I do not know, but the climate in that region is said to be a paradise and may permit schools to be held without any arrangement for buildings or school-houses; and those who are of the opinion that it will promote the education of children in Alaska to gather them around the points along the shore and educate them without any school-houses may well vote for this proposition. Of course the result of it is to kill the measure, to prevent the building of any school-houses or having any industrial schools for the Indian children in Alaska. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. PLUMB. We have an appropriation already made of $25,000. I want, if I can, to prevent the duplication of work under these two appropriations. It is manifest that the Senate is determined to vote two separate appropriations for one purpose; at all events it seems to be the purpose of the Senator from Michigan; how far it may be the purpose of the Senate remains to be disclosed. I want a limitation on one or the other, and this is the only one we have the control of now. Here we have $25,000, all of which can be used for the erection of school-buildings. I do not want two separate systems of education, two separate expenditures for school-buildings, and two separate expenditures for teachers going on. I want, as far as I can, to put this appropriation in a shape in which the money shall not necessarily be wasted.

Mr. CONGER. It has been stated—the Senator ought to have heard it, but whether he did or not—that that is in the bill for the government of the Territory of Alaska; that there $25,000 is provided to be expended for the support of schools generally. That is to be a school system for all children who attend that class of schools. That is all there is in that bill—that the Secretary of the Interior may use so much of that $25,000 as may be properly used for the education of school children. This $25,000 in this bill is for industrial schools for Indians. I can not quite understand why the committee—and the Senator is a member of it—in the very next line should have reported to the Senate an amendment increasing a House appropriation which was $25,000 for the industrial school near Arkansas City to $26,500:

And said sum shall be disbursed upon the basis of an allowance of $175 for the support and education of each scholar.

And a further appropriation:

For building for employés at said school, $5,000; pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500; in all, $33,000.

For one industrial school among one band of Indians at Arkansas City, or for the Indians that might be gathered there from several bands, perhaps I should say. The Senator who has made this motion agrees to that report from his committee. His committee have reported an increase from $25,000 to $26,500 for one industrial school. They have provided that $175 for each scholar may be expended; they have provided for buildings for employés, laborers, and teachers, $5,000, and for a superintendent, $1,500. They repeal the old law, and make the appropriation large enough and substantial enough. What is the meaning of all that? Is that one single industrial school at Arkansas City of so much more importance than such schools as can be established on a smaller scale at different points in Alaska that a greater appropriation should be made for this one among several industrial schools within our limits than for the education of all the Indian children in industrial schools in Alaska?

But I think the Senate has expressed its desire to have these industrial schools in Alaska and to have $25,000 appropriated for the five or ten or twelve schools that may be established there, or that may be aided there.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Michigan is mistaken in supposing that the education provided for at the school at Arkansas City is the same intended to be provided for in lines 1083 and 1084. The school at Arkansas City, in common with a number of others, is a boarding-school.

Mr. CONGER. Is it in Kansas?

Mr. PLUMB. It is not.

Mr. CONGER. How near the line?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know exactly. I shall be glad to ascertain for the Senator if it becomes important for his well being.

Mr. CONGER. I understand it is within ten miles of the line.

Mr. PLUMB. I think it probably is within ten miles of the line, it may be within six; but if the Senator means to impute to me some improper motive in regard to that he is welcome to that style of argument.

Mr. CONGER. I do not suppose the Senator is responsible for Arkansas City being within ten miles of Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. I was not responsible for the imputation contained in the question of the Senator. He is responsible for that.

Mr. CONGER. I will not use the phrase that I am responsible here and elsewhere. That is hackneyed.

Mr. PLUMB. No, it would not be true if the Senator stated it. This school at Arkansas City, as it is called, although it is not there, is a boarding-school. I think myself it is an extravagant price that is named in the bill for the care of children in that school, and on my motion the price per scholar was changed in committee from $200 to $175. I have consistently said always in committee and out of committee that the amount of money appropriated for this purpose was extravagant. I think $175 is too much at Arkansas City or anywhere else. I believe that all that is appropriated over $125 is too much. The complaint I make about the entire system is that it is too extravagant. But that, as I said, is a boarding-school. The only schools that we are providing for in Alaska need not be boarding-schools. I do not think that it is in contemplation that they shall be boarding-schools. It is intended to have schools that children can attend who are living with their parents, and consequently the necessity for buildings is not the same, and the necessity for a large appropriation is not the same. All that I want is that we shall not be carrying on two systems, erecting buildings under two appropriations, appropriating for teachers and all that sort of thing, but that we shall limit one of them in such a way at least as that the money shall be reasonably under control, and shall not be in this expenditure crossing the purpose somewhat of another expenditure made under another bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas appears to be of the opinion that the $25,000 appropriated by the Alaska bill, so called, can be used for the purpose of erecting school-houses. The Senator from Indiana or the Senator from Michigan is of opinion that no part of that sum can be appropriated for the purpose of erecting school-houses. What is the fact in regard to that?

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me, I certainly made no such statement. I do not understand that any limitation as to the use of the money for the building of school-houses is attached to either the appropriation in the Alaska bill or this one.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Alaska bill, I think, is for the support of schools.
